vote against such a policy; and I shall therefore ask for the yeas and nays upon the bill.

Mr. EVANS. It is well, before acting on these matters, that we should understand them. Now, I should be glad to know what amount is likely to be derived exclusively from this source? It is proposed to give the contract for five years at the rate of $500,000 a year; that is, $2,500,000 for the five years. I do not suppose that it is possible that $50,000 per annum will be returned from the postages; or even say $100,000. I do not believe that one half that sum will be returned. Then the balance, $450,000, is to be paid out of the public Treasury, upon a mere scheme, a mere adventure. I had occasion a year ago to look into the Post Office arrangements, and I found, as the result, that we already pay for transportation by steamboats, by mail steamers, an average cost of twenty cents a mile, and these ocean steamers cost $2 50 a mile. Now, sir, instead of reducing the expense, this enormous expense, which draws already $2,000,000 from the Treasury, you are going to add to it; and here our own people at an expense of fifteen or twenty cents a mile cannot get post office accommodation, when you are giving $2 50 a mile in order to transport empty mails across the Pacific.

Mr. GWIN. In the first instance, I will inform the Senator that this service is not to exceed $500,000 a year. It is open to competition, and it is to be given to the lowest bidder. In the second place, the Senator is greatly mistaken in regard to the amount of postage. The amount coming from the Sandwich Islands alone, will be equal to that sum. We have five hundred whale ships, and thousands of American citizens whose correspondence is now all subject to chance. There is no village in the United States, with three hundred people, but has a post office; and you have on the ocean tens of thousands of American citizens carrying on the commerce of the country and increasing its wealth, without having mail facilities. I undertake to say, that the postages on the route will be vastly above the amount stated by the Senator. The intercourse between Asia, China, and British India, and the rest of the world, will pass over this line. We shall soon have a telegraphic communication with San Francisco; and in that way the whole communication from the continent of Asia, on the Pacific coast, will pass over this line to Europe and other sections of the world. I have very little doubt in my own mind, that in a very short time the postages will pay the expense of the route.

Mr. EVANS. I desire merely to say that, upon reference to the Post Office returns, it will be found that all the postage derived from California does not amount to $100,000.

Mr. GWIN. Why, sir, I have a distinct recollection that it amounted to $400,000 four years ago.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I will vote against this proposition. Indeed, I have never reconciled it to my notions of right to establish these ocean steamers at all, as mere mail steamers. Wherever there is commerce, there will be communication; and I am willing to authorize the Postmaster General to make his contracts, and establish his routes; let him employ mail service there as he does elsewhere. But as to paying these extraordinary sums to have the mail carried between particular points, I am getting tired of it. We are now paying, I believe, about $2,250,000 a year for ocean steamers out of the port of New York alone. For steamers from the port of New Orleans, the great commercial emporium of the South, we are paying but $75,000 a year, and it is positively true to-day, that between the great commercial cities of the West—Pittsburg, Louisville, St. Louis, and Cincinnati—and the great commercial city of the South, New Orleans, you have no mail connection at all, but the mail is trusted to the mere hazards of the hour. Though your Postmaster General has authority to make a contract for that service, he never has done it; and the southern and western members have been wholly unable to urge him into making it.

When such facilities are denied the people whom I represent here, I will not vote to appropriate these extraordinary sums to carry foreign mails. Why, sir, it is but a day or two since I applied to the Post Office Department for the establishment of a little post office in Mississippi, and I was told that they would establish the post office, but that they thought it exceedingly uncertain whether they could supply it with a mail!

Now, sir, I ask southern gentlemen, and western gentlemen, whether these heavy sums are to be drawn from the national Treasury to establish mails between foreign points and commercial cities on the Atlantic and Pacific sea-board, when we can get none of the ordinary facilities within our own limits? There are no less than fifty post offices on the Mississippi river, between the city of Louisville and the city of New Orleans, which are almost entirely destitute of mail facilities to-day, and we can get no appropriation made to have the mail carried upon that great river. Gentlemen who are familiar with the topography of that country, know that it is utterly impossible to approach it from the interior. Deep swamps, everglades, barriers which cannot be overcome by land travel, cut off all mail facilities from the interior; and such is the nigardly conduct of the Department, that we cannot urge them into the establishment of a mail on that great river for the accommodation of the people who live there. And what is their commerce? What is the value of the productions of their labor? It amounts to hundreds and hundreds of thousands, and even millions of dollars.

Sir, whenever justice is done to the section of country whence I come I may look with a little more liberal eye on these schemes for carrying the mail to Shanghai and Hong Kong, and all over creation. But I love the people near to my door better than I do the people in China, or Japan, or anywhere else. I would rather hear from them; I would rather they should hear from me; and I wish to give them the mail facilities necessary to keep up that neighborhood which should exist all over our Union. I know very little of this particular project, but I know that a great many of these schemes are but handmaids at last, to encourage commerce between particular points. I know very well that several lines which run out of New York—and especially one that has been urged on us from year to year—had nothing to do particularly with carrying the mail, but were intended for other purposes. I say nothing about this particular scheme. It may be all right; very likely it is; but I cannot vote for propositions of this kind while common justice is denied to the section from which I come.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. President, in answer to the argument of the honorable Senator from Mississippi, I will say that if this bill passes it will not diminish a single iota of the mail facilities of the southern section of the Union.

Mr. BROWN. I will say to my friend from Texas that I understand that perfectly well; but suppose I came here with a proposition to appropriate $500,000 out of the National Treasury to carry the mail from Pittsburg to New Orleans, would it get any support?

Mr. RUSK. If the Senator should convince me that it was a matter of as much importance to the country generally as this, he would get my vote for it. We do appropriate a large amount every year for mail services on the southern and western waters; I admit the mail facilities there are not sufficient, and I am in favor of taking money out of the Treasury to increase them. I am willing to take money from the Treasury to support the great line to which he has referred, until it shall be able to pay its own expenses, which would be but a short time. I must say, however, that this bill will not make any difference in the mail facilities of the southern or northern section of the country; if we pass the bill it will not diminish them, and if we reject the bill it will not increase them. That objection, therefore, falls to the ground.

Well, sir, we have a State on the Pacific ocean, and while I ask justice for the State that I represent, I am disposed to do justice to our far off sister on the Pacific. It is true that, from her situation and remote condition, California has demanded large appropriations from the Treasury in her beginning, but, at the same time, the industry of her citizens, and the productions of her soil, have made large returns to the Treasury of the United States, and have added vastly to the prosperity of the United States in general. By her acquisition we opened to our commerce the whole Pacific ocean. We have now obtained the right of trade with the ports of Japan. We have also a commercial treaty with China. Is it then a matter of no importance with us, in a national point of view, to secure this trade, or to do what is proper and right to acquire a trade which has been sought after by all the commercial world, and has contributed largely to the wealth and strength of every nation that has enjoyed it?

Why, sir, there is no State in the Union that has less mail facilities than California, though I believe it costs much to furnish them. She has only twenty-six mails a year—one every two weeks.

Mr. GWIN. From all the world.

Mr. RUSK. This, sir, is treated as a kind of gratuity to California, as an experiment, and it is said that no returns, in the way of postage, will come from it. Now, sir, we have a number of hardy seamen in the Pacific ocean; we have whalers and merchantmen there. If there is any one class to whom we are indebted, perhaps above any other, for national prosperity and the means of defending ourselves upon the high seas, the only point of danger, it is to the hardy fishermen, the hardy seamen of the country. I speak this disinterestedly, for I come from the far South, where we have none of them. Sir, I would vote liberally to promote any scheme that should encourage their operations, and increase their number, for we draw a large portion of our prosperity from their hardy enterprise and industry. The more you increase ships and seamen, the more you reduce freight, and thus confer a great benefit on the cotton growing States. Particularly am I inclined to do this when we have a full and overflowing Treasury, when the ports of the whole East are open to us, and when efforts are being made to connect the Atlantic with the Pacific by bonds of iron. I know that the idea of having a railroad to the Pacific is regarded by many as visionary, but I predict here, in my place, that twelve years will not pass over until we shall have a railroad from here to the Pacific. Is it not, then, an object worthy of consideration for us to avail ourselves of this vast ocean, and the commerce of these countries which has enriched every nation which obtained it? Is it a matter of no importance to us to obtain the command of that commerce? Is it an enormous sum to expend $2,500,000 in five years for an object of such national importance? Open this commerce and its benefits will be felt by every State in the Union, especially the cotton growing States of the South. The statement of the honorable Senator from California, who has a better means of knowledge on the subject than I have, is, that $50,000 of postages will be received from the Sandwich Islands alone. I have no doubt of it, and I believe, too, that the Chinese will contribute a large amount in postages. There are many Chinese in California.

Mr. GWIN. Forty thousand of them.

Mr. RUSK. And do they not write?

Mr. GWIN. They are nearly always writing letters. They are the greatest letter-writers in the country.

Mr. RUSK. Well, sir, I am told they make very excellent citizens, and they are constantly coming into California now with the present means of communication which they have. If these steamships are established, a great many more of them will come, and of course the correspondence will increase in the same ratio. I have not made calculations, but it is reasonable to suppose that a considerable revenue will accrue from that source.

It is not on that ground merely that I maintain the bill. It is because it provides for the extension of our commerce in an important quarter of the world. It encourages that commerce, it will have a beneficial effect on it, and, in my judgment, a beneficial effect on the national interests of the country; and I doubt not the duties collected on the goods imported by the line, if established, will not only defray the expenses, but be a source of large profits to the Treasury. We have incurred great expense to open this commerce. Will you take no steps to encourage and promote it? If we do not secure it, some other nation will. For my part, sir, I regard it as an object of great national importance. The more commerce we have in the Pacific, the more certainly and speedily shall we have a railroad to that ocean, a thing so necessary in a national point of view.

Mr. BRODHEAD. It is quite evident, I think, that we cannot dispose of this bill to-day. We have important business to transact in Executive session.

Mr. GWIN. I think we can vote in a minute.

Mr. CASS. We all understand the question. Mr. BRODHEAD. If we can take the vote I have no objection.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to say a few words in reply to the Senator from Texas. He draws a picture of the progress which we have derived as a nation from California. I certainly have not undertaken to depreciate, here or anywhere else, from that progress, but the nation is indebted also for its prosperity to other sections of the country. Louisiana and Mississippi yield something to the national revenue. I think they yield very largely to the national prosperity.

Mr. RUSK. Certainly, nobody denies it.

Mr. BROWN. And yet I stated the fact in the few remarks which I submitted, and which the Senator overlooked entirely, that notwithstanding we have been appealing from year to year in favor of New Orleans as the great outlet of southern trade, we have only been enabled to get one little line established there at a cost of $75,000. I think that that section of the country, whilst I do not mean to depreciate the claims which your State, sir, has upon the Union, (Mr. WELLER being in the chair,) may fairly set up some claim, not only on account of its age, but on account of its products. You give to that country no interior facilities; you give to it no ocean facilities. Notwithstanding the fact, which is perfectly well known to every man who has at all investigated the subject, that the news from the country to which you now propose to send a mail could be brought to New Orleans and disseminated through the country more rapidly than it can be carried to New York and there disseminated, yet you pay $1,000,000 a year, and, I believe, something more, to carry it to New York, instead of having it brought into the port of New Orleans.

Mr. RUSK. The same contract goes to New Orleans.

Mr. BROWN. I understand it is not the same contract. There is a line of steamers going from New Orleans to Vera Cruz. Whether there is any other line of steamers going there except the coast-wise line, I do not know. But that is not the point that I propose to make. I expected the Senator to answer the proposition that I laid down, that while we were paying, I care not whether it be from the Post Office or from the National Treasury, millions on millions of dollars to carry the mail to foreign countries, we are denying mail facilities to our own people. What matters it to us whether it comes out of the Post Office fund or out of the national fund. When there is a deficit in the Post Office fund, you make it up out of the National Treasury; so that that argument falls to the ground. It amounts, it strikes me, to scarcely anything except this, that when you make an appropriation from the National Treasury for a specific object, it is infinitely more objectionable than when you make it to the general fund of the Post Office Department. When there is a deficiency in the Post Office Department, you supply it by a general appropriation of two, two and a half, or three millions of dollars, and when you come to divide the money, the great West and Southwest are told it has all been divided somewhere else, and there is nothing left for them.

Why, sir, I have been told a hundred times, and, I dare say, my friend from Texas has been told quite as often, if not by the head of the Post Office Department, at least by his subordinates, how much our respective States pay into the Post Office Department; how much revenue is derived from postages within the limits of our respective States; and, like keeping a merchant's books, if we had overdrawn the amount a little they were disposed to shut down on us; and right in the face of this we are asked to vote millions of dollars, first for one scheme and then for another.

I do not feel that my friend from Texas has at all answered the position which I took, that we ought to open up the communication among ourselves, and keep up that sort of good neighborhood between the East and the West, the North and the South, which the Post Office Department was established to keep up, before we burden it down with these heavy appropriations; for, after all, though you may take this money, in point of fact, out of the National Treasury, yet, in the general summing up, it is charged to the Post Office account.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The remarks made by my friend from Mississippi make it necessary for me to state the reasons why I shall not vote with him on this proposition. That Senator and myself have a common interest in the great mail facilities to which he has alluded—I mean the facilities upon the Mississippi river and its tributaries. If I understand his position, his objection to the proposition now before the Senate is not so much upon the score of want of merit in the proposition itself, as upon the injustice done to the section of the country which he and I and others represent. My friend is right in many of his conclusions in regard to this question; but he is not exactly right, I think, in all of them.

The proposition before the Senate is to authorize the Postmaster General to contract for carrying the mail between San Francisco and Shanghai, at a sum not exceeding $500,000 per annum. My friend says that he is not prepared to go for this until some justice is done to his constituents and to mine. Now, he will allow me to say that that justice has exactly been done, not by the Post Office Department, but by the Senate; and the Senate is called upon now to direct or authorize the Postmaster General to do this thing. Two years ago the Senate directed the Postmaster General to do the very thing which he has not done—the very thing of which my friend complains; and the honorable Senator from Texas, and almost every Senator upon this floor, voted with us. The Senators from Arkansas, Tennessee, and Mississippi were particularly interested in the establishment of mail facilities between Louisville and New Orleans, and St. Louis and New Orleans, and Memphis and New Orleans; and we passed a bill for the purpose over the direct and positive rejection of the then Postmaster General under Mr. Fillmore. After he refused to do it, the Senate passed a bill directing him to establish a daily mail communication between those points—a very similar thing to that which we are now asked to do. Why that has not been done is another question.

The Senate has done its duty. We have directed the Postmaster General to perform this service; he has failed to do it; but that is no reason why we should not instruct him now to establish a line between San Francisco and Shanghai. If we have failed to get what the law entitles us to receive, that Department is responsible to us and the country; and I am in favor of holding it to its responsibility; but I am not willing, because it has done injustice to me and my constituents, to do injustice to any other portion of the country.

Mr. BROWN. I will show my friend the distinction in the two cases. In the case of establishing the mail on the western waters you made no appropriation out of the National Treasury to pay the expense; you charged it upon the revenues of the Post Office Department, and it was made an excuse for not establishing it that they had not money to pay for it. Now, if you make this a charge upon the Post Office revenues also, you deprive the Department of the argument which they used in our case, or else force them to show that they act in reference to this transaction in a manner different from that in which they acted in reference to the other. But you make a very wide difference when you throw the Department on its resources to carry one mail, and appropriate out of the national Treasury to carry another mail.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. My friend is mistaken again. The law directing the establishment of the mail service between Louisville, St. Louis, and New Orleans, was not only passed, but the contract was actually made for a sum exceeding $400,000 with Glover & Co.; and the difficulty was that when Glover & Co. came to execute the contract, the Postmaster General required that they should carry no freight at all upon their boats; that there should not be a barrel of flour upon them. Upon that mere pretext he repudiated the contract; and in that way we lost our mail service. The authority was specific, perfect, complete, and direct to the Postmaster General; and the contract was made by the Postmaster General under the administration of Mr. Fillmore; but the present Postmaster General came in and repudiated that contract.

Mr. BROWN. My friend seems not to understand my point. The payment for that service was to be made out of the revenues of the Post Office Department—the accruing revenues—but not out of an appropriation in the National Treasury. I understand the Postmaster General to have taken the ground that he could not let out a contract there. I do not think the ground well taken; but he seems to think that there is something in it which will prevent him from letting out a contract because he could not get the money from the revenues of the Department to pay for it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think my friend is wholly mistaken about this question. It has been a source of very great interest to me. I have watched it with great care, because I am more directly interested in it, perhaps, than any other Senator, living, as I do, at Memphis, the point of distribution for all these places. The difficulty is not as to whether the money should come out of the fund of the Department or the general Treasury. That was not the question; because the contract was made, and the money was to be paid out of the Post Office Department, if they had it, or, if not, of course it came out of the National Treasury. But I will say to my friend from Mississippi, that his objection does not apply; because, if he will examine the proposals now being published every day in the newspapers, he will find that the present Postmaster General has advertised over again for these very contracts. Then that objection does not apply. The simple question is this: for some cause or other, we know not what, the Postmaster General chose to deny to Glover & Co. the execution of the contract, and is now offering proposals for the execution of a law passed by the Congress of the United States. If we get it, it is all right; if we do not, it is our misfortune.

The point, then, which I make, is, that we ought not to deny to any other portion of the country the benefits and the privileges which we have enjoyed, at least, at the hands of Congress. If the Postmaster General does not choose to establish this line, he certainly has the right to refuse, according to precedent; for he has refused to establish ours. I shall vote for the bill, because I regard it as a matter of great national importance to encourage commerce between these great and important points. As for the revenues that may result from it, I shall not inquire into them.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, this bill was only reported on the 22d day of the present month. Many bills quite equal in importance were reported long ago, but have not yet been brought before the Senate. As this is one on which I have not positively made up my mind, and as I should like to consider it a little further, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. GWIN. I hope not.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I regret very much to delay the action of the Senate on the bill; but, after what has been said by other Senators, I cannot refrain from making a few observations. I have voted, hitherto, against the establishment of all these lines on the Atlantic ocean, or rather, I should say, against establishing them by the money of the General Government. I believed that our commerce on the Atlantic was capable of sustaining itself. I did not believe it required such an immense appropriation as the ocean mail steamers have cost, to carry it on. I do not think, however, that that is the situation of our Pacific coast. I believe that it is necessary to open channels of commerce between our Pacific coast and the opposite shores of that ocean. I believe that the obtaining of that commerce is of sufficient national importance to justify a vote in favor of the measure now proposed. It is on that ground that I support it; and I present this view as a defense to my own constituents for my action.

But, sir, it is said that this measure will have a bad effect upon the mail facilities in my portion of the Union. I do not believe it will have any effect at all upon them; but if it has any, I am satisfied the effect will be as likely to be beneficial as to be injurious. I consider that we have already arrived at an exceedingly unfortunate position in regard to postal facilities, because the mail revenue does not equal the expenditure; and yet, in the opinion of some, it is not so far below it as to call for action at the hands of Congress to remove us from the point at which we have arrived; and Congress has refused to act.

I think the postage on letters should be increased. I believe the revenue should be increased by the action of Congress in some such way as that. I think we are now carrying letters at too low a rate, and certainly at the expense of what has always hitherto been a fixed policy of the General Government. In view of these facts, I have no objection to moving forward. If we move forward, and yield the facilities to which the interests of the country elsewhere are entitled, it is to be hoped that it will produce a good effect upon our legislation in regard to postage facilities.

We shall be called upon to take some step, and no step can be taken that will not be for the benefit of the people among whom I happen to live. They, sir, covering a wide extent of country, are now suffering very much. I do not think this measure will be of any disadvantage to them. In the first place, it takes nothing from the actual postal revenue which is received, and yet it points the public eye directly to the great difference that exists between the actual revenue and the cost of transportation. At the same time it does not appeal to the postage revenue for its support, but goes to the Treasury. When you turn the public attention to the fact that the postage system, contrary to what has hitherto been the fixed policy of the country, is not supporting itself, but that it is becoming a charge upon the public Treasury, we shall either recur to the original policy, or abandon it altogether. If we recur to it, we shall make the Post Office Department support itself; and if that is done, it will be followed by an abridgment, and a very great abridgment, of all these foreign mail facilities; and it will be followed by what, it seems to me, is evidently absolutely necessary, that is, an increase of postage, which has been recommended by the Executive Department of the Government.

We who live at extreme distances, and contribute largely to the postage revenues, have no credit for those contributions. A large amount of postage is actually paid by us for which we receive no credit. How is this? When a farmer or planter in my State writes to a merchant in one of the eastern cities—New York, for instance—the merchant charges my constituent with the postage he pays on the correspondence, but the credit is given to the place where the eastern merchant lives. In this way, although we of the West really pay a very heavy amount of postage annually, the eastern States get credit for it, and a charge is then brought against us that we do not pay sufficient revenue to entitle us to the mail facilities which we enjoy. Is this just? No sir, it is injustice of the deepest dye. It prevents us from getting that to which we are fairly entitled, and it is time something was done to remedy this evil.

Now, sir, I am desirous to see the attention of both branches of Congress drawn directly to the recommendations of the Department, and to the burdens under which we labor. I hope that when Congress fully considers the matter, favorable action will be had in increasing the rates of letter postage, and thus increasing the postal revenue. If this be done, we in my section shall see what will be its effect upon us. I think it will have a beneficial effect. I think by that means we shall be relieved from many of the difficulties under which we labor at present.

Sir, look at our position in reference to the object to be accomplished by this bill. There is open to us on the Pacific, ready for us to take possession of, a trade for the purpose of obtaining which we have already spent millions of dollars. We have given very few mail facilities to our people on the Pacific. Here is an important channel of commerce. They cannot of themselves go on and encourage the increase of it. If we do not come to their aid, they will make no progress in this respect. Shall we then refuse this boon to our Pacific brethren, particularly when it is not to be a charge upon the postal revenues, and will not therefore interfere with the mail facilities of either section of the Union? What will be the consequence of our standing still in this matter? Why, the old system will go on. That is a system which I wish to see broken down. I wish to see the whole policy of making mail facilities depend on the postal revenue abandoned. I think it works unjustly to my section.

I look upon this as entirely different from the mail facilities which we have encouraged and secured by the contracts upon the Atlantic ocean, and therefore I shall record my vote in favor of the proposition to establish this mail line from our western possessions on the Pacific to the Asiatic continent. I think it is justifiable on other grounds, but I will not detain the Senate by going into them.

Mr. BROWN. I offer the following amendment:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be required to establish a daily mail from Cincinnati and St. Louis to New Orleans, and that he be authorized to draw upon the United States Treasury for such amount, over and above the accruing revenues on said route, as will pay the expenses of transporting said mail: Provided, Said sum shall not exceed $500,000.

Mr. GWIN. I submit the question whether that amendment is in order. It is an entirely new proposition which does not at all pertain to the bill before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. WELLER.) The Chair thinks that that is not a point of order, but a question of propriety for the Senate to decide.

Mr. BROWN. The bill certainly relates to the transportation of the mail. Whether that transportation be by ocean or river does not make any difference.

Mr. GWIN. The title of the bill which it is proposed to pass is "A bill to establish a line of steam mail ships between San Francisco, in California, and Shanghai, in China, touching at the Sandwich Islands and Japan." This amendment does not relate to that subject.

Mr. BROWN. I can move to amend the title hereafter, by adding "and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is competent for the Senate, of course, to change the title.

Mr. GWIN. I am in favor of the proposition contained in the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, but I am entirely opposed to encumbering this bill with it. It can come up and be acted upon separately.

Mr. RUSK. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that there is a daily mail between Cincinnati and Louisville.

Mr. BROWN. I was not aware of that; and, therefore, I will modify my amendment so as to provide for a daily mail from Louisville, and St. Louis, and New Orleans.

Mr. CLAY. I have no idea of abusing the patience of the Senate by making a speech at this time of the day, but I wish to say a few words in order to justify myself to my friends from California, [Messrs. WELLER and GWIN,] and my constituents, for the vote I shall give. I can say, that there is no State of the Union to which I would extend favors more cordially and gladly than to the State of California. I have many reasons for that feeling, which I need not declare.

But, sir, the argument of my friend from Texas did not meet the objection of the Senator from Mississippi. He says that if you make this appropriation, it will not diminish the mail facilities now enjoyed by the State of Mississippi. I grant it; but I ask whether it will not prevent the increase of those facilities? Other Senators from southern States have complained of the difficulties under which they labored from a deficiency of mail facilities. I say there is, perhaps, no State in the Union which has as just or greater cause of complaint than my own State; and if I were not to prefer her complaints at this time, if I were to remain silent when others are complaining, I might expose myself to the reproach at home, of having been silent, and therefore admitting, by my silence, that I had no objection to make. As for my own State, I can say, what my colleague knows to be the fact, that North and South Alabama have no intercommunication whatever by mail, except with a pair of saddlebags and a pony. The two extremes of our State are as widely separated as New York and Huntsville. Yet, sir, when our delegation in a body waited upon the Postmaster General, and complained of these things, the invariable answer was, that the Department was now upon the Treasury, and that it could not extend those facilities unless we furnished the means. Under these circumstances, I should be doing injustice to my own section of country if I were to vote for this proposition.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment; and, on the question of ordering it to be engrossed for a third reading, Mr. BROWN called for the yeas and nays; which were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Brodhead, Cass, Dodge of Wisconsin, Douglas, Fessenden, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Rockwell, Rusk, Seward, Slidell, Stuart, Wade, and Weller—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bayard, Bright, Brown, Chase, Clay, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gillette, Hunter, Mallory, Mason, Pettit, Shields, Sumner, and Williams—19.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will now have its third reading, if there be no objection.

Mr. BAYARD. If I have the right I object to its third reading now. The vote was a small one, and I should prefer to have the final vote taken in a fuller Senate.

Mr. GWIN. Does the Senator now object to the passage of the bill?

Mr. BAYARD. I do. I mean to ask for the yeas and nays on its passage when the Senate is fuller.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware objects; and, therefore, the bill cannot now be read a third time.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, it was Ordered, That Maurice Powers have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

An act for the relief of Joseph Jeffries and Jeremiah M. Smith;

An act for the relief of Ira Day, of Vermont;

A Joint resolution directing the connection of the public surveys in Alabama, with the boundary line between the States of Alabama and Florida; and

An act to enable the President of the United States to fulfill the third article of the treaty between the United States and the Mexican Republic, of the 30th December, 1853, as amended by the Senate of the United States.

Which were then signed by the President pro tempore.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill further to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States, and for other purposes," passed March 3, 1851.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. BRODHEAD, the Senate again proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 29, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Department of the Interior, transmitting, in reply to resolution of the House, information in regard to cutting and carrying away timber by trespassers on the public lands; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

EFFICIENCY OF THE UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the indulgence of the House, not for any personal explanation, but for a brief official explanation from the Committee on Military Affairs, which is due alike to this body and the country.

Mr. WASHBURN. of Illinois. Has the morning hour commenced?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It had better commence now.

Mr. WASHBURN. I should be happy to hear the gentleman after the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. COBB. That is the very time I should myself make objection.

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks the unanimous consent of the House for the purpose of making an explanation in regard to the business of the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FAULKNER. It is known to the House, Mr. Speaker, that the condition of the Army at this time requires prompt and effective legislation. The President of the United States in his message, and the Secretary of War in his very able report, have earnestly called the attention of Congress to the demands and necessities of this branch of the public service. In consequence of the infirm health of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, [Mr. BISSELL,] whose absence from his place here at this time no one has more occasion to regret than I have, these recommendations, which were matured in the form of bills, have not been pressed on the attention of this body as their importance and urgent necessity demanded.

Now, I do not propose to ask of this House to fix any day for taking up the bill which proposes to increase the Army by the organization of additional regiments; but there are two bills which I am now prepared to report, that are, I will say, of vital importance to the efficiency and organization of the Army, and ought to be passed at a very early day. I shall not, of course, abuse the courtesy which has been so kindly extended to me by this House, in explanation of the provisions of these bills, further than to say that it is my deliberate conviction, unless some additional inducements are held out to enlistment, as provided in one of these bills, in a very short time we shall have no Army to protect our frontier settlements.

Small as our Army now is, and inadequate to all the wants of the country, there is at this time a demand for four thousand six hundred recruits, and they cannot be had, because the pay authorized by law will not induce men to enter your Army. Between desertion and the expiration of the period of enlistment, we shall, in a very short time, be without any Army at all.

I desire to have a day fixed by the unanimous consent of this House to bring up these bills for consideration. I wish them considered before the Army appropriation bill is taken up, which is the first bill now upon the Calendar, after the civil and diplomatic bill is disposed of; and I am satisfied that it will not take two days to dispose of these two bills to which I refer, and which are deemed by the Department, and by all who understand the subject, so essential to the existence and efficiency of the Army.

I have deemed it my imperative duty to bring this subject to the attention of Congress, and feel thankful to the House for the courtesy which has extended to me the opportunity of making this statement; and if there is an omission to discharge this high public duty, which the country has a right to demand at our hands, the responsibility must rest somewhere, and shall not be upon the Committee on Military Affairs. I am ready to report these bills at any time; and I propose, if the House will give its consent, to fix upon the 5th day of July for taking them up for consideration. There are other provisions in these bills regulating the pay of the officers of the Army, and retiring from service those who have become unfit to discharge their duties, that are also important, and demand the consideration of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia propose to make these bills the special order for that day?

Mr. FAULKNER. For that day, and until they are disposed of.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to any special orders being made at this period of the session.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MACE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a personal explanation, due to myself and to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.] It will not occupy over three minutes.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Indiana will be at liberty to make his personal explanation.

Mr. WALSH. I object. There will be a reply, and we have had enough of these personal explanations.

Mr. MACE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. I will not occupy over three minutes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. HUNT,] informs me that the name of the gentleman from Indiana has been connected with some personal matter, and in common justice I must withdraw my objection.

Mr. MACE. It seems, from a telegraphic dispatch referred to day before yesterday by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] and published in the Times newspaper of New York, that my name is embodied in that dispatch as charging the gentleman from Illinois with having covertly perpetrated a fraud upon the House and country, in the substitute which he offered to the Nebraska and Kansas bill. I have this to say, that, so far as that dispatch is concerned, and so far as I am personally concerned, I am responsible for no such charge.

And in addition to that, it gives me great pleasure to state that I can, with the rest of my friends, bear testimony to the honorable course of the gentleman from Illinois, during the contest on the passage of the Nebraska bill. I am incapable of charging that gentleman with anything like fraud in incorporating provisions in the substitute for the Nebraska bill, or any other bill, to deceive this House and the country.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of bill (No. 406) further to amend the act entitled "An act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States, and for other purposes," passed March 3, 1851.

Mr. OLDS. What motion is pending in regard to this bill?

The SPEAKER. To recommit and print.

Mr. OLDS. I desire to withdraw the motion to recommit the bill, for the purpose of moving an amendment. It will be recollected by the House that some day towards the latter part of the last week, a communication appeared in the National Intelligencer raising objections to the bill under consideration, from the fact that it would be difficult for the Postmaster General to supply the post offices with stamps for the prepayment of postage, and suggesting the additional difficulty that persons would buy up these stamps from the different postmasters for the purpose of speculation.

Now, on consultation with some of the friends of the bill, and with the Postmaster General, I have prepared an amendment which will meet every objection of this kind. The amendment is to come in at the end of the thirty-eighth line as an additional section of the bill.

The amendment was read, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for any postmaster, or other person, to sell any post office stamp or stamped envelope for any larger sum than that indicated on the face of such stamp or envelope. And any person who shall violate this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not less than ten nor more than five hundred dollars.

Mr. OLDS. Perhaps it is due to the House that I should say that the Postmaster General, and those having charge of post office business, are anxious for the passage of this bill. It opens up a new system of keeping accounts between the Post Office Department and the deputy postmasters of the country, more perfect than anything of the kind that has heretofore existed in this Government. The accounts between the Post Office Department and the deputy postmasters will be the stamp account. The necessity for your post bills, which now accompany your letters, will then be superseded. Each postmaster will be charged with the stamps which he receives from the Post Office Department, and thus the account which he will have to render to the Department, at the end of each quarter, will show the amount of business done and money received at his office.

The bill makes a perfect system of accounts, which now you cannot have. And I am authorized by the Postmaster General to say, that he sees no difficulty in keeping the deputy postmasters of the country supplied with stamps, so that they may be had at all times for the purpose of transacting the business of the different post offices of the country. He thinks that there is no greater difficulty in keeping them supplied with post office stamps and stamped envelopes, than there is now in keeping them supplied with post bills, as has to be done.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads this question. What amount does it cost the Government at this time for the establishment of distributing post offices throughout the country? And what effect will this bill have on these distributing post offices?

Mr. OLDS. I am unable to say precisely the number of distributing offices in the country.

Mr. JONES. Well, what is their percentage?

Mr. OLDS. The percentage is twelve and a half under the new law on all matter which passes through the office for distribution. This arises in consequence of having to make a new register and a new post bill for every letter passing through the mail. The moment you pass this bill into a law, and adopt this system of keeping account by means of stamps, you do away with the necessity of having those post bills, and the necessity of the distributing offices of the country. You would need separating offices instead of distributing ones. I am unable to say what amount of labor or expense it will save. You will require two additional clerks in the Third Assistant Postmaster General's Office, in order to keep the post offices supplied with stamps; but it would do away with a greater number of clerks in every distributing office in the country.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Do I understand the gentleman to say that his proposition will do away with the distributing offices of the country?

Mr. OLDS. I say it will do away with the necessity of having anything but separating offices.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then the distributing offices can be abolished?

Mr. OLDS. Yes.

Mr. WASHBURN. That will be a very good thing.

Mr. OLDS. One additional word of explanation, in order to have the bill well understood, and I will leave the matter in the hands of the House. Some individuals seem to suppose that this would require every person who would put a letter into the post office to have a stamp. That is not so. You require the postmaster, when he sends the letter from the office, to put a stamp upon it, and that will be his account with the Post Office Department. The individual who puts the letter in the office need not have a stamp, but he pays his money to the postmaster just as he now does. There is no further difficulty in this matter than there is now. An individual can pay the office just as he does now, and the postmaster himself puts the stamp upon the letter, and that stamp is his account with the Department.

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee. I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio, that if this bill should become a law, the provision which requires the prepayment by stamps ought, at least, to take effect at a subsequent day.

Mr. OLDS. It is so provided in the bill. That provision will not go into effect until the first of January next, in order that the Postmaster General may have time to supply the post offices with stamps.

Mr. SMITH. I have had numerous complaints from my district from postmasters, complaining that they could not get stamps, and for that reason have requested me to go to the Post Office Department and get stamps for them. Hence, with this difficulty existing, if this bill should take effect immediately, it would cut off the correspondence of the country almost altogether, until such stamps could be supplied to the distant offices. I wished merely to suggest this matter, and not with a view of objecting to the bill; for I am in favor of it.

Mr. OLDS. There are about five thousand out of the twenty-three thousand postmasters of the country who are supplied with stamps, and who supply other postmasters in the neighborhood. But the moment you pass this bill into a law, the Postmaster General will make it his business to see that all the postmasters of the country are supplied with stamps. He will go at once about the business, and put the system into operation.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. As I understand the bill is not printed, I wish to inquire if it requires all letters to be prepaid, and prepaid by stamps?

Mr. OLDS. It does.

Mr. JONES. How, then, are you to get along in the post offices out in the interior of the country, if their stamps should fail?

Mr. OLDS. It is the business of the Postmaster General to keep them supplied, and he will do so.

Mr. JONES. But there will be times, out in the remote parts of the country, when the postmasters will be out of stamps, and in that case, the people around the office will have no opportunity or power to send a letter at all.

Mr. OLDS. It is so in regard to the post bills which are now used.

Mr. JONES. But the postmasters can write a post bill and put his name to it. The bills are printed and furnished only as a matter of convenience. No postmaster can make a stamp, but he can write a post bill which will be as valid as a printed one.

Mr. OLDS. It is impossible to adopt any system that will not be liable to some objection, at least of as much importance as that presented by the gentleman from Tennessee against this bill. Sir, you cannot make your bread unless you have your flour or meal; and such being the case, every prudent housekeeper will keep a supply on hand. Well, if this is indeed the only mode of paying the postage on letters, the postmasters will be likely to keep a supply on hand.

The Postmaster General can ascertain, at the end of every quarter, from the return of each deputy postmaster, how many stamps he has on hand; and it will be perfectly easy for him to provide a supply in advance. I can see no difficulty in the way of always keeping a supply on hand. But if an office should sometimes run out of stamps, the inconvenience would be worthy of little consideration, when compared with the great good that will be the result of the adoption of this system, by which the Post Office Department will be able to keep an account with all the deputy postmasters in the country.

Sir, you have no such system now. I undertake to say, that if your deputy postmasters were to keep back ten per cent. of their receipts, all the clerical force now in the employ of the Department could not detect them. Why, sir, I was told, at the Post Office Department yesterday, that if you had a building covering the whole of the Post Office square, and you had a clerical force sufficient to occupy the whole building, from the basement to the fourth story, it would then be impossible to examine the accounts of the deputy postmasters of the country.

Now, sir, when it is proposed to do away with a system so loose as the present, and to substitute for it a system so simple and so perfect as that which I now propose, I ask if gentlemen are prepared to refuse the change from so frivolous an objection as that? Sir, the Postmaster General will take care that the deputy post offices are kept supplied.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Ohio will allow me, I desire to say a single word. I do not know whether this bill proposes to increase the rates of postage or not. If it does, I should be opposed to it. As to the idea of prepayment in all cases, however, I am decidedly in favor of it; and I do not see anything in the objection of my honorable colleague on the other side of the House in reference to the difficulty of obtaining stamps in all cases. I think, when it comes to be generally understood throughout the country that the payment of postage is to be by stamps, they will become an article of universal necessity, and will be kept in all the stores as well as post offices. I do not, therefore, see anything in that objection.

If the postmasters should get out of stamps, it would be easy to obtain them from the stores. They would circulate as freely as dimes or three cent pieces; and there could not possibly be any difficulty in reference to the supply. They will become an article of universal demand, and there cannot be danger of their running out.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. My colleague says these stamps will come into universal circulation. Well, sir, that is another serious objection to me. They will to that extent become a paper currency.

Mr. STANTON. I beg my colleague's pardon. I did not say that these postage stamps would become a circulating medium. I said they would become an article of universal necessity; that they would be found in the stores, and that there would be no difficulty in reference to there not being a supply.

Mr. JONES. Then they will go, to some extent, into general circulation. But, sir, as this bill stands now, as I understand it—it has not been printed, and I have not had an opportunity to examine its provisions—it requires that your postage shall be prepaid; and prepaid in what? In stamps. That, in my opinion, is in palpable violation of the Constitution of the United States, which says Congress shall not make anything a tender in payment of debts except gold and silver coin.

You have, by law, required the payment of three cents as postage on a single letter. There has been authorized the coining of a three cent piece which to that amount is a legal tender in payment of debt from one citizen to another. When a man goes to the post office with a letter and three cents in the current coin of the country to pay its postage, your bill says that the three cent piece shall not be received in payment of the postage, but that it shall be given for a piece of paper which shall be received in payment for the postage.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That paper is in the receipt.

Mr. JONES. You require him to buy the paper with your coin, and to give that paper in payment of postage. A man may want but one of these stamps. Some may not want to write letters very often, and the man who would want to pay postage on one letter only, would rather pay the three cent piece.

But, as I said before, if one of these offices should get out of stamps from neglect or accident, or any other cause, and the individual goes there with his letter and money, he cannot procure the stamp, the only medium by which he can pay the postage. It seems to me that there should be provision that individuals may, if they choose, pay the postage on letters in the current coin of the country.

Mr. SAGE. I would suggest to the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads the propriety of having the bill printed. I believe that there is a want of information among many members of the House in reference to its provisions, who, when they understand them, would favor the measure. It is well known that a bill somewhat similar was defeated a few days since.

Mr. OLDS. With the gentleman's permission, I will say that the bill now under consideration is no more than the fifth section of the substitute for House bill No. 330, with the amendment now proposed. Gentlemen can get the substitute by sending to the document room for it.

Mr. SAGE. I am myself prepared to vote for the bill. I think that it is right; and I am of opinion that the objection of the gentleman from Tennessee will not operate to the extent to which he speaks. This is an important change, and one which will result in good to the Department, and convenience and benefit to the people. I hope it may be adopted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to amend by adding the following:

"And all the distributing post offices in the country shall be discontinued from the time that this act takes effect."

Mr. Chairman; so far as I understand the provisions of the bill which has been introduced by the honorable chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I am inclined to support it. I think that the principle it involves is the proper one; and also, that the objection which the honorable member from Tennessee has urged will be found not to operate in the manner he has indicated. I think it will be just as convenient for the Department to furnish all these post offices with the requisite amount of stamps as it is with the requisite amount of post bills, as now furnished by the Department.

The amendment which I have sent to the Speaker's table I desire to see adopted. Every member of this House knows that there is great confusion in the mail service throughout the country. I have heard it attributed, in a great measure, and I believe correctly attributed, to the distributing post offices, which are established all over the country; not established, in many instances, where the public interests require that they should be established, but established by political influences, or by personal favoritism, in order that certain points may be favored, and certain postmasters may get the commissions which follow from the establishment of these distributing offices.

For instance, a letter from Washington to my own residence, Galena, has to be distributed at some two or three points on the route, as I understand it, and delayed at each of these points. I can travel from this city to my own residence, by the ordinary mode of conveyance, from one to three days quicker than letters can go by the mail on the same route of travel, for the reason I have stated, that these letters have to be distributed at various points, for instance, I believe at Pittsburg, perhaps at Toledo, and certainly at Chicago.

Hence, I say, this thing should be corrected. It is the duty of Congress to interpose and abolish these distributing offices, which are no more or less than nuisances to the mail service. There was a distributing office at Galena, Illinois, which, if there were to be distributing offices in the country at all, should have been continued as a distributing office, as that city is the great center of business and commerce for the whole northwestern country. Without any notice, without any good reason given, and in defiance of public sentiment, and to the vast injury of the mail service for the entire northwest, the distributing office was removed from that place, where it should be, if anywhere, to another place on the other side of the river—a point that is inconvenient and is out of the way—and with no other effect than that of delaying and deranging mail matter throughout that whole section of the country.

I say it is time that Congress should put a stop to this abuse and this delay in the transmission of the mails for the purpose of adding to the commissions of postmasters. I contend that there is no necessity for this distribution of letters between Washington, Chicago, St. Louis, and Galena, three great points in the West. They might be mailed directly to the points where they are to go, without going through all this machinery, and without being subjected to all of these delays. I would call the attention of members of the House, who have witnessed the operation of this very thing, to look to it, and see if we cannot strike a blow at this system which shall end in facilitating the mail service, and putting a stop to all the vexatious delays growing out of the existing state of things.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I am satisfied that this whole question of distributing post offices is entirely misunderstood. The system was discontinued at the time that I held the office of postmaster, some four years ago. I know nothing about it since that time; but the custom then was to have letters sent direct from here to the furthest point. Letters posted here, and directed to Galena, were sent direct from this point to Galena; and that had been so for the last six years.

With respect to the trouble of not having stamps, I am very confident that no inconvenience can arise from that cause. The smaller offices in the country, when they had exhausted their stock of post bills, have been always in the habit of giving the mail to the mail carrier to have brought to the nearest office to be mailed. All the merchants, storekeepers, and business men of the country—if the prepayment of letters is made compulsory—will keep themselves supplied with stamps.

Besides, the intention of this law is not that the postage shall be paid in specie or in stamps, but that the postmaster himself, when the postage is paid in specie, shall, instead of stamping the letter "paid," affix upon it a postage stamp, for which the Government has received its three cents, thus rendering it morally impossible to defraud the Government in the matter. It should be understood that post bills, so far as the Post Office Department is concerned, are utterly worthless in guarding the Department from fraud. They furnish no guarantee whatever against its being cheated. But, in this case of prepayment by stamps being enforced, the Government cannot possibly be defrauded. I now call for the previous question.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his call for the previous question? I only desire to say one word on the subject of this bill.

Mr. JONES. I will withdraw it, if the gentleman promise to renew the call.

Mr. HAVEN. I do so.

I do not desire to answer any argument or suggestion that has been made here; but I simply desire to say to the House that I have examined this question with a little care, when we had debate up the other day on the other post office bill that was defeated in the House. The House will recollect that I made a little ineffectual effort at that time to save the latter section of that bill. I thought then that I knew what I was about. I was of the opinion then that the latter sections of the bill were unobjectionable. I think that this bill now before the House is substantially the same in its character as the latter sections of that other bill were. I am entirely willing to see it passed. I think that the business portion of the country; I think that the remote and agricultural sections of the country; I think that every portion of our citizens will be satisfied with this bill.

I do not think that it is a matter of any great consequence or moment that this bill should pass. There are reasons, I think, why it should pass, but I do not believe it is of any great moment. It is a bill of which nobody will complain, unless it be the proprietors of newspapers of large circulation in our cities, as I think it increases the burdens on them a little. On this subject, however, the gentleman who has charge of the bill, and other members of the House, have more knowledge than I have.

But in other respects the bill is a proper one. The prepayment of postage, to which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] objects as impracticable, I think he will see, on further consideration, is not so. If men have not postage stamps to affix to their letters, they may leave money for the purpose, and the postmaster can affix the stamps and forward the letters. As I said, I do not think that this is a matter of any great consequence, but still it is a bill which I should like to see passed. I now renew the call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be now put.

Mr. READY. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question was then taken upon Mr. WASHBURN's amendment to the amendment; and it was rejected.

The question was then taken upon Mr. OLDS's amendment; and it was agreed to.

The question then being upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, it was put; and decided in the affirmative.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is the bill engrossed?

The SPEAKER. The amendment is not engrossed.

[Cries of "Let it pass!"]

The SPEAKER. The bill or amendment is not engrossed; and if objection is made, it must go over until it is engrossed.

Mr. OLDS. In that case when will it come up?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will consider it. It is a new case.

Mr. OLDS. Is it not in order to have a time fixed when it shall have its third reading?

The SPEAKER. It is. When shall the bill have its third reading?

[Cries of "Now!" "Now!"]

The question was put upon the motion that the bill have its third reading now; and it was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I ask if the bill can be read now, unless it is first engrossed?

The SPEAKER. Upon what principle? It is a new question to the Chair.

Mr. JONES. It has not been engrossed, and I ask the Chair if it can be read before it is engrossed? The order of the House is that the bill shall be engrossed, and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The doctrine of the parliamentary law is, that the House may fix the time for the reading of a bill a third time; and it cannot be read a third time until it is engrossed. If it shall be engrossed, it will be read to-day.

Mr. OLDS. Is it in order to move to recommend the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is in order, but the Chair will suggest that the order of the House to read the bill to-day will keep it before the House.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to understand the exact position of this bill if the House goes to the consideration of other business now.

The SPEAKER. The order of the House is, that the bill shall be read the third time to-day. The Chair does not know what the practice of this body has been in such cases; for no such case has ever been made upon him before since he has served here. The parliamentary law gives the House the right to fix the time at which a bill shall have its third reading; the House did order by a very large vote that it should be read to-day. The Chair decides that, if it should be engrossed any time during the session to-day, the order must be executed.

Mr. JONES. Well, sir, to avoid all difficulty, I will withdraw my objection.

The bill was then read a third time.

Mr. OLDS. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. Although the call for the previous question has been seconded, I desire to propound a question to the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, on the answer to which my vote will depend.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I would ask the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads what is the effect of the bill on newspaper issues?

Mr. OLDS. It has no effect on newspaper issues whatever.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 104, nays 55; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abernethy, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bridges, Brooks, Campbell, Carpenter, Caskie, Chastain, Clark, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Curtis, John G. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Wheeler, and Daniel B. Wright—104.

NAYS.—Messrs. Appleton, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Caruthers, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingman, Cox, Craige, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dean, Dick, John M. Elliott, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Giddings, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Hiestler, Houston, Howe, Hunt, George W. Jones, Keitt, Leitcher, Lindley, McCulloch, John C. Miller, Millson, Morrison, Mordecai Oliver, Phelps, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, David Ritchie, Rufin, Russell, Sapp, Shaw, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Walley, Walsh, Tappan Wentworth, Yates, and Zollicoffer—55.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. OLDS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALTERATION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I desire to say to the House that I was accidentally out of the House yesterday at the time of the final passage of the ten million bill. I was detained away on account of the storm; and as my vote will not change the result, I ask the consent of the House to have my vote recorded in favor of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of New York. As the gentleman has accomplished all he wishes to accomplish, I object.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

Mr. ORR. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. ORR. Then I move that the House do now proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table, so that we may take up and act on the resolution fixing the day of adjournment for this session.

[Cries of "Good!"]

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The following is the resolution, as adopted by the House:

"Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives adjourn their respective Houses on Monday, August 14, at twelve o'clock, m."

The Senate amended by striking out all after the words "respective Houses," and inserting in lieu thereof, as follows:

"From twelve o'clock, m., July 17, until Monday, the 16th October next."

Mr. ORR. I move to substitute for the Senate amendment the following:

Sine die on Monday, the 31st of July, at twelve o'clock, m.

Mr. SEWARD. I would inquire of the Chair whether, under the rules, an amendment is in order to a Senate amendment? I believe after a bill has gone to the Senate, and been there amended, that when returned, that amendment is not amendable.

The SPEAKER. It is in order to amend the Senate amendment.

Mr. SEWARD. Then there is no end to legislation.

Mr. ORR. Will the Clerk report the modification I have made since the resolution was sent up to the desk? It is the insertion of the words "at twelve o'clock, m.," so that the session will terminate at twelve o'clock.

Mr. PECKHAM. If the previous question is sustained, will the vote be first upon the amendment now offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] or will it be upon the amendment of the Senate?

The SPEAKER. It will be first upon the amendment to the amendment of the Senate; or, in other words, upon the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina. If that fails, then the vote will be upon the proposition of the Senate.

Mr. WALLEY. I rise to a question of order. I wish to ask the Chair whether, in his opinion, it is in order for the House to amend the proposition now returned from the Senate. The House adopted a resolution, and sent it to the Senate for their joint action. The Senate amended the action of the House, and sent it back here for the concurrence of this House. I ask the Chair if the question is not, Will the House concur, or not concur, in the amendment of the Senate?

The SPEAKER. They can concur with or without amendment.

Mr. WALLEY. The gentleman from South Carolina proposes to strike out the whole action of the Senate, and therefore it will not be a concurrence.

The SPEAKER. It is germane to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. WALLEY. But the resolution of the Senate proposes a recess.

The SPEAKER. A proposition which the gentleman proposes to strike out. The amendment of the Senate, it will be recollected, is to a resolution of the House, which proposed to adjourn sine die. The Senate proposed to take a recess. The Chair decides that the House may amend the amendment of the Senate. The amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina is certainly in order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] whether he proposes to move the previous question immediately, and if so, to ask him if he will not give way for an amendment to the original proposition, so that if he moves the previous question, and his amendment fails, we may act upon the amendment I desire to offer as well as upon the resolution of the Senate. The amendment I propose is to provide "that the Senators and Representatives shall not be entitled to, and shall not receive, per diem during the recess."

Mr. ORR. It was my purpose before taking my seat to demand the previous question. I have no desire to preclude any motion being made with a view of obtaining the sense of the House as to the time we shall adjourn, or whether we shall have a recess. I am myself opposed to a recess. I believe that we can finish the necessary business of the country by the 31st of July—the day that has been indicated in the amendment I have offered. At the time when the original motion was made fixing the 14th of August as the day for adjournment, we had then before us the Pacific railroad bill, which promised to consume a great deal of time, and we also had before us a proposition to appropriate $10,000,000 to carry out the provisions of the late Mexican treaty. Those questions have now been disposed of, and looking back to the history of the previous legislation of the country, I think we may safely say that the appropriation bills may all be passed by the 31st of July, besides disposing of the business which may arise during the morning hour. I think it would not be safe for us to fix an earlier day for adjournment than the 31st of July.

Mr. BOCOCK. If the gentleman from South Carolina will allow me, I desire to say a word or two on this subject.

Mr. ORR. Certainly.

Mr. BOCOCK. I desire, in the beginning, to ask the gentleman from South Carolina, if he has made his calculation as to the amount of business that can be done by the House by the 31st of July. I supposed when the amendment was offered by him that the day of adjournment had been fixed upon solely in relation to the passage of the appropriation bills. The gentleman, in the remarks which he has made since he rose, has let out that idea, has conveyed the intimation to the House that he thinks by the 31st of July the appropriation bills can alone be passed, and that all other business must lie over, except, perhaps, such business as may be transacted in the morning hour. Now, I am as much in favor of an early adjournment as any member on this floor. I have voted for the proposition for an early adjournment whenever I thought there was a chance of our being able to transact the necessary business of the House. But I think we might as well adjourn in the beginning of the session as leave the necessary business of legislation undone. There is no virtue in an early adjournment which leaves the business of the country undone. I do not believe in appealing to the people on any such ground. I came here to participate in doing the business of the country, and I want to do it, and to do it as soon as possible, and when the business is done I want to go back to the people, and tell them that our duty is performed.

Now, sir, there are various bills here to be disposed of. I have charge of one, and I speak only for that one. I know, however, that there are various other bills of importance to be acted on. There is the bill for the reform of the Army, for instance. Then, I am sure there are bills to be acted on which the gentleman behind me [Mr. DISNEY] has in charge. There are still other bills to the disposition of which the country is looking forward, and in which the country feels an interest. But I have nothing to say about any of them for which I am not personally responsible.

I ask the gentleman from South Carolina, therefore, to give me two days for the bill which I have in charge, and which I think one of essential interest to the country. It is a bill which is calculated to confer great benefits upon our Republic. If the gentleman from South Carolina has fixed the 31st of July as the day for the adjournment of the House, in relation merely to the appropriation bills, I ask him to give me only two days for mine. Let him fix the day of adjournment as the 2d of August for the purpose of allowing the extra two days for the consideration of the bill on which the Committee on Naval Affairs has labored much this session, and which I want to have brought before the House and acted on in some shape or other. I ask that this time be given to me for the purpose I have indicated, and I leave it for other gentlemen to take care of their own interests.

Mr. ORR. I have some bills in the disposition of which I feel an interest myself, as well as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOCOCK] does in his. But—

Mr. DISNEY, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield me the floor for a moment?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. It is, that the gentleman from South Carolina cannot hold the floor and yield it to others in that way. There are a great many members here, I have no doubt, who wish to express their views on this subject. I hope, therefore, that the gentleman from South Carolina, when he has made his speech, will yield the floor, and give to gentlemen at the head of committees, and others who wish to express their views, an opportunity to do so.

Several MEMBERS. Certainly, certainly.

The SPEAKER. In reply to the question of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee, the Chair decides that it is in order for a gentleman occupying the floor to yield it for explanation, but for explanation alone.

Mr. JONES. Exactly; but it is not in order for him to yield it to others to make speeches.

The SPEAKER. No; it is not in order to yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. DISNEY. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to yield me the floor for a personal explanation.

Mr. ORR. In a moment.

The appropriation bill proper may be disposed of even before the 31st of July. If the gentleman from Virginia wants but two days, and if he can reach his bill there will be ample time to have it considered. I have no doubt that much more than two days will be consumed in matters which I am free to say, are of much less importance than the bill which the gentleman from Virginia has in charge.

Now, as to the necessary business of the country, I am not one of those who believe that Congress is serving the people most when they legislate most. The great bane of our system of government, if there be any bane in it, is the tendency of all our legislative bodies to pass too many laws. Now, I think the business may be finished up by the day that I propose for adjournment. I think that my friend's naval bill may be disposed of before then. I think that the Army bill, which the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER] spoke of this morning, may be also disposed of.

Mr. COBB. What about the railroad bills?

Mr. ORR. I think that with a little caution on the part of the gentlemen having charge of the railroad bills, as the gentleman from Alabama desires my opinion as to them, they may be disposed of too. I think that in the morning hour we may pass all those bills that ought to be passed.

Mr. DISNEY. I, for one, sir, am exceedingly opposed to the agitation of the question of adjournment at this time, and I hope the House will look into and examine the amount of business pending before it, and before its committees. The Committee on Public Lands is filled to repletion with matters of the most important character, intrusted to it for examination; matters involving the investigation of questions both of law and fact. But not only that committee, but the various other committees of this House have struggled for the floor for weeks and months, and each, and perhaps all of them with a large amount of business which they are exceedingly anxious to get before the House, and have been unable to do so. No gentleman knows better than the gentleman from South Carolina, that if we go on and make this early adjournment, regardless of this amount of business, the effect will be that you will come here at the next short session, and pass only the necessary appropriation bills, and all this immense amount of matter will go over until the next Congress, which will be composed of a large number of new members, and the whole business which is now prepared, and ready to be acted upon, will have to be reinvestigated, and will again encumber our Calendar. It is in this way that matters continue before Congress year after year, and it is for this reason that we have matters upon our Calendar which have been before Congress for half a century.

The committee with which I have the honor to be connected has an immense amount of business before it, and ready to be acted upon, important in its character. That business has reference, not only to railroad bills, but to matters connected with our public domain of a most important nature. These matters have been examined, and examined with care, and the committee are anxious to make their reports to the House. But it is manifest that this early adjournment has no reference whatever to anything but the passage of the appropriation bills.

I have an incident relating to this matter—and gentlemen will pardon me for referring to it. A gentleman upon this floor, the other day, announced to the House that, in his judgment, all the important business of the House could be transacted within the time indicated for the adjournment. The next day he called upon me to inquire in relation to a bill in which he was interested, which was under my charge, and which, in his judgment, is a bill of the utmost importance. I was compelled to say to him that it could not be reached. Yet he had stated to this House that there was time enough, before the day designated for adjournment, to transact all the important business of the House.

Now, I beseech this House to reflect upon this matter, and not give way to their anxiety to get away from this warm weather, but really to sit down and examine the amount and character of the business before them.

In my opinion there is but one way to do, and that is to refer this matter to a committee of this House to examine into the amount and character of the business before the House. When they shall have done so, and the committee have reported, the House can act intelligently and understandingly upon the subject, and gentlemen will not be cut off from the consideration of matters in which they feel a personal interest. They sometimes forget themselves, and get up here and say that all the important business can be transacted, when there are matters in which they are interested, and which cannot possibly be reached before the early day indicated for adjournment.

But we cannot adjourn at that early day. All this thing is ill advised. Let the matter be referred to one of the committees of the House, and let them examine it before we undertake to fix a day for adjournment. If you adjourn at the time fixed in the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, you will sacrifice, to a vast extent, the interests of the country. It is wrong. I would like to have the matter examined by a committee, and I hope it will be referred.

Mr. ORR. The committee will perhaps pardon me for one moment more. I have no objection to my friend from New York manifesting a disposition to pass upon all the business of the House; but my friend has been here long enough to know that if we were to sit here from now until the first of December, we should not dispose of the private claims alone which encumber the Calendars of Congress. As for disposing of all the business which has been brought before the Committee on Public Lands, and which has been, or will be, reported back by them for the action of the House, that alone, if properly examined, would occupy the time of the House for three months. So that it is useless to talk of disposing of all the business before the House.

We are already approaching the middle of summer. Most of us have been absent from our homes for more than seven months. The hot weather is upon us; we know that a disease is approaching us from all sides; and suppose it should make its appearance here, I ask whether we should be able to keep the House together? Should we not at once find ourselves without a quorum? Is it not important that we should pass the necessary appropriation bills and go home? Then, when we come back in December, let us go to work and not adjourn over from Thursday to Monday, as we are in the habit of doing. If the naval bill under the charge of my friend from Virginia [Mr. BOCOCK] is not disposed of during the present session, let us then take it up and dispose of it. We could have disposed of that and of the Pacific railroad bill in the time we have lost by adjournment over during the present session. We may dispose of them, and of a considerable amount of private business, in the month of December.

But if gentlemen expect to dispose of all the business that has been referred to the standing committees of the House, the session will be perpetual. It is idle to talk about it.

I did intend to have moved the previous question; but as there are others who desire to speak, it would, perhaps, not be fair that I should do so after having made these remarks myself. I will, therefore, surrender the floor to any gentleman who may desire it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is a very good reason, I think, why we should not adjourn at a very early day, or at least at so early a day as that proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina. It is a fact which I presume members are familiar with, that gentlemen have done what talking they want to do for the present, and we may now go on and transact business; but if we adjourn and go home, members will come back with a new supply of stump speeches, which we shall have delivered here instead of doing the business of legislation. There is a good deal of business which ought to be done, and which I think, perhaps, can be done by the time fixed in the resolution as it originally passed the House. In the present state of affairs, in the present condition of our country, there should be something done for the defense of our coast, in connection with the commerce of the country. There are important western interests to which attention should be given.

My object in rising, Mr. Speaker, was to submit the motion indicated by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY], that this resolution and the pending amendments be referred to a select committee, to ascertain and report how soon it was practicable for the House, with a full discharge of its business, to adjourn.

THE SPEAKER. There is already a committee in existence on revisal and unfinished business.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Very well; then I move that the resolution and pending amendments be referred to that committee.

Mr. EWING. I object to any such reference; I think that it is very unusual. I never heard of a resolution for adjournment sine die being referred to the Committee on Revisal and Unfinished Business. It is a matter which I think we ought to finish as soon as possible. The earlier we fix the day, the earlier we can adjourn. Every man who has ever served in this House, or any other deliberative body, knows that when a day of adjournment is fixed, the House works up to that day. I do not object to discussions, although they may perhaps extend into an abuse and evil. There is an advantage in free, full, and unlimited discussion in the earlier part of any session. It is that which prepares the House for rapid work towards its close. They have early digested every question which may come before them; and while it is often complained of as an evil that the business of the session is crowded into the last days of a session, when it may as well be done in the first days of a session, it is not an unmixed evil. The House is then better prepared for work.

We can, I think, finish all we have to do, which is absolutely indispensable, by the day proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina. Too much legislation is an evil, and, as he very properly remarked, if we attempted to get through with everything, we never would adjourn. We would leave that resolution with the Committee on Revisal and Unfinished Business, and it would be a matter which would properly belong to them for ever. [Laughter.] I want to get away from here, for one, and I believe that the people are willing to see us go away. I would rather adjourn sine die than take a recess. It is rather a novel experiment, and I do not know how it would suit. But I want to get away myself on any terms. I want to get something to eat. [Laughter.] I want to get to some place where I can sleep of nights. [Renewed laughter.] I am tired of going into these dining rooms in the morning with the weak stomach with which every gentleman rises in summer, and smelling that odor which destroys the last remnant of appetite that can be got up by the force of tonics, and other means. After trotting all over town hunting a place to eat, I have thought that, of inevitable necessity, I would be compelled to go through the form under the influence of chloroform. I know of no other way in which it can be practiced with any sort of ease and comfort.

I wish the House would agree to an adjournment sine die on the day named, as I believe it to be entirely practicable. I am willing to try it, at all events. I think we can adjourn by that time, that we ought to do it, and that the people will be willing to see us do it. I am satisfied that we can finish all the business indispensably necessary between this and the earliest day proposed.

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 45, nays 134; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Ashe, Barksdale, Belcher, Boccock, Brooks, Caskie, Clark, Cobb, Cullom, Disney, Eastman, Eddy, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Green, Henn, Ingersoll, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Lindsley, McMullin, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, Smith Miller, Millson, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Powell, Richardson, Riddle, Rowe, Shannon, Gerrit Smith, Hester L. Stevens, David Stuart, Upham, Vail, and Vansant—45.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, David J. Bailey, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Breckinridge, Bridges, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Chas. at, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingman, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Craige, Crocker, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Everhart, Ewing, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hiestler, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kerr, Knox, Kurtz, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindley, McCulloch, Matteson, May, Mayall, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Morrison, Nichols, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Phelps, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Tweed, Wade, Walker, Walley, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Daniel B. Wright, Yates, and Zollicoffer—134.

So the House refused to lay the resolution and amendments on the table.

The question recurred on the motion made by Mr. RICHARDSON, that the whole subject be referred to the Committee on Revisal and Unfinished Business.

Mr. DISNEY. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion, and for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PRESTON and ROBBINS were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 47, nays 125; more than one fifth voting in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 47, nays 125; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Ashe, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Boccock, Brooks, Caskie, Clark, Cobb, Disney, Eddy, Edmundson, Everhart, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Green, Henn, Ingersoll, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kittredge, Lamb, Lindsley, McCulloch, McMullin, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, May, Smith Miller, Millson, John Perkins, Phillips, Pratt, Puryear, Richardson, Riddle, Rowe, Seward, Shannon, Hester L. Stevens, David Stuart, Vail, and Vansant—47.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Appleton, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Breckinridge, Bridges, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingman, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Craige, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, John G. Eliot, Ellison, Etheridge, Ewing, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Gamble, Goodrich, Greenwood, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hiestler, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kerr, Knox, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindley, Matteson, Mayall, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Shaw, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Tweed, Walker, Walley, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollicoffer—125.

So the House refused to commit the joint resolution to the Committee on Revisal and Unfinished Business.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. ORR.

Mr. FLORENCE. I call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 80, nays 89; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Benson, Benton, Breckinridge, Bridges, Caruthers, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingman, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Craige, Cullom, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dick, Dowdell, John M. Elliott, Etheridge, Ewing, Farley, Greenwood, Harrison, Haven, Hendricks, Hill, Houston, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Knox, Lamb, Latham, Lilly, Lindley, John G. Miller, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Peck, Phelps, Pratt, Preston, Ready, David Ritchie, Robbins, Ruffin, Sapp, Shaw, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Alexander H. Stephens, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Trout, Wade, Walker, Israel Washburn, Wells, Daniel B. Wright, Yates, and Zollicoffer—80.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Appleton, Ashe, Belcher, Bennett, Boccock, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, Crocker, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dickinson, Disney, Eastman, Eddy, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Everhart, Faulkner, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Green, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Hastings, Henn, Hiestler, Hillyer, Howe, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Lindsley, McCulloch, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Mayall, Middleswarth, Smith Miller, Millson, Morgan, Norton, Parker, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Pringle, Puryear, Reese, Richardson, Thomas Ritchey, Rowe, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Seward, Shannon, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, David Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Walley, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Wheeler—89.

So Mr. ORR's amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the Senate amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I move to lay the whole subject upon the table; and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I rise to a question of privilege. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the amendment was rejected; and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. LETCHER. Yeas and nays upon that.

[Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. WASHBURNE. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know whether the House can now lay the original resolution, which passed this House, on the table; or whether the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana, on which the House is about to vote, is not to lay on the table the amendment of the Senate?

THE SPEAKER. The motion is to lay on the table both those together.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Does the motion include our resolution to adjourn on the 14th of August?

THE SPEAKER. It does; and the resolution of the Senate.

The yeas and nays were ordered on Mr. JONES's motion.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 48, nays 132; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Boccock, Brooks, Caskie, Clark, Cobb, Disney, Eastman, Eddy, Edmundson, English, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Green, Henn, Hill, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Lamb, Lindsley, McMullin, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, Smith Miller, Millson, Noble, John Perkins, Pratt, Richardson, Riddle, Ruffin, Shannon, Hester L. Stevens, Vail, Vansant, Walker, and Daniel B. Wright—47.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Appleton, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Breckinridge, Bridges, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingman, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Craige, Crocker, Cullom, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Thomas D. Eliot, John M. Elliott, Ellison, Everhart, Ewing, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Greenwood, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hiestler, Hillyer, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kerr, Knox, Kurtz, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindley, McCulloch, McDougall, McNair, Matteson, May, Mayall, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rowe, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Shaw, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Tweed, Upham, Wade, Walley, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Yates, and Zollie Coffey—132.

So the House refused to lay the subject on the table.

The question recurred on the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the yeas and nays on the question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I desire to ask a question of the Chair. Is the question now on concurring with the Senate's amendment to the resolution of the House?

The SPEAKER. That is the question.

Mr. PHILLIPS. And the refusal, therefore, to concur with the amendment of the Senate, will leave the resolution of the House as it was originally adopted?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. And secure a conference committee?

The SPEAKER. That will be the effect of such a vote on the part of the House.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 71, nays 105; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Appleton, Bennett, Campbell, Caruthers, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Flagler, Franklin, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hiestler, Hillyer, Howe, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Latham, Lindsey, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Middleswarth, Morgan, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Packer, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pomington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Rowe, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Tweed, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—71.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Benson, Benton, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Carpenter, Caskey, Chandler, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Coe, Coz, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dowdell, Eastman, Eddy, John M. Elliott, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Ewing, Farley, Faulkner, Fenton, Florence, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Hunt, Hill, Houston, Hughes, Hunt, Ingessoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Kett, Kurz, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsey, McMullin, McNair, Macy, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Allison, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Andrew Oliver, Orr, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Ruffin, Shannon, Shaw, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Alexander H. Stephens, Hestor L. Stevens, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Vail, Vansant, Watker, Walsh, Israel Washburn, Wheeler, Daniel B. Wright, and Zollie Coffey—105.

So the House refused to concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. FLORENCE moved to reconsider the vote just taken by which the Senate's amendment was non-concurred in, and also that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by the hands of SIDNEY WESTER, Esq., his Private Secretary, transmitting to Congress copies of two communications of the 25th ultimo, and the 4th instant, respectively, from Her Britannic Majesty's Minister accredited to this Government, to the Secretary of State, relative to the health on shipboard of emigrants from foreign countries to the United States. This was the subject of the President's message to Congress of the 27th of April last.

On motion by Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, the message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, apprising the House that the Senate had agreed, among others, to the following bill:

Bill of the House (No. 405) to enable the President of the United States to execute the third article of the recent treaty with Mexico.

RECESS OF CONGRESS.

The SPEAKER. The business next in order is the consideration of the following joint resolution:

Joint resolution providing for a recess from the first Monday in July to the third Monday in October.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I propose that the House appoint a committee of conference to confer with a like committee of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. That would not be regular. The action of the House will be reported to the Senate, and it will be for that body to determine on the course to be taken in regard to it.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is hardly worth while for us to travel over all this ground again. We will probably have a conference about this matter to agree to some time for the adjournment of Congress. If the House will agree to do so, I would like to go into committee this evening, and take up either the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, or—

[Cries of "Oh, no; oh, no."]

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the message of the President of the United States, which was laid before the House, by the Speaker, a few moments since, was referred to the Committee on Commerce. Upon looking at the papers, I am confident that they ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The question was put upon Mr. BAYLY's motion; and it was agreed to; and then, by unanimous consent, the message and accompanying papers were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

On motion of Mr. HOUSTON, (at three o'clock and thirty minutes) the House adjourned until to-morrow.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 30, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

HEALTH OF IMMIGRANTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, by unanimous consent, it being private bill day, laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting copies of two communications of the 26th ultimo and 4th instant, from her Britannic Majesty's Minister accredited to the Government of the United States, to the Secretary of State, relative to the health on shipboard of immigrants from foreign countries to the United States; which was referred to the select committee appointed to inquire into the subject, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHASE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Isaac Swain, praying remuneration for losses caused by the failure of the agents of the Government to comply with the terms of a contract with him for the transportation of certain commissary's stores from Valparaiso to Benicia, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIT, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Gaston T. Raoul, praying permission to enter a section of land under a certificate duly issued by the register and receiver of the Greensburg land district of Louisiana, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

RECONSIDERATION OF A VOTE.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, I yesterday offered a resolution calling on the State Department for information in regard to the proposition for the interchange of breadstuffs between Canada and the United States. I made search before I offered the resolution, and I found none of the papers which I wished to call out. Since the resolution was adopted, however, I have discovered by the aid of one of the clerks, that the greater part of the information was communicated at a former day, and as that answers the purpose I had in view, I move to reconsider the vote adopting the resolution, in order that it may lie on the table.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; and the resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

DAVID MYERLE.

Mr. GWIN. A bill was passed by the Senate some weeks since for the relief of David Myerle. A reconsideration was moved by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. BRIGHT.] That question has been lying over for many weeks, and I should like to have it taken up, and disposed of this morning.

The PRESIDENT. That being a private bill on the Calendar, the motion of the Senator is in order.

Mr. GWIN. I move to take up for consideration the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. CHASE. The Senator from Indiana is not in his seat, and I should like to inquire of the Senator from California if he has conversed with him on the subject?

Mr. GWIN. When I attempted to call up this matter at a former day, it was stated that the Senator from Indiana wished to discuss the question. I subsequently saw him, and he told me he had nothing to say on it, but that he had moved the reconsideration of the motion for the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] and that he had no objection to its coming up at any time, whether he was present or not.

Mr. BAYARD. It is perfectly immaterial to me whether the bill is taken up and acted upon now or at any other time; for in such weather as this is I am not going to speak on it. I have looked into the facts, and I have conversed with some Senators in reference to it. My own mind is clear, on examination, that there is no shadow of claim in the case. After looking at all the material papers I cannot realize on what ground the report was ever based. I am perfectly willing, however, to take the vote, if gentlemen have made up their minds on their own investigation. I am not going, in this weather, to discuss questions of this kind.

The motion of Mr. GWIN was agreed to; and the question being upon agreeing to the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, Mr. BAYARD called for the yeas and nays; which were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Bright, Brodhead, Chase, Clay, Clayton, Dodge of Wisconsin, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Hamilton, Hunter, Mason, Sidel, Stuart, Toucey, and Williams—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Brown, Fessenden, Fish, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, James, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Norris, Pettit, Rockwell, Seward, Wade, and Weller—17.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is, "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. CLAY called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The bill proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to David Myerle $30,000 for losses, sacrifices, and expenses incurred by him in testing and establishing the practicability and safety of the process of water-rotting hemp, under the direction of the Navy Department.

Mr. EVANS. As I do not intend to vote now in the same way that I did when this bill was before the Senate on a former occasion, I beg leave to say merely that since it was then under consideration I have looked more minutely into the claim than I did before, and I am satisfied that this man is entitled to something. My only difficulty is that the bill allows him, perhaps, a little more than he ought to have; but, rather than not pay him anything, I have made up my mind to vote for the bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. President, as this bill was returned from the House on my motion, it is proper that I should state the reasons that governed me in making the motion. When the bill was under the consideration of the Senate, I voted first for the amendment to reduce the amount to $10,000. That proposition was voted down, and then I had presented to me the question whether I should vote for the bill as it stood appropriating $30,000, or should give the claimant nothing? I thought, under all the circumstances, that it would be proper to give him the $30,000. But my reason for moving the reconsideration, and asking for the return of the bill from the House was, that the honorable Senator from Delaware, soon after the passage of the bill, expressed the opinion that he could satisfy the Senate, if an opportunity was given him, that this was an unjust claim.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the honorable Senator allow me to correct his statement?

Mr. BRIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. BAYARD. I certainly made no allegation of that kind. The honorable Senator misunderstood me. I told him I thought I could satisfy him as to his own individual vote, but I did not purpose to enter into the discussion of the matter before the Senate. I said afterwards that I should be willing to submit my views to the Senate, but in weather such as this, I cannot undertake to do it.

Mr. BRIGHT. I made the motion, as I supposed, for the accommodation of the Senator from Delaware, to give him an opportunity of showing the Senate that this bill was without foundation, and that the claimant was not entitled to any part of the amount proposed to be appropriated. I was prepared, if he had satisfied me of that fact, to vote against the bill. Certainly, I supposed, at the time I made the motion, and insisted upon the return of the bill, that the honorable Senator would avail himself of the opportunity afforded, and explain to the Senate the reason why he made the declaration that he did.

In the absence of any effort of that kind on his part, I feel authorized to vote for the bill, or rather I feel bound to move an amendment to appropriate $10,000 instead of $30,000. I believe, under the circumstances, that the claimant is entitled to something, but I do not believe that he is entitled to $30,000. I do not think that the proof in the case establishes the fact that he has expended that amount. I think that he was induced by a late Secretary of the Navy to make an expenditure in carrying on an experiment for the benefit of the Government, and that the impression was created upon his mind—I think the testimony warrants the conclusion—that if the experiment failed, and money was lost, it should be compensated for out of the public Treasury, and not out of his pocket. If I believed that the proof justified an appropriation of $30,000, I should not, under the circumstances, oppose it; but I do not think—and I have given the case, I may say, a careful examination—that an amount exceeding $15,000 ought to be appropriated; and as suggested by Senators around me, I will submit a motion that the bill be so amended as to appropriate $15,000.

Mr. BAYARD. I regret that the honorable Senator from Indiana misunderstood my conversation with him. It was purely personal. It had no relation to his action in the Senate. My experience here has convinced me that it is a very idle effort indeed to attempt to discuss before this body any question connected with a private claim, adverse to that claim. You speak to empty benches. That is not agreeable to me; but I should be willing to do it if I thought it would have any effect. My own experience is that it has no effect. I believe a system as corrupt and corrupting, as I consider the mode in which private bills are passed, to be, can be checked in two ways. One is, either by opposition to the individual cases, or, when you find the system has so far obtained a headway that opposition is useless, to let it go on, and it will become so odious, and so openly profligate, that the public sense of the country will utterly reject it. I have come to the conclusion, with the exception of those cases committed to me as a member of a committee to examine, that I do not mean to trouble myself with them, except as regards what is necessary for my own investigation, and vote in reference to the question before the Senate.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, I hope the amendment proposed by my colleague will not prevail.

Mr. BADGER. I will suggest that the amendment is not in order.

The PRESIDENT. The bill is not now in a condition to be amended. The question is, "Shall the bill pass?" and no amendment can be proposed unless by unanimous consent, or unless the vote by which it was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, be reconsidered.

Mr. PETTIT. Then I have a few remarks to make in regard to the bill. Years ago, while a member of the other House, I investigated this question. I then settled down in the clear conviction that the Government of the United States had injured this man, had done him a gross wrong. That $30,000 will not indemnify him, I am clearly of opinion. In addition to this, allow me to say that this matter, when we were both members of the other House, was especially in the care and charge and keeping of my immediate predecessor in the Senate, Hon. Charles W. Cathcart, who held a seat here a year ago last winter, by an appointment by the Governor, before I came on. I take occasion to say that there is no purer or better man in the country than that Mr. Cathcart. I take occasion further to say that there are very few minds possessed of more capacity to investigate and come to a right conclusion than his. I know that in the House, after full examination, he entertained no doubt of the justice and propriety of this appropriation. I know that it again came under his consideration, the short time, some six or seven weeks, during which he held his seat as my predecessor here. He investigated it again, and came to the same conclusion. I hold in my hand a letter from him, and ask the indulgence of the Senate while I read one clause from it. It is dated May 15, 1854:

"I bespeak your kind attention to his (Myerle's) case, assuring you that you will thereby be rendering an act of justice to a much injured and unfortunate man."

Yours, truly,

CHARLES W. CATHCART.

That is what he says in regard to this matter. I shall not take up the time of the Senate by referring to all the papers and the evidence in reference to the claim; but there is nothing that has impressed itself so clearly on my mind as that the Government, through its officers, has injured this man, and that $30,000 will not repay him for his loss. I cannot, therefore, believe, when I am sent here to do justice between the mass of the people, the Government—for they are the Government—and the individual members of that society, that I should vote for a less sum than $30,000, and I shall with great pleasure vote for that.

Mr. WELLER. I have but a word or two to say in regard to this claim. It is very seldom that I put myself to the trouble of investigating any of these private claims, unless they are referred to me as a member of a committee; but some years ago I did give myself the trouble to investigate this one. I have since read the testimony again; and I do regard it as one of the most just and equitable claims that has ever been presented to the Government. Whether that will secure its passage through Congress or not is a different question; because my experience as a legislator is, that unjust and iniquitous measures are much more apt to pass than a just and equitable one. But I assure the Senate, if they would take the trouble to investigate the merits of this claim, they would be satisfied that Mr. Myerle has sustained damage, in consequence of the contract made by a late Secretary of the Navy, to an amount far greater than $30,000. I have never known of a private claim presented here, for which it would afford me so much pleasure to vote, as for this bill as it now stands.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, when I first came to the Senate, I found the claim of David Myerle referred to the committee of which I was a member. I investigated it, as I thought, fully, and read the arguments which had been adduced against it in the House. I came to the conclusion that it ought not to be allowed. I entertained that opinion throughout the last session, and should have voted against it if it had come to a vote then. The claim would have passed on one of the last nights of the session, when it was brought forward by the honorable Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] who advocated it; but at that moment the Senator from Kentucky, not now a member of the Senate, [Mr. Underwood,] exposed to us a large pile of papers, to listen to the reading of which would have occupied hours. The Senator from North Carolina at once withdrew the claim. I saw that he had investigated it, and had come to the conclusion that it was a just one. It induced me, during the present session, to give it a more thorough examination. I believe I have examined every proof that has been produced on the subject, and I have come to the conclusion that it is a very just claim, and ought to be paid.

I have regarded Mr. Myerle, as I think the Senate must regard him, not as an ordinary contractor who, failing in the precise stipulation of his contract, is not to be paid, but as a special agent of the Government, employed to develop by experiment the great resources of the country for the uses of the Navy; and in doing so I am convinced that he has saved to this Government in the matter of water-rotted hemp, millions of dollars, whilst he has impoverished himself. We have the testimony of the Secretary of the Navy under whose direction it was done. His declaration is unequivocal; and I hardly think any man could investigate the claim without coming to the conclusion that Mr. Myerle sustained a loss—I will not say of $30,000, because when a man confers this amount of benefit on the country, I should hardly feel at liberty to quibble for a few dollars—but as the committee has reported $30,000 I am willing to vote for that amount.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not intend to go into a lengthy discussion of the merits of this claim; but I must say a few words in reply to the honorable Senator from Florida. He does not advance the general idea which seems to prevail, that this claim must rest upon the ground that the Government made a contract with Myerle, and failing to perform the contract on its part, that he is entitled to damages, which would of course be the profit which would have been made by the contract, if he had performed it. That is not the ground on which it is put by the committee, though it is in some measure thrown into it, and it is not the ground upon which the honorable Senator from Florida puts it.

The honorable Senator evidently considers Mr. Myerle as a special agent of the Government, employed for the purpose of introducing water-rotted hemp for the benefit of the Navy of the United States. Sir, if that were the ground upon which it is put, it would be to me a sufficient objection to the claim, because I know of no authority, nor shall I be willing to sanction the act, upon the part of an Executive officer, to assume legislative powers, and undertake, upon the idea that any particular manufacture, or any particular project, or any view of his own, would be beneficial to the country, to transcend his powers, and to appoint special agents without authority of law.

I should not consider that these special agents had any claim on this Government for remuneration, whether the project succeeded or failed, because the doctrine would be a very dangerous one. It is very certain, on an examination of the papers in this case, that all Mr. Paulding supposed he had a right to do, was to apply to Congress for authority, in making a contract with David Myerle, to go beyond the ordinary routine of contracts, and make an advance of twenty-five per cent. before the work to be performed was done. That was done with a view of encouragement. A bill passed the Senate, but failed in the House, and he, therefore, had not even that authority. Did he pretend, or did the papers show that he pretended to appoint him a special agent? No, he made a contract with him for a certain amount of water-rotted hemp. How, then, can he raise a claim against the United States Government, founded on the idea of his appointment as a special agent, which would have been a gross violation of duty on the part of the Executive officer? He would have been sanctioning an act which I should be very unwilling to sanction in reference to the course of the Executive officer of this Government. It is in that mode that all abuses come in.

Into the subject of the contract I shall not enter; nor shall I allude to the other objections which I have to this claim. Other Senators have expressed their opinions; suffice it to say that I shall express mine.

After examining the case, certainly with no prejudice against the party, with entire ignorance of him individually, and after hearing the report of the committee read, it struck me that it was confused, and that it placed the claim on no known principle. Subsequently to its passage, and when the reconsideration was moved, I examined the papers, and I confess the conclusion I arrived at was, that, as far as the Government is concerned, there is no shadow of a claim upon it in favor of Mr. Myerle; and, further, it left a doubt in my mind whether he was or was not actually an injured man, or rather whether his pecuniary affairs had been injured by the transactions into which he entered.

There is no specific proof of the extent of property which he possessed, although there is no doubt that he failed in the business in which he embarked. But when the adverse opinions of Senators, some of them not now here, are expressed, their convictions in reference to the claim, allow me to say, must have some weight with me. According to your opinions, Mr. President, derived from your constituents in the State of Missouri, when you first presented a bill in regard to this claim in the Senate, as I understood, in your State, the presentation of the claim was universally condemned, and denounced as one in which there was no merit.

Mr. PETTIT. I would like to refer the Senator to at least fifty letters from farmers in Missouri, avowing that he has merit.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the Senator will allow me to go on. He has made his remarks; I will make mine. I am perfectly aware that there are letters. Those letters are but opinions. There are opinions on both sides. There are opinions in favor of the merits of this man in introducing the method of manufacturing water-rotted-hemp. There are opinions very probably from fifty farmers. The number may be less, they may be more. I do not stand upon the number. They are opinions, no doubt, of respectable men, though personally unknown to me. They are on one side, and what they say are but opinions.

On the other side, Mr. President, I have your own statement of what you told me was the general opinion in the State of Missouri, which you discovered on your return there after having presented the claim. And, sir, the gentleman who was formerly your colleague in this body, [Mr. BENTON,] and who, I believe, does not perfectly accord with you in sentiment on most questions, on this has very decided opinions. It was my fortune, just after this case was discussed, in walking down towards the avenue, to fall into conversation with him, and this subject was mentioned, he knowing what had been done in the Senate. I asked him in reference to the claim. His answer was: "Sir, he is an impostor; he has no merits whatever in reference to the transactions; he is trying to take merits which belong to other persons; he never introduced the culture of this article into Kentucky or Missouri."

With these conflicting opinions, the idea that occurred to my mind was, that, in order to give me sufficient evidence to warrant any compensation to the party, grounded upon the great benefit conferred upon the country, but more particularly upon the States of Missouri and Kentucky, or any other State which is a hemp-growing State, those States where this division of opinion occurred, as they are composed of a generous people, of an intelligent people, should have furnished to us resolutions vindicating his title to having conferred so great a benefit upon his country.

Sir, if the fact were true, there can be no doubt that the Legislature of Kentucky or Missouri would have passed such a resolution. But I have no such evidence of the general opinion of those States; and when I find balanced opinions among individual men as to the existence of any merit at all on the part of the claimant, as to whether he rendered any services at all, or whether he did not impose himself upon the country as having rendered services which were, in fact, rendered by others, I cannot undertake to vote the money out of the Treasury of the United States.

It is exactly in that point of view, if you go upon the ground of benefit conferred, that the testimony which I have seen puts my mind into a state of doubt. The claimant may or may not have rendered services. If he did, it is in his power to prove his case. I am perfectly satisfied that this is so. If the case is one of undoubted merit, as has been alleged, there can be reason assigned why long since the Legislatures of those States which have had the peculiar benefit arising from the introduction of the water-rotting of hemp, should not have testified to the country and to Congress their sense of the merits of the individual who has performed that service. On these grounds, stated very briefly, I am opposed to the claim.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have effected in part the object I had in view in moving the reconsideration. It has drawn a speech from the honorable Senator from Delaware. I can say to him I concur generally in the views he has expressed, that there is no legal liability on the part of the United States to pay a dollar of this money. Whatever may be allowed the claimant, must be allowed on the principles of equity and justice. The Secretary of the Navy had at no time authority to enter into a contract with this individual. It was an assumption on his part, that in the event the experiment he proposed making, through his agent, succeeded, the Government would remunerate him for his labor; and that if he failed, they would, to a certain extent, remunerate him for his losses and expenses. Legally speaking, this individual has no claim whatever against the Government. It is a mere question of equity, whether the United States will compensate him in part for the expenses which he incurred in making that experiment. I have in my hand a report made at the first session of the Twenty-Eighth Congress, by Mr. Henderson, then a Senator from Mississippi, in which he elaborates the case fully, and winds up the report with this resolution, "that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted;" and I find, by reference to the Journal, that it was generally concurred in by the Senate. I will call the attention of the Senate to the concluding part of the report. He says:

"Whether the memorialist may have had some cause to consider himself badly used by the Executive Department, in the refusal to grant him an extension of his contract, or in not properly appreciating his claims to the place of hemp agent, under the resolution of Congress of January, 1843, the committee have not seen fit to inquire. They observe, however, by a letter from the Navy Commissioners to the Secretary of the Navy, of date 28th January, 1842, that state: 'Mr. Myerle has made no deliveries under either of his engagements worth notice; nor has he yet given the requisite security for the faithful performance of his contract.' And the more recent communication of the chairman of this committee, from the chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, expresses the opinion, as entertained by the commissioners, that Mr. Myerle's neglect to give bond and security, as required in all such cases, and his failure to deliver the hemp according to his stipulations, left him without rightful claim upon the Government for any remuneration for his alleged losses."

This seems to have been the opinion, at the time, of the chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, who had this branch of the public service in charge, and who, it is reasonable to conclude, knew all about the facts of the case. This report sustains the position taken by the honorable Senator from Delaware, in which I concur, that there is no legal liability whatever on the part of the United States. Whatever we allow is a gratuity; but, under all the circumstances, I am willing, (so far as the proof goes to establish the fact that this individual expended money) to reimburse him. The claimant, I believe, is a citizen of Kentucky or Missouri; at any rate, he is vibrating between these two States. I recollect that, when the claim was originally introduced, it was opposed by both the Senators from Missouri, [Mr. ARCHISON and Mr. BENTON,] It has never had the sanction of the Legislatures of either of the States where the claimant resided. As was properly remarked by the honorable Senator from Delaware, if he were a public benefactor, and if he had conferred such general benefit on those States, why did they neglect his interests, and not enforce them, and commend them to the sanction of Congress?

Mr. President, I am willing to vote for a small appropriation to this individual as an equitable claim; but I cannot vote to allow him $30,000. I do not concur with the Senator from California, that the unjust claims which are presented here are more likely to pass than those which are just. That is an illiberal view, I think, of our mode of legislation. It is the duty of every Senator to scan closely the claims which come here, private or public, and see that money is not improperly taken from the public Treasury. Sir, to oppose private claims is a very thankless office; but it is nevertheless a duty which prompts many of us to do that which we would gladly avoid. I dislike very much to oppose the claim. I know the appeal which has been made from time to time to pass it; but I feel a sense of duty incumbent on me not to vote for the bill in its present shape. I wish to reduce the amount; and, therefore, as the bill in its present stage is not open to amendment, I move to reconsider the vote by which it was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. My object is to move to strike out $30,000 and insert $15,000.

Mr. BADGER. Is that motion to reconsider in order?

The PRESIDENT. Most assuredly.

Mr. GWIN. The vote on ordering the bill to be engrossed was taken three or four weeks ago.

The PRESIDENT. One vote has been reconsidered.

Mr. BADGER. The vote that the bill pass has been reconsidered.

Mr. PETTIT. If I understand my colleague, he moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill was engrossed, so as to get it open to amendment.

Mr. BRIGHT. The Senate this morning reconsidered the vote passing the bill. I believe, however, it is not yet open to amendment.

The PRESIDENT. It is not, without reconsidering the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed. The Chair is of opinion that the vote on the passage of the bill having been reconsidered, this motion of the Senator from Indiana does not come within the rule requiring a motion to reconsider to be made within three days. The motion is therefore in order.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed, so that my amendment may be in order. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Bright, Brodick, Chase, Clay, Clayton, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gillette, Hamlin, Hunter, Mason, Sidel, Stuart, and Sumner—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Brown, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Fish, Gwin, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Norris, Pettit, Rockwell, Seward, Thompson of Kentucky, Wade, Weller, and Williams—18.

So the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is "Shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading?" It is open to amendment.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move to amend by striking out "$30,000" and inserting "$15,000." On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GWIN. I do not intend to discuss the matter, but I will say, that the success of the amendment of the Senator from Indiana is equivalent to the defeat of the bill, and I hope its friends will vote against the amendment.

Mr. BRIGHT. In reply to that, I will state that it gives $15,000, a handsome sum for nothing.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator and myself happen to differ in regard to that matter. I think the claimant is entitled to $30,000. If we give him any relief, we should give him what he is entitled to.

The question being taken by yeas and nays upon the amendment, resulted—yeas 20, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Bright, Chase, Clay, Clayton, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gillette, Hamlin, Hunter, James, Sidel, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, and Williams—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Brown, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Fish, Gwin, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Norris, Pettit, Rockwell, Seward, Wade, and Weller—17.

So the amendment was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was read a third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

During the discussion of the bill for the relief of David Myerle, a message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that the House had non-concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the resolution of the House in reference to the adjournment of the present Congress.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senate will suspend the consideration of this bill for a moment, and take up the message from the House and act upon it.

Mr. STUART. I object.

Mr. GWIN. Then we will pass this bill first. Subsequently, the Senate, on motion by Mr. GWIN, insisted on its amendment, providing for a recess from July 17, to October 16, and asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and the Chair appointed Messrs. GWIN, SIDELL, and FISH the committee.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Senate meet hereafter at nine o'clock, a. m.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. CLAY, by unanimous consent, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to constitute Tusculum, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COLONEL JOHN ANDERSON.

Mr. STUART. I appeal to the Senate now to take up a bill which was reported from the Committee on Claims, "for the relief of the legal representatives of the late Colonel John Anderson," which has been pending for a long time.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to examine and adjust the claim of the legal representatives of the late Colonel John Anderson, of Michigan, for a house or other buildings destroyed by the enemy during the last war with Great Britain, in consequence of the occupancy of those buildings by the troops of the United States, and to pay the amount found to be due; but no allowance is to be made for personal property, and the amount paid is not to exceed $3,000.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask for the reading of the report in this case, and then I wish also to have read the antecedent report of the same committee of the Senate, adverse to the case.

The Secretary read the report made by the Committee on Claims at the present session, from which it appears that the claim has been long before Congress, and several adverse reports have been made upon it, on the ground that the buildings were not destroyed till some time after they had ceased to be occupied by the American troops. The property was situated at Frenchtown, on the river Raisin, and, soon after the commencement of the war of 1812, was taken possession of by Quartermaster Reid, and made a depository for military stores of the United States. In August the place was surrendered to the British, a drum and some muskets being left in the house; and it appears to have been occupied by them until the approach of General Winchester, when the enemy retired, leaving the house still standing. On the defeat of General Winchester, Colonel Anderson's house was again occupied by the British and Indians; and they continued to occupy it until June, 1813, when, being compelled to evacuate the place, they set fire to it and destroyed it, stating, as the reason for doing so, that the place had been used for a military depository, and as barracks for the American troops, and that that justified their destruction, to prevent their being so used again.

By the evidence, as formerly presented, it did not appear that the place had been occupied by the American troops during the time that General Winchester's forces held the town, and after it had been occupied by the enemy and abandoned by them without being destroyed. But it appears from the testimony now submitted, that it was occupied by a portion of a company of spies and rangers in the American service up to the time of, and during the action which resulted in the defeat of General Winchester. It appears to have been then immediately reoccupied by the enemy, who, after some delay, destroyed it.

When the case was submitted to the Third Auditor, under the act of 1825, the ground of objection, as stated by him, was, that the buildings were not destroyed till some time after they had ceased to be occupied by the American troops. But it appears that the American troops did not cease to occupy them until they were driven out by the enemy. If the enemy had proceeded to destroy them at once, it would seem to be a case clearly within the rules heretofore recognized; and the committee do not perceive that their having delayed the destruction so long, and only so long as suited their own convenience, can justly exclude the claimants from the indemnity to which they would have otherwise been clearly entitled.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish only to state, that it appears this claim came before the Senate of the United States not on the report of a committee, but on a House bill for the relief of the party, at the first session of the Fifteenth Congress, and that then it was rejected by the vote of the Senate. I cannot see how we can ascertain the facts, or apply the principles of relief to those facts, as to remote transactions, any better now than the Senate could then. I think that a decision of this kind—not the report of a committee, but the decision of the Senate itself—ought to be entitled to some weight, particularly when I have often heard the reports of committees here spoken of as sufficient to justify the passage of a bill. Further, I may say that I think, within the last four years this claim was again before the Senate, and an adverse report was made on it by, I believe, the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. NORRIS.] I think so, but it is not on the list, for it seems that it was not printed. I do not pretend to go into the particular circumstances of this case; I only state these general facts.

Mr. STUART. The report which has just been read shows distinctly why the decision of the committee, at this day, was contrary to the decision of the Senate at a former period. The committee state that additional evidence was furnished to them satisfactorily to prove that the very point upon which the Senate rejected it before was an error. The Senate rejected the claim on the ground that there was no evidence to show that the property was destroyed, because it was occupied by the troops of the country; but the committee say that the evidence is now satisfactory to prove that fact. That is the very point of the case.

Mr. BAYARD. I know, Mr. President, that that is the mode in which these bills are managed here, and I have exposed it before. Here is a transaction which occurred forty years ago, and the men of that day investigated the matter immediately, or shortly after the transaction occurred. At the first session of the Fifteenth Congress, the claim was under consideration, and rejected. Now, this committee can know nothing more of what was then before the Senate, and what discussion was then had in the Senate, than we ourselves. The Senate, on a vote, deliberately rejected the claim when the transaction was recent, and when the party had full means of presenting his claim, and when the principles connected with this class of claims, and the fact necessary to be proved, were as well known as they can be now. I know not what is evidence in this particular case; but I understand the whole of this doctrine of "additional evidence." It means that the party, at a late day, comes in with some hearsay testimony—for it cannot be anything else at this lapse of time—of some person who swears in such a manner as to vary the facts of the case. I am not willing to take such evidence as countervailing testimony, obtained when the transaction was recent.

I have not examined the facts and circumstances of this special case, and I do not mean to do it. I have read the former adverse report of the committee, and that satisfies me. It seems to me, that when a claim of this character on the Government was made, and there was insufficient evidence to sustain it at a time when the facts were recent, and the party had ample means of knowing what he would be required to prove, we should not now reopen it. The law was general, and the facts necessary to be proved were as well known then as now, and I say the proof then was not sufficient to sustain the case, and, on a formal vote, the Senate rejected the claim. Common justice to the public requires that we should adhere to that decision as final.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, as I have a personal knowledge of many of these facts, and know more about them, probably, than any man now living, the Senate will excuse me if I make a brief statement. I knew the father of these petitioners very well, and a more true and patriotic American never lived. In the face of a solemn capitulation he was driven from the country by the British the moment they got possession, and never returned until he returned with the conquering American Army. His house was a very convenient one. It was occupied successively by the British and by the American troops. You cannot carry the strict principles of civilized warfare into the circumstances connected with that frontier, where the English and the Indians were fighting in coalition against the American troops. It is totally impossible. This House, as I say, was convenient, and it was occupied by the American troops and by the British troops three or four times successively.

Now, what is the simple fact of the case? The house was occupied by one after the other, until finally, in 1813, on the return of the American Army, the British, who then occupied it, burned it. It is palpable to me, as they did not burn other buildings there, that they burned this house because it had been a continued fortification, and because it had been in the continued possession of the British and American armies during the hostilities on the frontier. No doubt they looked upon it, at the time of the burning, as a building belonging, in fact, to the American Government, because it had been occupied by the American troops, and they burned it in consequence of that occupation. That is the true state of the case. This man was obnoxious to the British on account of his patriotism. Surely, the Senate will not make that a reason for not paying his children; I know his exertions and services; and I say here, in my place, and no man living knows the fact better than I do, that there never were a people who, under such trials and difficulties, asserted their attachment to the American Union more strongly than those who lived on that frontier, in the face of the overwhelming force of the English and Indians who swept the country, and took everything from us; yet they have received almost nothing. This is one of the very few cases that come almost within the most stringent principles of relief. I hope the Senate will pass the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not wish to comment on this particular case, for I have no remarks to make upon it, except to state that there was an adverse report on the occasion to which I referred, and that at an early day the bill was rejected by the Senate. I wish to mention a fact in connection with this matter. I stated to the Senate, when I opposed one of these claims for spoiliations by the British during the war of 1812, which was subsequently passed, that the committee of the House of Representatives appointed for the purpose of inquiring into the propriety of extending the general laws of 1816 and 1817, which provided for the payment of these claims, reported against it on the ground that already, at that early day, frauds under those acts had become so extensive that it would be better for the general morals of the people even to have some just cases go unpaid than to persist in continuing those laws. In looking into the testimony on which that report was based, I found the wildest system of fraud, on this very frontier, that has ever existed, I venture to say, in this or any other country. One fact alone, which I will mention, goes to show how far it extended.

A captain who had been in the regular Army of the United States was afterward appointed a judge of the court of common pleas in New York. It was proved incontestibly, that he used to sign affidavits by the ream, and let them go out to the confederates to write over them what names they pleased, and what statements they pleased, in order to prove losses incurred by the enemy or by the acts of our own troops. That was one of the general facts proved in the case. There were many others of the same character. If any Senator will take the trouble to investigate the testimony given at that time in relation to those frauds, he will be satisfied that it is humanly impossible to suppose that parties, who were not able to establish, by fair and sufficient testimony, their claims at the time when the transactions occurred, (when there was quite as much willingness to pay as there can be now,) should be paid at this time, when we have no means whatever of testing the accuracy or the truth of the sources on which they rest their claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. SIDNEY WEBSTER, his Secretary, announcing that, on the 29th instant, he had approved and signed the following bills, which had originated in the Senate:

- An act for the relief of James Jeffries and Jeremiah M. Smith;
- An act for the relief of Ira Day, of Vermont;
- An act to reimburse to the Common Council of New York city expenditures made for the first regiment of New York volunteers;
- An act confirming certain land claims in Louisiana in the Bastrop grant;
- An act to authorize the issue of registers to vessels owned by the Accessory Transit Company;
- An act for the relief of Priscilla Simonds;
- An act for the relief of Moses Olmstead;
- An act for the relief of Zadoc C. Inghram;
- An act for the relief of Llewellyn Washington; and

A joint resolution giving the consent of Congress to the acceptance, by Lieutenant M. F. Maury, of the Navy, of a gold medal from his Majesty the King of Sweden.

GENERAL NATHANIEL GREENE.

Mr. EVANS. I did not propose to ask the Senate to depart from the regular order of business; but as they have already done it in one case, I ask the consent of the Senate to take up and consider now the bill reported from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims "for the relief of Phineas M. Nightingale, administrator of the estate of General Nathaniel Greene, deceased."

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mr. Nightingale, as administrator of the estate of General Greene, $9,018 63, with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum from July 6, 1850, until paid, in liquidation of a balance due to the estate of General Greene for becoming security for Banks & Co., Army contractors in the Revolution.

Mr. BELL. I move to amend the bill by striking out 1850 and inserting 1794, so as to allow interest from 1794 until the money be paid. This, sir, is not like those cases in which the Senate have adopted the stringent rule of not paying interest. It is not like the case of commutation or half pay to the officers of the revolutionary army. It is a case which, perhaps, is without precedent. So far as I know, it is altogether without precedent. This is not a proposition to compensate General Greene for revolutionary services, meritorious as his were, but for the sacrifice of his own private property incurred by becoming the surety of the United States officers in supplying the armies of the South at a most perilous and exigent period of the revolution. If the Senate of the United States say that that is a case which should come within the common rule of not paying interest, I shall not have another word to say. Let me repeat, however, that this is a proposition not to compensate the heirs of General Greene for his revolutionary services, but to indemnify them for the sacrifice of his own property, as the surety, I may say, of the Government, in laying in supplies for the subsistence of the armies. The contractors were unable to furnish supplies for the Army without General Greene's personal obligation to pay, and he agreed, by his own signature, to indorse the credit of the Confederation of the United States for the amount of supplies that might be furnished.

If I supposed that honorable Senators here could concur in the sentiment that this was a case which should come within the common rule, I would not offer this amendment. I know the committee have proposed to give this indemnity under the restriction of the ordinary rule, but I say this is not an ordinary or a common case. This is not the kind of case in regard to which the Congress of the United States have laid down the principle that they will pay no interest. This, sir, was an obligation on the part of this Government to indemnify General Greene. He had to make the sacrifice of his own property in order to pay this debt, which was not his own debt, but the debt of the Government of the United States. Is that an ordinary case?

Congress, in 1792, passed a bill for the relief of General Greene. They did it under certain anticipations, which have not been realized. It so turned out that the amount which Congress at that time agreed to appropriate was not sufficient. From that time until this claim was presented—an interval of nearly sixty years—the question was in litigation, whether certain real estate situated in South Carolina, was actually liable for the payment of this debt. It was property taken as collateral security by General Greene, to indemnify himself against this obligation, and the Government of the United States, in the act of 1792, provided that the amount realized from it should be deducted from the indemnity to him. I believe there have been sixty years of litigation about it.

Mr. EVANS. It was fifty years from the time of the sale until the final decree of the court of equity.

Mr. BELL. Then there were fifty years of litigation till this claim was presented here. At all events, it was only a short time before the claim was presented that the litigation was determined; and it was not known until within a very short period before the presentation of the claim, whether that property was really liable for the debt or not. By the adjudication of the courts of South Carolina, it was decided that it was not so liable, and this application was delayed until this late period, merely because it could not be known with certainty, till within a few years ago, that there was any liability on the part of the Government to indemnify the heirs of General Greene for this residuum. That accounts satisfactorily for the delay. But still, sir, this is a case sui generis. It stands on its own footing. It rests on no principle applicable to the general class of cases on which Congress have decided that they will pay no interest.

Sir, is it just to refuse interest in this case, when we consider the generous, the liberal, even the bountiful spirit of the Government in making compensation to the revolutionary officers and soldiers, and to the officers and soldiers of every war which has taken place from the period of the Revolution to this day? We have been generous, liberal, and bountiful in voting both lands and money, as a general rule, even for slight military services. Here is a case presented for actual losses, sacrifices of private property incurred on account of becoming surety of the Government when it was without credit, and when the march of the very expedition in which General Greene was then engaged depended on procuring immediate subsistence for his troops; and he pledged his private fortune, and has had to sacrifice it. I merely present this as a question whether you will pay interest in such a case, or not. I see, however, that it is not the disposition of the Senate to have any protracted discussion on questions of this description, and I submit.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, this is a meritorious claim; but at the same time it rests on the same footing in regard to the allowance of interest as a hundred other cases which have been acted on in the Senate. The facts are these: Whilst General Greene commanded the American troops in Charleston, in 1782 and 1783, he found great difficulty in supplying them with clothing and provisions. He entered into an agreement with Banks & Co., who contracted to furnish the supplies necessary; but upon their own credit they could not do it. General Greene, therefore, was compelled, in order to procure these supplies, to put his name to the bond which was given to the persons from whom the supplies were furnished. An order was given by General Greene upon Mr. Morris, who was the treasurer in Philadelphia, for the payment of this amount, and it was paid. The Government of the United States paid it to the contractor for whom General Greene was security; but he, instead of applying the money to the payment of this debt, appropriated it to other purposes, and left the bond on which General Greene was security unpaid. The result was, that General Greene was liable, and subsequently did pay the debt, and in the year 1791 his executrix petitioned Congress to be relieved. In the mean time, however, General Greene had obtained some security from a man by the name of Ferrie, who was one of the partners of the firm of Banks & Co., by a mortgage, or lien of some sort, on a tract of land; but this land was liable to a prior mortgage of £1,000 sterling to a man in England by the name of Murray. In 1788, after the death of General Greene, I believe, the mortgagor in England filed his bill to foreclose the mortgage. General Greene's family about the same time instituted proceedings against Ferrie, who was entitled to the reversionary interest in the land. Upon the bearing of the case, the court ordered that the land should be sold, and the proceeds of the sale applied, first to the extinguishment of the mortgage, and then that the balance should go to General Greene. The land was sold. It brought enough to pay the mortgage, and left £2,400 over and above it, which was applicable to General Greene's claim. Well, sir, when General Greene applied to the Government to be reimbursed, Congress agreed to indemnify him for this loss which he had sustained. The Government, however, had already paid the amount, and it was not a legal obligation on them. General Greene was not their security; he was security for an army agent. On the settlement of this claim of General Greene's, however, this sum of £2,400 was deducted. Nothing was heard of this matter from that time until about 1840.

Mr. BELL. Nothing heard by this Government?

Mr. EVANS. Nothing heard of it anywhere, so far as I know, or so far as there is any evidence, until some time within a year or two of 1840. Then, it appeared, upon investigation, that the creditor in England had never been paid, and his administrator filed a bill in chancery to subject this land to the payment of his money; and then it turned out, too, that his agent who had bought the land had never taken title. The alleged ground upon which he had not taken title was that there was a dispute about the land. For this reason, the title had never been perfected and the money never paid. That bill was dismissed, because it appeared, from the original decree made in 1788, or thereabouts, that General Greene's representatives had an interest in it. Another bill was filed, and then General Greene's representatives were made parties, and that is the first time anything was known of this case, so far as they were concerned. During the lapse of time from 1789, when the land was sold, up to 1840, this plantation had gone to ruin; and when it was subsequently sold under the original decree, instead of bringing the sum it at first brought, it was sold for only $13,000, and left General Greene's representatives only about $2,000 instead of £2,400. Their application now is to be refunded the difference between the £2,400 and the sum they actually received, which was less than $2,000.

Mr. BELL. I wish to ask the honorable Senator whether the title to this property was not in litigation from an early period?

Mr. EVANS. There was no litigation about it. It was in dispute; but there was no litigation, so far as General Greene's heirs ever took any participation in it. The land was abandoned; third persons set up claims to it. There was a claim set up by the heir-at-law of the original mortgagor; but there was no proceeding in any court, and no notice taken of it, until about 1840.

Mr. BELL. Does the honorable Senator mean that no case was pending in the courts of South Carolina during that time?

Mr. EVANS. I say no case was pending with which General Greene's heirs had anything to do, and there was never any case pending in court in relation to this land until 1830, which was forty years after the original sale, when the administrator of Murray filed a bill against a Mr. Daniel, who was in possession of the land.

Mr. BELL. As I understand it, it was in litigation from as early as 1788 or 1789. There was then a decree for the sale, and the property was sold.

Mr. EVANS. But there was no litigation.

Mr. BELL. That was in a suit at chancery; but the money was not paid, and there was not a finality to that proceeding until after 1840. General Greene died previous to that original sale, as I understand.

Mr. EVANS. I believe he did.

Mr. BELL. He died in 1787 or 1788. As I understand the case, there was no settlement of that sale; there was no final decree; the money was not paid between the parties, but there were two or three who claimed the property at different times, and there was no final settlement until 1840, or thereabouts.

Mr. EVANS. There was a final decree in 1789, I think it was. The commissioner then reported that the land had been sold for so much, and the court decreed that Murray's mortgage of £1,000 should be paid, and that the balance, afterwards ascertained to be £2,400, should be paid to the representatives of General Greene. That was a final proceeding; but the then purchaser never took title, and never paid the money. His pretext for not doing it was, that the title was disputed. It turned out that there was a claim set up to it, but that the claim was utterly worthless; and it was proved to be so at the end.

Mr. BELL. That was finally settled in 1840, or thereabouts.

Mr. EVANS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BELL. General Greene was dead during the whole period of this transaction. The act of Congress for his relief was passed in 1792. It was based upon that decree for the sale of this land; and the sum to which he was entitled under that original decree, £2,400, was excepted out of the indemnity allowed him at that time, not one cent of which did his heirs ever receive except $2,000.

Mr. EVANS. I think it was something less than $2,000.

Mr. BELL. On the final settlement of the case in 1840, it appeared that, at that late period, his estate was only entitled to nearly $2,000 out of that fund. The major part went to pay a prior lien. Now, the honorable Senator says that General Greene was not the surety of the Government, and the Government is not legally responsible, because he was only security for an Army officer, for example, the commissary of purchases, or whoever was authorized to furnish supplies to the Army. General Greene became his surety upon what I understand to be an indisputed fact, that without his name the purchases could not have been made. That is admitted.

Mr. EVANS. That is the evidence.

Mr. BELL. As the Senator suggests, that is proved by the evidence, yet now the assumption is, that this was no debt of the Government, and it is upon that legal technicality that the claim for interest is resisted.

Sir, I do not know whether the honorable Senator from South Carolina is acquainted with the sacrifices which were made by General Greene; but I understand they were very great; and the other day, I heard great praise bestowed in this Chamber on the liberality and generosity of South Carolina to General Greene, in consequence of his military services in the South. As I understand the case, every cent of the bounty allowed him in 1792 was swept away to pay this surety debt to the Government of the United States—not to the Government directly, but to the officer of the Government, who otherwise would not have been able to purchase the supplies necessary for the support of the Army. It is true that General Greene was not the surety of the Government, but the surety of the proper officer of the Government, and it is not denied that, without his becoming responsible for those purchases, they could not have been made.

Now, sir, under these circumstances, will the Senate say that they regard this as an ordinary claim against the Government? When the representatives of General Greene first presented their claim in 1792, the Government recognized its justice, and made, as was then supposed, ample provision for its payment. It turned out, however, that it was not sufficient. The question is, whether you will pay interest for the sacrifices made of General Greene's property in 1794, or whether you will put this in the ordinary class of claims, and say that the Government is always able to pay its debts, and should pay no interest. That is the issue.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I shall vote with a great deal of pleasure for adding to the amount mentioned in this bill the interest proposed to be granted by the amendment. For one, sir, I shall not stop to inquire whether it can be claimed upon strict technical principles, such as would be enforced in courts of law or in courts of equity. It is sufficient for me to know that the original sum is an equitable demand; that, in my opinion, the Government ought never to have allowed General Greene to incur one penny of expenditure, or sustain one penny of loss, on account of the particular responsibility which he had assumed. This is no ordinary claim. It is a claim for no ordinary person. Who was General Greene, sir? Well, sir, he was a man who ought to be held dear to the hearts of every portion of the American people. Coming from the extreme northeast, and leading our armies in the most trying and arduous period of the Revolution, through the southern country, he has, by his services, shed a glory upon the whole country, and illustrated his military career with a distinction second only to that of Washington.

Now, sir, when this question is moved, shall we trouble ourselves, in making full and ample remuneration and indemnity, by inquiring about precedents? Are we afraid that cases of this character will arise in such numbers as to bankrupt the Treasury? Sir, we need have no fear of that kind. When will you have again such a man as General Greene before you, through his representatives and children, to ask anything of this Government? We shall not have such a man once in a century. I hope the Senate will vote not only the principal, but the interest; that they will say at once, "We do not settle with him or his children as would a Shylock; we do not undertake to insist on applying to him what may be the rules we should apply to ordinary men who traffic with the Government for purposes of pecuniary advantage or profit; but we settle with him in a spirit of grateful liberality, to which his devoted patriotism and glorious services eminently entitle him, and make up to his family, by a full and generous indemnity, all the losses which he or they have sustained." The case stands free of all difficulty in regard to precedent. It is by itself. It has no parallel in the past, and it will have none in the future. I do hope, therefore, that the Senate will add the interest to the principal sum mentioned in the bill; and clear the escutcheon of the nation from the stain of leaving anything unpaid to which this gallant chieftain, this noble patriot and benefactor of his country, through his children, may be supposed to have any species of claim.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I would be among the last to depreciate, in the slightest degree, the debt of gratitude which we owe to General Greene; but the only question here is, whether we shall depart, in this case, from the uniform practice upon which our legislation has proceeded? General Greene's representatives knew many years ago that they had not got this money. They made no effort to get it. In the mean time the money was lying in the Treasury. This, therefore, so far as I can comprehend, is like all other cases where demands exist against the Government. I take the rule to be, (and it is that rule upon which the Committee on Revolutionary Claims has acted,) that a valid claim against the Government is like a debt payable on demand, and that, until the demand is made, it does not bear interest. Now, this debt, which was originally about $10,000, according to the computation contained in the memorial which was presented, including interest, amounts to $58,000. If the Senate are prepared to establish a new rule, very well. If they are disposed to adhere to the old one, I am willing to vote for the bill as it is.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I rise merely to say to my friend from South Carolina, that the proposition to pay interest in this case is not without precedent. It is not two years since, in settling with the heirs of De Neuffville, a German merchant, who made advances to the Government during the Revolution, we went back and paid interest from the day when the money was loaned, to the period of settlement—an interval of more than seventy-five years. That bill passed both Houses, and De Neuffville's heirs got the money. The interest was nearly five times as much as the principal. That was as much like this as two cases can be like each other—except that General Greene paid as our security, and the other man advanced the money out of his own pocket.

Mr. BADGER. Will my friend allow me to suggest another difference? General Greene was a native, and the other was a foreigner.

Mr. BROWN. There is another difference too, I will say to my friend from South Carolina. When De Neuffville made advances, he did so for profit. He was a speculator on the Government, but still it was an accommodation to our forefathers to get the money, even on those terms. Yet, seventy-five years afterwards, when three quarters of a century had passed away, one of his heirs in the third or fourth generation came here and asked interest at the hands of Congress. Congress passed a bill allowing it. There was scarcely a dispute in the Senate about it; and the whole sum, principal and interest, was paid over.

Mr. SLIDELL. Probably they did not know interest was to be paid.

Mr. BROWN. They did know it. They first passed a separate bill for the payment of the principal, and then, not feeling that they had done justice, they went to work the next year and passed a bill allowing the interest. I know all about it, because the claim came here from my own State.

Now, I wish to know if we are going to deal less justly with a native born American, who, as has been said by the honorable Senator from North Carolina, occupied the next most conspicuous place in the army to General Washington himself? Are we going to deal less liberally with his heirs than we have with the heirs of a foreign German banker? I thought it was right to pay De Neuffville's heirs, and to pay them interest. I think it is infinitely more right to pay the heirs of General Greene, principal and interest. I would not even cut them off with six per cent. I would pay them liberally. I have no idea that there are ever going to be any more General Greenses, though the Government should last for two thousand years. You may have plenty of Greens, but you will have no more Nat. Greenses.

Mr. DIXON. I was a member of the committee that reported this bill to the Senate, and I concurred in reporting the bill as it stands, although I confess I believed at the time, as I now believe, that interest ought to be allowed for the whole period. In assenting to the report as made, I was influenced solely by the consideration that the Government had not been in the habit of allowing interest on such claims. I have considered the matter now, and I have brought my judgment to the conclusion, in accordance with the feelings of my own heart, that I cannot, merely on the ground that the Government has failed to do justice in other cases, refuse to do justice in this case which appeals so loudly to the sense of right of the country.

Sir, there is a bill pending in the Senate by which it is proposed that we shall make donations of the public lands to those who have no claims whatever upon our bounty. By that bill we are to give to all the persons who come from a distance, from foreign countries, quarter sections of land, merely upon consideration that they will settle upon them, though they have no claims whatever on our bounty. When those who assisted in achieving the independence of our country, who expended their fortunes in a cause, dear not only to the American people, but to the world—making sacrifices such as no men, perhaps, under any circumstances, made before—appeal to the Congress of the United States, or when their heirs appeal to the Congress of the United States to do them justice, to remunerate them for the losses which they sustained in that great struggle for human liberty, we turn coldly from them, and say, we ought not to do this, because it has not been the practice of the Government to do it. If this Government has been in the habit of doing wrong, if it has been in the habit of withholding what it ought to have given, it is time that it should change its policy; it is time that it should act on high principles of justice. I will therefore vote for the amendment to allow interest.

Mr. EVANS. I have no particular wishes about this matter, but as one of the committee, I have reported this bill as I have reported all others. If, however, the Senate are prepared to establish a different rule, I only desire to say, that I have four or five cases which should be made to conform to it, and in which interest ought to be allowed, if it be allowed here.

The question being taken; upon a division there was found to be no quorum voting.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the yeas and nays. I am desirous that the bill shall pass to-day, and I know Senators are about the Capitol, and can soon be brought in.

Mr. STUART. I think that if the Senator from Tennessee will withdraw his amendment, we can easily pass the bill.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I will suggest to my friend from Tennessee that persistence in his amendment will only endanger, if not defeat, the passage of the bill in the House. It will lead to discussion, and that is enough of itself to defeat the bill in the House.

Mr. BELL. The sum proposed to be given by the bill as it now stands, will be a mere trifle when distributed among all the heirs of General Greene; but if interest be allowed, they will each get something handsome. It is a case in which what would now be considered as a large estate, has been sacrificed. I do not think that in justice I can consent to yield my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BADGER. I beg leave to add a single observation on this subject, which has been suggested to my mind by the remarks of my friend from Mississippi. It is very remarkable in the history of this country, what discriminations we make between our own citizens and foreigners; and those discriminations are always made adversely to our own people. My friend has pointed to one case in which seventy-five years' interest was allowed to a foreign banker, who advanced moneys for purposes of profitable speculation to the Government during the Revolution. Now, sir, I wish to call your attention, and that of the Senate, to two remarkable cases in our history.

When General Lafayette came to this country, Congress at once got up a bill for his relief. I believe the foundation of it was, that he had furnished some money to buy shoes for some of our soldiers in the Revolutionary war. We first granted to him $200,000 in stock, bearing five per cent. interest, and then, as a mere gratuity, voted to him two townships of land, I think, to be selected by the President of the United States. We gave him, I suppose, in round numbers, a half a million in money and in lands. About the same time, we had the only surviving general officer of the Revolution, old General St. Clair, in extreme old age, in utter destitution and poverty, his daughters earning a precarious subsistence at the wash-tub, beseeching Congress for some relief, in his declining years, from the pressure of age, disease, and poverty. For years that venerable old man's thin white hairs were driven about by the north winds of this bleak Capitol of the nation, while he was endeavoring to urge, to beg, some provision from a reluctant Congress; and finally, some few months, if I recollect aright, before his death, Congress, who had presented $500,000 in money and lands, to a foreigner who had aided in the revolutionary struggle, were stimulated, in their great desire to remember and reward the revolutionary services of our own people, so far as to vote to that old patriot and soldier a pension of sixty dollars a month from the time the act passed to his death, which event closed his mortal career, and sealed up a just commentary upon the discriminating spirit with which we reward those of our own native citizens who serve us, by his sinking into the grave.

Mark you, Mr. President, I wish it to be understood, I say not one word either against the amount or the propriety of the grant that was made to General Lafayette; far from it. All that was right. It only becomes wrong when it is placed in contrast with the hard-hearted penuriousness which suffered old General St. Clair to sink into the grave in penury, with his daughters exposed to the greatest hardships, and suffering under the greatest difficulties that poverty could bring upon them, and from which an ungrateful country refused to relieve either him or them.

Now, sir, we have presented here another example. De Neuffville advanced a sum of money with a view to make profit, and we paid seventy-five years interest upon it. General Greene incurred losses without any view to profit. Sir, profit had no place in his speculations. Profit to himself entered not into his dealings with his country. It was her independence, her honor, her interest, which he sought, with a generous self-devotion, to advance by exposing in her cause life, and fortune, and all that was dear to him; and now will the Senate say, "we will settle with his children on the principles of a miser; will cut short the allowance to him which is necessary to a full indemnity against loss, and while that interest is asked for a period of time short in comparison with the period for which we allowed interest to a foreign banker dealing with us for pecuniary profit." Well, sir, we may do this, and possibly it may be all right; but, to my understanding, if we should do it, the cases will stand to our disgrace in irreconcilable hostility.

The question being taken on the amendment by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bell, Brown, Clay, Dixon, Fessenden, Fish, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Rockwell, Seward, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Wade, and Weller—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Bright, Brodhead, Chase, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Norris, Slidell, and Williams—9.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

UTICA STEAM WOOLEN COMPANY.

Mr. FISH. I ask the Senate to take up the bill, from the House of Representatives, "for the relief of the Utica Steam Woolen Company," which I think will not give rise to a word of debate, and to which I presume there will be no objection whatever.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

It appropriates $1,181 16 to the Utica Steam Woolen Company, of Utica, in the State of New York, in full of their account for interest on goods furnished to the quartermaster's department.

In 1851, the company made a contract with G. H. Crossman, quartermaster, in behalf of the United States, to furnish certain broadcloths, to be used for making clothing for the Army, and that they were to be paid from time to time, as the goods were delivered. The contract was fulfilled by the company; but, by reason of the late period at which the appropriation bills for that year were passed, the money was not ready until some time after the delivery of the cloths. The claim is for interest on the principal sum, from the time of the delivery of the goods, when the money, by the terms of the contract, became payable, to the time when the payment was actually made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

FOURTH OF JULY.

Mr. EVANS obtained the floor.

Mr. BADGER. I will ask my friend from South Carolina just at this moment to allow me to make a suggestion which I think will produce no discussion or difficulty, and to submit a motion founded upon it. It is known by the Senate that Tuesday next will be the fourth of July. It is understood that we shall meet to-morrow for the purpose of given the Senator from Texas [Mr. Houston] an opportunity of making some personal explanation. It seems to me, therefore, that it would be a great deal better if the Senate should now come to an order, that when we adjourn to-morrow it shall be to meet on Wednesday next, so as to adjourn over the fourth of July. It is not worth while to meet here on Monday to do that. We cannot adjourn from now until Wednesday.

Mr. SLIDELL. Why not meet on Monday?

Mr. BADGER. We can, but why do it? Gentlemen are disposed to go off for two or three days, and we shall find ourselves without a quorum. I submit the motion, therefore, that when the Senate adjourns to-morrow, it be to meet on Wednesday next. We shall accomplish nothing by meeting here on Monday.

Mr. WELLER. I shall be compelled to disappoint my honorable friend from North Carolina by interposing an objection to the reception of his motion. I think it cannot be entertained except by unanimous consent. I think we ought to meet on Monday to transact business. I am anxious to go through with that. I know of no reason why we cannot transact business on Monday as well as any other day. I shall be opposed to sitting on Tuesday, of course, that being our political Sabbath.

Mr. BADGER. All I have to say is, that, as everybody here knows, personally, I have no solicitude about it. But I know there are gentlemen here who are desirous of going away, and taking two or three days of consecutive relaxation during this exceedingly hot weather. To compel them to come here on Monday, for the purpose of adjourning over from Monday to Wednesday, is, in my opinion, a needless imposition on them. I will tell my friend from California that he will find himself without a quorum on Monday.

Subsequently, Mr. BADGER said: I wish the Senator from California would be kind enough to withdraw his objection to my motion.

Mr. WELLER. As usual, I find it utterly impossible to resist the appeal of the Senator from North Carolina. I shall be compelled to withdraw my objection.

The motion was then agreed to.

LE CAZE AND MALLET.

On the motion of Mr. EVANS, the bill for the relief of Frederick Vincent, administrator of James Le Caze, survivor of Le Caze & Mallet, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Frederic Vincent, as administrator, $4,896 82, which sum appears to be due to James Le Caze on the books of the Treasury, for advances made to the Government of the United States in 1783; and to pay him interest on that sum at the rate of six per cent. per annum, from December 31, 1846, when his claim was presented to Congress.

Mr. EVANS. I move to strike out of the bill the words "at the rate of six per cent. per annum from the 31st day of December, 1846, when his claim was presented to Congress," and insert "from the time he advanced the money," so as to allow the interest from that time. Perhaps it is necessary that I should make a short statement in regard to the case.

Le Caze and Mallet were French gentlemen, who lived in the city of Philadelphia, and who were merchants. They sold large quantities of tobacco and cotton to the Government, and advanced large sums of money. At the conclusion of the war, their account was settled at the Treasury; and the sum mentioned as due to them stands to their credit on the books of the Treasury until this day. It never has been paid—never has been attended to. One of these parties died; and the other, before there was any regular Government, or any chance of getting paid, went to the West Indies, where he had an estate. There he was killed in the first insurrection in the Island of St. Domingo. The consequence was, that there was nobody here to present the claim. It was unknown to the family in the West Indies until a recent day. The administrator now applies for payment. If interest is to be paid upon a debt not demanded until recently—if that principal be conceded as just, I do not see why it should not be done in this case.

Mr. FITZPATRICK called for the yeas and nays on the amendment; but they were not ordered.

Mr. SLIDELL. As I understand the Senator from South Carolina, no demand has ever been made upon the Government for the amount. If it has not been paid, it has been the fault of the parties, and there is nothing in the character of these men which appeals to the sympathies of the Senate. Really, it seems to me we should be establishing a most dangerous principle by giving interest in this case. I shall be under the necessity of asking for the yeas and nays upon the amendment if it is insisted upon.

Mr. EVANS. Let the report of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims be read.

The report was read. From it, it appears that Le Caze & Mallet were merchants of Philadelphia. In the year 1783 the Government had dealings with them to the amount of $75,584 74. This amount was settled by the then Superintendent of Finance, and a balance was stated in their favor of $4,890 82. This settlement and balance were entered on the books of the Treasury of that date, and afterwards transferred to the books of the Treasury in the year 1794, after the present Government went into operation.

Before any provision had been made for liquidating and funding the public debt, Mallet died, and Le Caze, the surviving partner, whilst on a visit to his plantation, in the Island of St. Domingo, was massacred in the insurrection which broke out in 1789. During the general insurrection in 1793, his family escaped from the island and settled in Norfolk, in Virginia. There was no administration on the estate of Le Caze, until the year 1844, when Frederic Vincent, a relative of Le Caze's family, took out letters of administration in Philadelphia, until which time it is likely the existence of the evidence of this debt was unknown to the family of Le Caze.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is very obvious to every Senator that there is not a quorum present. There are but twenty-three Senators on the floor. I move, therefore, that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I hope not. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will withdraw his proposed amendment; and, if the Senate is not disposed to go on with private bills, I suggest that I have had the floor for the last week on the indigent insane bill. This is very hot weather, and I do not know that the speech will last much longer.

Mr. EVANS. I believe, on the whole, it may be better not to risk the bill by pressing the amendment, though I have a strong prepossession on my mind that interest should be allowed. I therefore withdraw the amendment.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee withdraw his motion?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Yes, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed a joint resolution to correct a clerical error in the act approved June 22, 1854, to authorize a register to be issued to the steamer El Paraguay by a new name; and

A bill for the relief of H. B. Rowan, of Louisiana.

FRANCISCO LOPE URRIZA.

On the motion of Mr. WELLER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of Francisco Lopez Urriza.

It is designed to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Francisco Lopez Urriza, $10,250 as full compensation for the value of the schooner Julia, improperly seized while lying at La Paz on the 18th of September, 1846, by Commander S. F. Dupont, of the United States Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. If there is a report, I should like to hear it read.

Mr. WELLER. There is one made by myself from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The report was read, from which it appears that the petitioner seeks from this Government remuneration and indemnity for certain losses alleged to have been sustained by him in Lower California in 1846 and 1848, while that territory was in the military possession and under the protection of the United States.

The first item is the value of the schooner Julia, seized by Commander S. F. Dupont, of the United States Navy, while lying dismantled at La Paz, on the 18th of September, 1846, and subsequently on the 24th of June, 1847, condemned as a lawful prize, and ordered to be sold by Alcalde Walter Colton, as judge of the United States court of admiralty at Monterey.

Second, for $1,600, the value of a lot of cotton yarn deposited in the house of Don Francisco Palencia de Micanda, in La Paz, and destroyed by the Mexican forces in an attack upon the town, on the 16th of November, 1848.

Third, for $3,287, the amount of arrearages alleged to be due him for pay as a retired lieutenant colonel of the Mexican army, lost by his espousing the American cause.

Fourth, for $5,000, the alleged value of the Island San José, which he was compelled to abandon after the restoration of Lower California to Mexico, under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

In regard to the first item, there is no evidence to show that the schooner Julia had ever been engaged in the service of the enemy. On the contrary, it is proven that she had been employed in peaceful commerce between La Paz and Mazatlan. That while lying at La Paz, in a dismantled condition, without either flag or sails, on the 18th of September, 1846, she was seized by Commander S. F. Dupont, of the United States Navy, used as a tender for some months, and on the 24th of June, 1847, condemned, and ordered to be sold as a lawful prize, by Alcalde Colton.

It is further proved that Commodore Sloat, then commanding the naval forces of the United States on the Pacific coast, had, prior to the seizure, (on the 7th of July, 1846,) issued a proclamation to the citizens of California, in which he pledged full and ample protection, both of person and property, to such of them as should lay down their arms, and either espouse the cause of the United States or remain neutral in the contest. Upon the issuing of that proclamation, the petitioner at once became an active partisan in our ranks, and identified himself with our cause; and further, the schooner Julia was, at the time of seizure, the property of the petitioner, and of the value of $10,250. These facts are fully established by the testimony of American officers, who were privy to the transaction. Under these circumstances, it is clear that the schooner was not properly subject to seizure. And besides, the United States not having established a court of admiralty at Monterey, the decision of Alcalde Colton, condemning and ordering the vessel to be sold, was wholly unauthorized and illegal. This item is therefore allowed.

The cotton yarn for which compensation is claimed, as shown by the evidence, was, when destroyed, deposited in a private house not occupied by our troops for military purposes at the time it was burnt; nor does it appear that it had been previously so occupied. In no case has a claim of this character ever been allowed to our own citizens.

As to the arrearages of pay due to the petitioner as a retired lieutenant colonel in the Mexican army, and forfeited by his taking side against his own country, upon no principle of justice or national morality recognized by this Government can this item be allowed.

In regard to the fourth item, without entering into a consideration of the question how far a naval commander in an enemy's country can, by his proclamation, bind this Government, it is believed that the protection promised by Commodore Sloat to the citizens of California, in his proclamation of the 7th July, 1846, referred alone to Upper California, and therefore cannot apply to any rights of property in the island in question, it being an appendage of Lower California, which, under the treaty above mentioned, still remained as a part of Mexico. This item, therefore, is not allowed.

Mr. BAYARD. I mean to ask for the yeas and nays upon the engrossment of the bill. It is very evident to me that if the officer who seized that vessel acted without some just cause, or if he seized her illegally, and if the alcalde had no jurisdiction as an admiralty court, the officer was responsible in damages for the personal injury done to the party. If the officer, under a mistaken impression of his duty, seized this vessel, a suit could have been brought against him by the party who would have been entitled to redress. Whether the officer acted in good faith or not, if he had no authority to seize the vessel, the owner could in that way have been remunerated. But I am unwilling, as the party did not venture to make his claim where he might have made it, to take the ex parte evidence which he brings forward on which to base his claim upon the Government. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the engrossment of the bill.

Mr. WELLER. I think it a very hard case that this bill should be defeated by the opposition of the Senator from Delaware. It is very obvious that there is not a quorum now present; and if the yeas and nays are taken on the passage of the bill, it must inevitably produce an adjournment without final action upon it. I undertake to say, that if that Senator will take the trouble to look into the testimony in the case, he will be satisfied that the Committee on Foreign Relations have acted properly in reporting the bill. There were four different items in the claimant's account. The Committee on Foreign Relations considered that but one of them was a proper charge against the Government. This vessel was seized, as we are satisfied from the proof, without authority of law. She was not a proper subject of which to make a prize. She was carried to Monterey, and there Alcalde Colton, claiming to be an admiralty court, under the laws of the United States, proceeded to condemn the vessel, and she was sold. I think the Senator from Delaware, if he will take the trouble to look into the testimony, will be satisfied that the Committee on Foreign Relations have not erred in this particular; and I think it is due to this claimant that, before the Senator undertakes to reverse the action of a committee of the Senate, he should put himself to the trouble of investigating the case.

I have in the report, very briefly, it is true, recapitulated the testimony as it was produced before the committee. The testimony was ample that this vessel had never been used for any warlike purposes. She was engaged in peaceable commerce between the ports of La Paz and Mazatlan; and while lying in the former, without any flag to designate her national character, she was seized by an American officer, used for a long period as a transport vessel, and afterwards taken to Monterey and condemned by Alcalde Colton without any authority of law. There is a record of the case. You will find that it is a regular condemnation: "The United States court of admiralty, in 1847, at the city of Monterey." Now, I need not tell the Senate that there was no United States court of admiralty there having jurisdiction of this case, even if the vessel had been a proper subject for prize. Therefore, the committee came to the conclusion, under all the circumstances of the case, (and inasmuch as it is proved by the testimony of all the American officers that the claimant was one of the most active and efficient men upon the American side during the progress of the difficulties upon the Pacific coast; he had at one time been taken prisoner, and his life forfeited, and it was by a bare accident that he made his escape from the Mexican officer after he had been ordered to be shot,) that he was entitled to that portion of his claim.

Mr. BAYARD. Before the honorable Senator undertakes to censure me for my course, he ought to understand the objection which I have made. I say that, on the face of the report, without regard to the evidence, according to my judgment of the principle which should govern the action of the Senate, the bill ought to be rejected. The principle is this: I have never yet heard that the Government of the United States, or any other Government, recognized its liability for the illegal acts either of its naval or military officers. The basis on which this claim must be paid is, that Commander Dupont illegally seized the vessel of the claimant. Now, sir, if he did it illegally, the claimant has his remedy against him. The committee report that this admiralty court had no jurisdiction. If it had not, then its proceedings were wholly coram non judice, and the Government would not defend the officer, but the officer would be liable to the party for the damages done. But who ever heard before of a Government being liable for every illegal act of seizure committed by its officers? The Government reserves to itself the discretion, when an officer, in the performance of his functions, makes a mistake under circumstances in which he becomes personally liable, and a suit is brought against him, to remunerate the officer; but I know of no case in which it interposes to relieve the claimant. If the claimant has been injured, he has his right of suit against the individual who did the illegal act.

That is the ground on which I oppose this bill, without going into the facts at all. The allegation on which the report is founded is, that the vessel, which was the property of the party, was illegally seized by Commander Dupont, and confiscated by a pretended admiralty court. If these proceedings were all illegal, the parties who performed them were unquestionably personally liable in an action or suit at law to the claimant. Why does he not press it? If a recovery was had against the officer of the United States, and he could show that the act was committed under the emergencies of war, and by a mistaken opinion of his duty, it would be a question for us whether we should relieve him; but I deny the right of the claimant to claim payment from us on any principles of which I know, according to the facts stated by the committee themselves. I cannot perceive what the subsequent part which the man took in the struggle in California has to do with the question, though I confess such things are very often thrown in here.

And further, sir, in judging of the case I judge of it as I should of a case in private life. Senators are fond of making an appeal to the analogies between the transactions of individuals with the Government, and transactions between individuals and individuals. In judging of transactions between individuals, if one person were to present against another four claims three of which were so palpably baseless and void, if I may say so, of all pretensions to a claim as those which the committee have rejected, what would be the inference in regard to a party who could be so biased by his interest, and have so little regard for justice, as to present claims which, on a bare inspection, would be rejected? Surely it would not enhance the character of the other claim.

It is, however, sir, on principle that I object to the bill. I am willing to take the report of the committee; it is unnecessary to investigate the facts. I say that I know of no principle on which to justify the allowance of this claim. The case of Colonel Mitchell, which occurred here some time ago, is one which illustrates what I have already said. The Government, after a recovery was had against its officer, interposed to save that officer; whether rightly, in that case, is not the question. That is the ground which it took. The basis of the allegation here, that the act on the part of the officer of the United States was illegal, can be supported before this body in no proper mode, except by showing that a suit has been recovered against the officer. That is my view of the question.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. Then I suppose I can get a division.

The question was put; and, on a division, there was not a quorum voting.

Mr. STUART. That disposes of the question to-day. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SLIDELL. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up and pass another bill.

Mr. STUART. I am willing to withdraw my motion, if we can get a quorum.

Mr. SLIDELL. If there be the least objection to my bill, I shall be willing to let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ADAMS.) The bill which is now before the Senate must be disposed of before another can be taken up.

Mr. SLIDELL. I move to postpone it until to-morrow.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Let it be postponed by unanimous consent.

Mr. WELLER. I do not wish to interpose any objection—

Mr. BAYARD. Can the Senate proceed with business without a quorum?

Mr. WELLER. I believe I have the floor, and I trust the Senator will allow me to proceed. I desire to say that I have, of course, no disposition to obstruct the business of the Senate. A number of my friends around me are anxious to get up other bills; but, at the same time, I do not very much like to be compelled to yield to the Senator from Delaware, when I am satisfied that his opposition is groundless.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from California that it appears there is not a quorum present. No business can be done until a quorum be in attendance. The bill is still before the Senate, and no other business can be transacted until it be disposed of.

Mr. WELLER. I move that its further consideration be postponed until to-morrow. I shall then endeavor to press it, notwithstanding the opposition of the Senator from Delaware.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. AND ROBERT HENDERSON.

The bill to confirm the claim of William H. Henderson and the heirs of Robert Henderson to five hundred acres of land in the Bastrop grant, was read a second time; and, on motion by Mr. SLIDELL, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

It proposes to confirm to W. H. Henderson and the heirs of Robert Henderson, of the parish of Morehouse, Louisiana, their claim to five hundred acres of land, in the prairie of Jefferson, on which the heirs reside, as represented in the report of the register and receiver of the land office at Monroe, in their report of July 30, 1852, and to direct that a patent issue to them after a legal survey, duly returned; but the act is to be construed only as a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States, and is not to affect the claims of other persons, if there be any.

The petitioners claimed five hundred acres of land in the Bastrop grant, in Louisiana, under the provisions of the act of the 3d of March, 1851, for the adjustment of land claims in that grant, and presented their claim to the board of commissioners provided for by that act. It was not recommended for confirmation, because it did not come strictly within the provisions of the act from which they derived their powers. It is No. 7 of the first class of claims in their report, and is submitted to the further consideration of Congress, because, while, under the principles of the law, they were forced to report against the case, justice required that they should recommend it to the indulgence of the Government, the claimants having purchased in good faith, and for a bona fide consideration.

The petitioners, and the persons under whom they claim, had remained in quiet and uninterrupted possession of the land for seventeen years—only three years less than the time required by the act of 1851. The fact that the chain of title to them is not complete, is not material to the Government; for the only question is, ought it to be confirmed to the claimants, whoever they may be? The petitioners have had possession long enough to hold it by preemption against individuals, and the bill is so framed as to amount to a relinquishment of title only on the part of the Government; so that, if any other claimants have a better title to it, it will not be prejudiced by the confirmation, but, on the contrary, it would inure to their benefit.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

SALE OF RESERVED LANDS.

Mr. MALLORY. I find upon the general orders, a bill which is not a private bill, but which will not occupy the attention of the Senate for more than a minute. It is a bill to "authorize the sale of reserved lands, and for other purposes," and is of great interest to my State. I am confident there will be no dispute about it; I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider it now.

There was no objection, and the bill was read a second time, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

It had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, which the Secretary commenced to read; but he was interrupted by Mr. WADE. I believe that is not a private bill.

Mr. MALLORY. I stated that it was not, and therefore asked that it might be taken up by general consent. It will not take a minute to dispose of it. It has been prepared at the Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. BAYARD. It is well known that there is not a quorum present. I shall call for the yeas and nays on the bill.

Mr. CHASE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 30, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

UNITED STATES ARMORIES.

Mr. DICKINSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer, from the select committee on the superintendency of the armories, the following resolution:

Resolved, That the select committee, to whom was referred the consideration of the change in the superintending of the national armories, be authorized to visit Springfield, in Massachusetts, and Harper's Ferry, in Virginia, for the purpose of making such further examination into the subject-matter of their inquiries as will enable them to furnish Congress with the fullest possible information before their final action in the premises.

Mr. McMULLIN. I object.

Mr. DICKINSON. I ask the consent of the House to say a single word upon this subject.

There was no objection, and

Mr. DICKINSON proceeded: This is the first time I have had occasion to ask a favor of the House, and I will occupy but a moment of its time under the circumstances. I shall be compelled to leave the city for a few days, and I feel compelled to appeal to the House to grant the request contained in that resolution.

The select committee of which I am a member have already had the subject under consideration for several months. They have been in session from two to five days in a week, for the purpose of examining the questions which have been referred to them in connection with the superintendency of the national armories—whether superintendents should be appointed from the Ordnance Corps, or whether they should be appointed from the citizens of the United States generally. We have had a large mass of testimony before us, written and verbal; and we have had contradictory testimony; we have had the reports of the commissioners appointed by the President of the United States, and who spent some three months in making examinations and taking testimony at Springfield and Harper's Ferry last year. But we have had such a mass of contradictory evidence that it has for a long time been my view, and I have proposed it to the committee time and time again that we should visit the establishment ourselves, for the purpose of satisfying ourselves from our own observation; but I have not been able until now to obtain the assent of the majority of the committee.

On a recent visit to Massachusetts, I spent two half days at the armory at Springfield in making inquiries into the state of things there; and I found that I was able to obtain more information, such as was necessary to base our action upon, in that time, than from all the time I had spent here in committee; and I believe the committee would ascertain more reliable information, as to the real state of the case, by a personal examination, than they have been able to do in the three months which they have already spent here in its investigation.

This is a matter of much importance to the country. It is a matter of which I care nothing about personally; but it is of so much importance to the country at large, that I think the select committee should be authorized to visit the armories personally, by which they will be able to obtain reliable information upon which to base their action. I offer the resolution which has been read; and if there be no objection, I will move the previous question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I look upon this whole controversy as a Buncombe humbug, and this as a proposition to authorize the members of the select committee to absent themselves from the House. I object.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the indulgence of the House to make a single statement upon this subject.

Mr. CRAIG. The gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. KEITT], who made an adverse report upon this subject, is not now in his seat, and I therefore object.

CORRECTION OF AN ERROR.

Mr. ORR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce "a joint resolution to correct a clerical error in an act approved June 22, 1854, to authorize a register to be issued to the steamer El Paraguay by a new name."

There was no objection; and the joint resolution was read a first and second time by its title.

It provides that for the word "Joy," in the bill of 23d June, shall be substituted the word "Ivy."

The joint resolution was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. BARKSDALE, by unanimous consent, previous notice having been given, introduced a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads:

A bill to establish a post route from Citronelle, Alabama, to Columbus, Mississippi.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move, by unanimous consent, this being private bill day, that committees be called for reports in reference to private business.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the disposition of the private bills on the Speaker's table; but the Clerk informs the Chair that there are none there. The gentleman from Virginia moves that committees be called for reports on private cases. Is there objection?

Mr. SEWARD. Yes, sir; I object.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I gave notice of a bill some time since, which I wish to introduce now, that it may be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. SEWARD. At the request of several gen-members, I withdraw the objection which I made to the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Then, if there be no objection, committees will be called for reports on private business, which shall give rise to no debate.

Mr. COBB. I shall not object, if there be an understanding that no motion shall be made to reconsider any reference of a bill reported to-day.

The SPEAKER. That also will be embraced in the proposition, so that no gentleman may be deceived.

Mr. HUNT. I would respectfully ask the indulgence of the House in a matter of some interest to me. It is a local matter reported on by a committee of this body.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. STANTON] has the floor, and asks the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill of a private character, of which previous notice has been given. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the bill was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims:

A bill to revive and extend the provisions of an act passed the 24th May, 1824, entitled "An act for the relief of the representatives of John Donelson, Stephen Heard, and others."

A. B. ROMAN.

Mr. HUNT. I am about to leave Washington for a few days on an affair of family interest, and I shall be obliged to my friends if they will allow me to have a bill concerning Governor Roman's plantation taken up, so that his title may be confirmed. The bill has been reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims, and a report has been prepared by Mr. NICHOLS, of Ohio, which is clear, full, and conclusive. There is no difficulty about the case. I hope the House will hear the report, and dispose of the matter.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to know what the character of the bill is?

Mr. HAVEN. It is to confirm the title to lands in Louisiana.

Mr. HUNT. It will be explained by the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the committee from its further consideration of the bill indicated.

Mr. HUNT. To take up the matter and dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. It is in Committee of the Whole House, and the proposition is to discharge the committee from its further consideration, so that it may be brought before the House and acted upon.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of the following bill:

A bill for the relief of A. B. Roman, of Louisiana.

The report of the Committee on Private Land Claims, accompanying the bill, was read.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was subsequently read a third time, and passed.

Mr. NICHOLS. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and that the motion to reconsider do lie upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE W. TORRANCE.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Under the order which has been made, I do not suppose that it will be proper to move to put any bill upon its passage, and I would not wish to ask to report any bill, and ask to put it upon its passage under that order. Therefore, before we commence the execution of that order, I wish to ask a favor of the House. My colleague upon the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. DENT] had charge of a bill for the relief of George W. Torrance. I do not know much about the case; but from the examination of the report, and from conversation with the gentleman who had special charge of the bill, I am induced to believe that it is one of the most meritorious cases which are before this House. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DENT] should have reported the bill, but he is detained, through illness, at one of the springs in Virginia, and the bill is likely to lose its place upon the Calendar. I ask leave to report the bill, and to have the report read, and that the bill be passed.

This gentleman came here from California to ask this relief from Congress, and is now in this city, without money; and I think we ought to pass this bill, if we find it right, without delay.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order, for the reason that the House, by unanimous consent, have determined to call committees for reports of a private character.

Mr. FAULKNER. I must object until the committees have been called for reports.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana states that the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. DENT] is confined by sickness at one of the springs in Virginia, and that, in consequence of his absence, the bill will not be reported under the regular call. It may be the pleasure of the House, from that fact, to indulge the gentleman in having the report made.

Mr. LATHAM. I think, if the gentleman from Virginia will allow the report to be read, he will withdraw his objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I beg to inform the gentleman from Virginia, that if the gentleman from Georgia could have been here last Friday he would have reported this bill then, and that it would in all probability have been passed then.

Mr. FAULKNER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he desires to make the report simply for reference?

Mr. HENDRICKS. No, sir; I want to put the bill upon its passage.

Mr. FAULKNER. Then I object.

Mr. LATHAM. I hope the gentleman will at least allow the report to be read.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

JUDICIARY OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MAY. I ask the indulgence of the House to allow me to report a bill from the Committee on the Judiciary. It is a bill of a good deal of importance, and I ask that it may be read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed. It is a bill for reorganizing the judicial system of the District of Columbia, and for reforming its laws. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. COBB. I must object, for a reason which is satisfactory to myself, and which I will state, if the gentleman wishes it.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

The Speaker then proceeded to execute the order of the House, by calling committees for such reports of a private character as should give rise to no debate.

Mr. LETCHER. The petition of Mary Dean, for a pension, has been referred to the Committee of Claims. As we have nothing whatever to do with that case, I ask that we may be discharged from the further consideration of it, and that it may be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before that is done, I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia one or two questions.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, sir, I am not legally sworn, and I shall not answer them.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I hope this case will not go to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I understand that this case has once been examined by the Committee of Claims, and I think it belongs to them.

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman is mistaken. The Committee of Claims have not examined it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that objection having been made, the report cannot be received under the order of the House.

On motion by Mr. READY, it was Ordered, That the Committee of Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Thomas C. Cardwell, for relief from an excess of duties levied upon certain British goods imported into the city of Philadelphia, in the year 1824, and that said petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion by Mr. MORGAN, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Adam Carlan, for the purpose of presenting them at the Pension Bureau.

Mr. FULLER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back Senate bill No.

245, entitled "An act to amend the provisions of the fifty-sixth section of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage,' approved 2d of March, 1799," with a recommendation that it do pass, and to ask its passage at this time.

Mr. FAULKNER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, objection being made, the report cannot be received.

Mr. AIKEN. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report a bill "to change the name of the American-built brig Hallowell, to that of Jane Rose, and to grant her a new register," with a recommendation that it do pass, and to ask its passage now.

Mr. FAULKNER. I object.

Mr. AIKEN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. The passage of the bill will not occupy more than five minutes.

Mr. FAULKNER. I would do so with great pleasure, but I have already objected to the passage of a bill reported by the gentleman from Maine. I cannot, with propriety, withdraw my objection. By order of the House the morning hour has been set aside for a special object, and that is the call of committees for reports in reference to private business, to which there shall be no objection, and I am not disposed to infringe on that order.

Mr. AIKEN. Bills similar to the one I report have been heretofore almost uniformly considered and passed by unanimous consent. It is only to change a name and grant a new register to an American-built brig, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. FAULKNER. I cannot withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Then the report cannot be received.

Mr. HIESTER, from the Committee on Public Lands, moved that said committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions and papers in the following cases, and that they do lie upon the table; which motion was agreed to.

The claim of John Ketchum, a soldier of the United States in 1806 and 1807, for bounty land; Petition of Elizabeth Evans, and Henry Lake, of Ohio, praying that Congress grant each of them a half section of land for revolutionary service of their father;

Petition of James Thompson, of Dayton, Ohio, and others, heirs of James Thompson, deceased, for bounty land; and Petition of Margaret Bowne, of New York.

Mr. H. also, from the same committee, reported a bill "for the relief of Mary H. Cushing," which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. UPHAM, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported back with the recommendation that it do pass, Senate resolution No. 14, entitled "A resolution authorizing settlements under certain mail contracts," which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back Senate bill No. 145, "for the relief of John Y. Camp," with amendments. The bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PARKER, from the same committee, reported a bill "vesting the title of the United States to certain lands in the city of Cincinnati," which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAY, from the same committee, reported a bill "to authorize the President of the United States to purchase a site for a prison, and to provide for the cost of the building of the same in the city of New York," which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAY. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report the following bill:

A bill to reorganize the judiciary system of the District of Columbia, and to reform its judicial laws.

I move that it be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COBB. When I objected to the introduction of that bill, I supposed it was a general bill. My friend from Maryland only desires that the bill shall be printed, and that when the business of the District of Columbia comes up, it shall be considered. I have no objection to that course.

The bill was then read a first and second time by its title, recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. EDDY, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Revolutionary Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition and papers of Isaac S. Bowman, executor of Isaac Bowman, deceased, and that the same be laid upon the table.

Mr. PECKHAM, from the Committee on Public Expenditures, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill (No. 185) "for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Prioleau," which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. P., from the same committee, reported back, with a similar recommendation, Senate bill (No. 337) "for the relief of Eliza M. Evans;" and said: I should like to have that bill put upon its passage. It is of such a character that it should pass; and it will not take five minutes to dispose of it.

Objection was made, so the report was not received.

Mr. P., from the same committee, made an adverse report in the case of the petition of the heirs of Lieutenant Silas Goodall; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. NICHOLS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill "for the relief of Civil, township of Marion, in the county of Mercer, Ohio;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HILLYER, from the same committee, reported a bill "for the relief of the legal heirs of Benjamin Metoyer, deceased;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the following bills of the Senate, with a recommendation that they do pass; which were thereupon referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

S. B. No. 248. An act for the relief of William Harris, of Georgia;

S. B. No. 240. An act for the relief of James Edwards and others; and

S. B. No. 203. An act for the relief of Thomas Snodgrass.

Mr. F. also, from the same committee, reported back the following bill of the Senate, with a recommendation that it do not pass:

An act (S. No. 188) for the relief of Captain Langdon C. Easton, assistant quartermaster of the United States Army.

The bill and report were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. F. also, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of William H. Weirick; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. FAULKNER, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Russell Rice, and that the same be laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. F., from the same committee, made an adverse report on the memorial of N. J. Evans, lieutenant second dragoons, United States Army; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. F. also, from the same committee, reported the following bills and joint resolution; which were read a first and second time by their titles, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

A bill granting bounty land to Cornelius Coffey; fey;

A bill for the relief of the heirs of James Grier, deceased;

A bill for the relief of John H. King;

Joint resolution giving one hundred and sixty acres of land to Francis M. Gwyn, of Indiana; and

A bill for the relief of Elenor Hoople.

Mr. F. also, from the same committee, made adverse reports upon the following petitions and resolutions; which reports were laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed:

The petition of Samuel M. Latimer;

The petition of Charles J. Burgess, asking for bounty land for the services of his son in the Mexican war;

The petition of John H. King, of Harper's Ferry, for improvement in machinery used at the armory;

The petition of Henry K. Brown;

The resolution to change the site of the military asylum near Washington city to the estate of Mount Vernon, &c.;

The petition of Edward B. Shelton, asking for bounty land for services rendered in the Mexican war;

The petition of Charles F. Fisher, proposing to sell to Congress his painting of the battle of New Orleans; and

The petition of Captain H. B. Fields.

On motion by Mr. FAULKNER, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution of Mr. FLORENCE, in reference to the loss of the San Francisco, and the relief afforded the sufferers; and also from the resolution of Mr. WALBRIDGE upon the same subject, and that the same be laid upon the table.

Mr. HOWE. I have been instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to ask the unanimous consent of the House that Senate bill (No. 160) "for the relief of Alexander G. Morgan," upon which an adverse report has been made, be recommitted to that committee for further consideration and examination.

No objection being made, the bill was accordingly recommitted.

Mr. BANKS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill "providing for a grant of land to the Vermont volunteers, for their services in the battle of Plattsburg;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McDUGALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill "for the relief of Charles W. Carroll;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McD. also, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill (No. 299) "for the relief of Jean Baptiste Beaubien;" which received the same order and reference.

On motion by Mr. BOCOCK, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of W. P. Buckner and Pierce Casby, for their share of the prize money accruing from the sale of the schooner Oregon, she having been condemned and sold; and that the same be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ROWE, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made adverse reports in the following cases; which were laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed:

The petition of Robert Babcock, for a pension;

The petition of Bethnah Black, of Massachusetts, for pension allowance;

The petition of Betsey A. Faulkner, for pension, or such relief as she may be entitled to as daughter and only surviving child of Ebenezer Floyd, a soldier and officer in the revolutionary war.

Mr. R., from the same committee, also reported a bill "for the relief of John Cole;" which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. ROWE said: I have been requested to ask the consent of the House to have this bill put upon its passage. I will state the effect of the bill. It is for the increase of the pension of an old soldier. He has heretofore received five dollars a month, and this bill provides for increasing it to eight dollars per month. It is a very meritorious case, and I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. FAULKNER. I object until the committees have all been called for reports.

Mr. ROWE. Perhaps if the gentleman will hear my statement he will be willing to withdraw his objection.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not withdraw it.

The bill was then referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. HENDRICKS, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions and papers in the following cases, and that the same be laid upon the table:

The petition of Elizabeth Wilson, widow of John Lindsey, a soldier of the war of 1812, for a pension;

The petition of Sherman McLean, praying for relief on account of an alleged erroneous construction of the pension laws;

The petition of Samuel McLelland, for a pension;

The petition of Samuel Moore, of Rising Sun, Indiana, for a pension;

The petition of John Bedding, of Danville, New York, for bounty lands on account of the services of his son, Godfrey H. Bedding, deceased, who was a soldier in the late war with Great Britain;

The petition of Martin Lowmense, for a pension;

The petition of A. Chamberlain and others, of Fulton county, Indiana, soldiers of the late war with Great Britain, for pensions; and

The petition of Lewis Washburn, for a pension.

Mr. H. also, from the same committee, reported a bill "for the relief of George Lynch;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. H. also, from the same committee, reported a bill "to provide a pension for Sergeant George W. Torrance;" which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the House will indulge me one minute, I wish merely to say in this case that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DENT] was so sick that he could not be here last week, and this bill lost its proper place in the business of the House. This man is here. His case is a meritorious one, and ought to be immediately acted on. He came here from California to get this relief. He was wounded in the war with Mexico, and I think that this pension ought to be given to him without further delay. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be put on its passage.

There was no objection.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. VAIL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported adversely on the following petitions; which were laid upon the table:

Petition of James Pullen, praying for compensation for injuries received while blasting rocks on the Washington aqueduct;

Petition of Gardener Herring, for invalid pension; and Petition of Bela Young, a soldier of the war of 1812, praying for an invalid pension.

Mr. V. also, from the same committee, reported adversely on House bill (No. 169) "concerning invalid pensions, and regulating the time of their commencement;" which was laid upon the table, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. V. also, from the same committee, reported a bill "for the relief of Evelina Porter, widow of the late Commodore David Porter, United States Navy;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAGE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported adversely on the following memorials and petitions; which were laid upon the table:

Petition of William Trumbull, for back pay or pension;

Application on behalf of Silas Chatfield, for increase of pension;

Memorial of Pressly McKellup, of Indiana county, Pennsylvania, praying for a pension;

Petition of Joseph H. Bailey, heir of Henry Bailey, praying for a pension;

Application of John Henry, for a pension;

Memorial for relief of Richard Oothoudt;

Memorial of George Babcock, for invalid pension;

Petition of Charles Stewart, for an invalid pension;

Petition of William Pace, for a pension;

Petition of Sophia Davis, for a pension; and Petition of Daniel Leshinghill, for a pension.

Mr. S., from the same committee, reported the following bills; which were severally read a first and second time by their titles, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

A bill for the relief of Joseph Webb;
A bill for the relief of John Steen;
A bill for the relief of George Elliott;
A bill for the relief of Mary Rutherford; and
A bill for the relief of Warren Raymond.

On motion by Mr. ORR, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the petition and papers of J. Rutherford Wooster, and that the same be laid upon the table.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to suggest, that if the House decline to go into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, we can resolve ourselves into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and dispose of the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The question was then taken on Mr. GREENWOOD's motion; and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, (Mr. WALLEY in the chair.)

R. W. MEADE.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee was last in session on the Private Calendar, bill No. 53, entitled "A bill for settling the claims of the legal representatives of Richard W. Meade, deceased," was informally passed over. The Chair supposes that it is to be now the first matter for consideration. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHANDLER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. THURSTON. I hope my friend from Pennsylvania will give way, as he did the other day, and let this bill go over till the next private bill day.

Mr. CHANDLER. If my friend from Rhode Island has a case that he wants to bring forward I will withhold my own bill for another day.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I prefer to take the Calendar as it comes, and dispose of the cases as we go.

Mr. HILLYER. The business first in order last Friday, when we were in committee on the Private Calendar, was a different bill from this. I hope the committee will take up the Calendar where they left off last Friday.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be true, if this were objection day; but as it is not, we are brought back to the commencement of the Calendar. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] objects to passing over informally the first bill, therefore it must be considered now. Debate is closed on this bill by order of the House, but it is open for amendment under the five-minute rule. The gentleman who reported the bill is, under the rules of the House, entitled to speak for an hour in support of it.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I suppose that if the gentleman is not ready to go on with this bill now, his object can be attained by moving to lay it aside.

Mr. HIESTER. I hope the House will allow the bill of my colleague to go over. The gentleman complains that he is not well, and therefore does not like to take it up at this time. I trust the House will extend that courtesy to him.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I raise the question of order that the committee have no right to pass it over. There is a special rule which applies to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, authorizing the committee to pass over one bill and take up the next bill, and to pass that over and take up the next, and so on until they reach one which they are ready to pass upon. But there is no such rule that applies to a Committee of the Whole House. I am willing that the bill should be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the opinion of the Chair that the 135th rule applies exclusively to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and consequently there is no rule which permits it to be passed over, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HIESTER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee object when my colleague tells him he is ill health?

Mr. JONES. I want to dispose of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I believe the report in this case has never been read, and I desire to have it read now. It is an interesting document—although

I had the honor to draw it up myself—of seventy-one and a half pages; and for the edification of the House, and of the gentlemen who are earnest in this case, I desire to have it read before I enter upon the remarks I wish to make. [Laughter.] I have prepared some remarks, and in order that the House may be enlightened upon the subject, they should first hear read the report. It is a report prepared from a basket full of dusky memorials brought from Spain, derived from different languages, and it cannot fail to edify the House. I therefore call for the reading of the report.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I want all the documents read.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the report. Mr. HOWE, (interrupting.) I hardly think that my colleague is serious in desiring to have this report read; and I move that the further reading be dispensed with.

Mr. CHANDLER. You cannot dispense with it, and I want it read.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The majority can dispense with it.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana, (interrupting.) I would inquire of the Chair if it is in order to move to dispense with the reading of the report? If it is, I make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the report must be read, unless it is dispensed with by unanimous consent. If any gentleman insists upon having it read, it must be read.

Mr. SEWARD. I move that the bill be laid aside, and reported to the House.

Mr. CHANDLER. You cannot make that motion. I have the floor, and I desire the reading of the report as a part of my speech.

The Clerk again resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. MILLSON. My impression is, that the report has already been read.

Mr. CHANDLER. It has never been read.

Mr. MILLSON. My recollection is, that it was read some months ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it has not been read at length at all. Some extracts, however, were read upon the occasion to which the gentleman refers. The Chair decides that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has a right to have the report read as a part of his speech, but not otherwise, except by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. BRIDGES. I would suggest to my honorable colleague from Pennsylvania, that he have the letter of John Quincy Adams to Mr. Salmon read. It occupies only thirteen pages, and I would suggest that it may not be necessary to read the whole report. That comprises a pretty full statement of the case, and I think, if read alone, it will of itself settle the question that this is a most unjust claim, and never ought to be passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should be sorry to curtail the committee in the gratification which I know they will derive, and the instruction that will be afforded by the reading of the whole report. [Laughter.] I ask the Chair whether he considers the decision which he has made, that it is not in order to move to lay aside this bill, as definitive?

The CHAIRMAN. The debate has been closed upon the pending bill, by order of the House, and it is not in order to take up any other bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. And does the Chair decide that I have not the right to have the report read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the gentleman has the right to have the report read as a part of his speech, and in no other way.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I ask that the 135th rule may be read, and then I shall appeal from the decision of the Chair ruling that it is not in order to move to lay aside the bill and take up another.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already stated that the 135th rule only applies to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANTON. It then does not apply to this committee, and, therefore, there is no rule to prevent us from laying aside any bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The rule requires that the bills shall be taken up in their regular order.

The 135th rule was then read, as follows:

"In the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the bills shall be taken up and disposed of in their order on the Calendar; but when objection is made to the consideration of a bill, a majority of the committee shall decide without debate, whether it shall be taken up and disposed of, or laid on the table, provided that general appropriation bills, and in time of war, bills for raising men or money, and bills concerning a treaty of peace, shall be preferred to all other bills, at the discretion of the committee, and when demanded by any member, the question shall first be put in regard to them."

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. The rule which has just been read is the one referring to proceedings in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I now ask for the reading of the rule which applies to the proceedings in a Committee of the Whole House, and which directs that business shall be taken up in regular order as it stands on the Calendar, and that it cannot be set aside by a majority vote.

The CHAIRMAN. What rule does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. STANTON. I do not know that there is such a rule.

Mr. COBB. There is no such rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The resolution closing debate is in these words:

Resolved, That all debate in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, on the bill for settling the claims of the legal representatives of Richard W. Meade, deceased, shall cease at — o'clock, on — (if the committee shall not sooner come to a conclusion upon the same); and the committee shall then proceed to vote on such amendments as may be pending, or offered to the same, and shall then report it to the House, with such amendments as may have been agreed to by the committee.

The Chair knows of no way in which the committee can proceed, other than that prescribed by the resolution of the House, under which the committee is acting.

Mr. STANTON. That order of the House relates to general debate. General debate has ceased. We do not propose to have any more debate. We desire to postpone one bill and to take up another.

The CHAIRMAN. What authority is there for the committee to postpone this bill?

Mr. STANTON. There is no rule forbidding it. The resolution does not forbid it.

Mr. WALSH. Inasmuch as this is the only possible opportunity by which the contents of this invaluable document can become known to a dozen persons, I hope the reading will go on without further interruption. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLORENCE. I submit a point of order. My colleague, under the rules, has the privilege of addressing the committee one hour. Instead of making a speech, he asks the reading of the committee's report, and I think he has the right to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already sustained that point of order.

Mr. STANTON. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to lay this bill aside. The Chair decides that the motion is not in order under the rules. From that decision the gentleman from Kentucky takes an appeal. The question now is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

The question was taken, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that he is indisposed, and unable to proceed with his argument to-day. That being so, I withdraw my objection to the bill being passed over.

Mr. WALSH. I renew the objection.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the motion that the committee do now rise?

Mr. CHANDLER. With pleasure.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I wish to make an inquiry before I vote. Do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that he is indisposed, and unable to proceed with his argument to-day?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEPHENS. I hope, then, by unanimous consent, the bill may be passed over for the present. If the gentleman is unable to proceed with his argument—

Mr. McMULLIN. The question is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. So the Chair has decided. Mr. STEPHENS. I demand tellers on the motion to rise.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and McMULLIN were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 81, noes 21.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. BUCKLEY) having taken the chair, the Chairman reported that a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar had had under consideration House bill No. 58, "for settling the claims of the legal representatives of Richard W. Meade," and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was here received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that they had passed a bill for the relief of David Myerle; and also, that they insisted upon their amendments to the resolution of the House fixing the day of final adjournment, and asked a committee of conference on the part of the House to meet alike committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I ask for tellers upon that motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. KERR, and JONES of Louisiana, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes not counted.

So the House refused to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ORR. With a view of getting at the message from the Senate just received, I move that the House do now proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. McMULLIN. I thought the understanding was, that we were to go into the Committee of the Whole on the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

[Cries of "No; that has been voted down."]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask if the motion to go to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table is in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has been just inquiring whether an hour had been spent in receiving reports from committees.

Mr. JONES. You have let the time pass by when this motion might have been made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair remembers the rule to be, that any time in the course of the session of the day, after one hour has been devoted to the reception of reports from committees, it shall be in order to make the motion to go to the business on the Speaker's table. The rule is as follows:

"After one hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees and resolutions, it shall be in order, pending the discussion thereof, to entertain a motion that the House do now proceed to dispose of the business upon the Speaker's table, and to the orders of the day," &c.

Mr. JONES. Are reports from committees and resolutions under discussion now? The rule says "pending the discussion thereof." We have quit that business by going into a Committee of the Whole House. We have now come from the consideration of that business, and the gentleman has no right to make the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides, in answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee, that as soon as the committee returns again into the House, the first business in order is the further reception of reports from committees; and, although no committees have been called for reports, that business is in order, and is the business now under consideration. Therefore the motion to proceed to business upon the Speaker's table is in order.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. ORR; and it was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first business in order is the resolution of the House fixing the time for the adjournment of Congress, returned from the Senate this morning.

Mr. ORR. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and that a message be sent to the Senate, notifying them that the House concur in their request for the appointment of a committee of conference.

Mr. HENN. I rise to a point of order. That resolution is not the first one in order. There are several bills before it.

Mr. ORR. It is the first business in order, because it comes in that class specified in the rule as "messages and other Executive communications."

The SPEAKER. The rule is, that when the House proceeds to business upon the Speaker's table, it shall first proceed to the consideration of messages and other Executive communications, and then to "messages from the Senate, and amendments proposed by the Senate to bills of the House."

Mr. ORR. I demand the previous question on my motion.

Mr. HENN. I ask for tellers upon the second. Tellers were not ordered.

The previous question was then seconded.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. FLORENCE. I have no idea of a committee of six men fixing what Congress shall do.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was not heard until the House was dividing upon the pending question; and therefore it is not in order.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. KEITT. I think a better motion would be, that when the House adjourns to-morrow, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next. Tuesday is the 4th of July, and I make that motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit that the motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks to-morrow will be the time to make that motion.

Mr. KEITT. I submit to the Chair that when the House adjourned over to take up the carpets, it adjourned upon a motion of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] made beforehand, precisely as I now make this motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Alabama, to which the gentleman refers, was introduced, by unanimous consent, on Monday, by a suspension of the rules. The Chair decides that the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina is not in order.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I hope the motion to adjourn will be withdrawn, and that gentlemen will allow the committee of conference to be appointed. If the House do not approve the day they agree upon for the final adjournment, their report may be voted down. Let the committee be appointed, and let us see what they will recommend.

Mr. FLORENCE. I am very willing to accommodate myself to what seems to be the almost unanimous wish of the House; but, sir, in making my motion—

[Loud cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not debatable; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania having announced his determination, the Chair was indulging him in a little explanation. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLORENCE. I withdraw my motion.

The question then recurred upon Mr. ORR's motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HENN. I demand tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. ORR moved that the vote by which the House agreed to appoint a committee of conference be reconsidered, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. OLDS. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put on Mr. WHEELER's motion; and there were—ayes thirty-eight—

Mr. WHEELER. I demand tellers.

Mr. McMULLIN. I hope that the gentleman will withdraw the call for tellers, and let us go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the civil and diplomatic bill.

Mr. WHEELER. As we have refused to consider private business, I shall not withdraw my call for tellers for the purpose indicated by the gentleman.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and MACK were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 66.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. SAGE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ASKE and BRECKINRIDGE were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 44.

So the motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair.)

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee was last in session on the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, the question before the committee was on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GREENWOOD] to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER.]

Mr. SEWARD. I move that the committee do now rise, and on that motion I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PRINGLE and RICHARDSON were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 80.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. SEWARD. I move to lay aside the civil and diplomatic bill, and to take up the next bill on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the motion out of order.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I would like to know upon what ground the Chair decides the motion out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it necessary to enter into an argument.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to any argument.

Mr. STEPHENS. I wish to know the grounds upon which the Chair decides out of order the motion of my colleague to lay aside the civil and diplomatic bill, and to take up the next appropriation bill on the Calendar?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides it out of order because the House has closed debate upon the civil and diplomatic bill, and directed the committee to proceed to vote upon it.

The pending amendment, offered by Mr. GREENWOOD, was then reported, as follows:

Add to the amendment proposed by Mr. CHANDLER, which is as follows: "For continuing the aqueduct for bringing water into the city of Washington, agreeably to the plan adopted by the President of the United States, according to the provisions of the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1853, §500,000."

—the words:

Provided, That no portion of the foregoing amount shall be applied unless the corporations of Georgetown and Washington shall appropriate and pay a sum equal to one fifth of the amount, to aid in the construction of the water-works proposed.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I beg the attention of the committee to the few remarks I propose to submit, because I think it entirely in my power to satisfy the committee that the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas is not as good as the one which is contemplated in the original amendment. I beg the committee to bear in mind that the proposition which is now before us is a proposition on the part of this Government to obtain water for the protection of the public buildings, and contemplates nothing but the construction of an aqueduct and the location of pipes, on the part of the Government, to furnish it to the public buildings. It does not at all embrace the idea of distributing the water. It does not impose upon the Government the obligation of supplying any other than the public buildings, and the consequence is, that it leaves this thing under the regulation of, and to be controlled by, the city authorities.

The city of Boston, as it appears from the report upon that subject, expended $1,800,000 for the distribution of the Cochituate water through the city. Now, in the city of Washington, it will require twice as large a sum to distribute water to fifty thousand people as it did to distribute it to fifty thousand people in the city of Boston, owing to the character of our streets, our public squares, and other things of a like nature. In this regard the cities of Washington and Georgetown assume upon themselves to distribute the water. It will cost them to do so, from time to time, upwards of $2,000,000.

It is proposed, by the amendment to the amendment, that these cities shall contribute a fifth part to this job. If that be the obligation, the Government is under obligation to pay all except one fifth, which is to be appropriated by these cities. They not only will be bound to pay their proportion of the main structure, but to supply their proportion of three fifths for the distribution works. But, by the original proposition, the Government finds itself only legitimately bound for the supply of the main aqueduct and the pipes necessary to furnish the public edifices. It has nothing to do with the distribution. That falls upon the cities, and will involve an expenditure of upwards of $2,000,000—a sum greatly beyond what one fifth will amount to, as proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas. I think we should act unwisely to adopt the suggestion proposed in that amendment. I ask if it is not introducing a new, embarrassing, and complicated feature into this bill? The Government has nothing to do, under the original amendment, but to make the aqueduct and lay down pipes to the public buildings. The Government has nothing to do with the details, but they appropriately fall to the cities of Georgetown and Washington. I think it wholly unwise to adopt this amendment, and I trust it will not be the pleasure of the committee to do so.

One word more. When the seat of Government was determined to be located at this place, Virginia gave money, or loaned money to the Federal Government. So did Maryland, and the people owning the land gave to the Government alternate sections of the entire land within the city of Washington.

Mr. WALSH. It was worth nothing then.

Mr. SMITH. Very true, it was not valuable then, but it has become so since, and the Government has sold it, and put the money into the Treasury, and is now holding some portions of it. I beg the committee to bear in mind that this proposition is to provide the means of getting water within the reach of the whole people.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I modify my amendment by adding at the end of it these words: "necessary to complete the aqueduct and reservoir."

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. The gentleman will allow me to suggest that there are two reservoirs and a dam to be constructed. Under the gentleman's amendment, as modified, one reservoir and dam would not be estimated for.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I was not aware of that, and so further modify my amendment that it will read "reservoirs and dam." I now demand tellers on the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and BRECKINRIDGE were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 58; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no quorum voting, the roll must be called.

The roll was then called; the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, but finding itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called, and directed him to report the facts, with a list of the absentees, to the House.

The following is the list of the absentees:

Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Bissell, Boccock, Boyce, Bugg, Chamberlain, Chase, Cook, Cox, Cumming, Curtis, Cutting, Dean, Dent, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, English, Fenton, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Grey, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hibbard, Daniel T. Jones, Kidwell, Lamb, Lane, Lindley, Lyon, Macdonald, McDougall, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Phelps, Preston, Richardson, Rogers, Seymour, Shower, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, Solters, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Walbridge, Walker, Warren, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Yates.

A quorum being now present, [one hundred and forty-six members having answered to their names,] the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question pending, when the committee found itself without a quorum, was on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas, upon which tellers had been ordered.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

On motion by Mr. ROWE, the House then adjourned (at half past two o'clock) till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 1, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. BADGER presented the memorial of Frances Ann McCauley, widow of D. S. McCauley, late United States consul general for Egypt, and consul at Tripoli, praying indemnity for losses and expenses incurred by her husband while consul at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Also, the memorial of George Gibson, one of the heirs of Anna Gibson, deceased, praying the payment of certain bills of credit issued by the Continental Congress, which were deposited in the Treasury for redemption, and destroyed by the conflagration of the Treasury Building in 1833; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CASS presented a memorial of the Board of Managers of the Washington National Monument Society, praying the aid of Government in the completion of the monument, now being erected in the city of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a petition of citizens of Detroit, Michigan, praying that the present rates of ocean postage may be reduced; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SUMNER presented a memorial signed by six hundred and eighty-four men of Massachusetts, chiefly citizens of Boston, asking for the repeal of the act of Congress of 1850, usually known as the fugitive slave law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NORRIS presented the petition of W. P. Young, praying arrears of compensation as an inspector of customs at Portsmouth, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MALLORY presented the memorial of Richard S. Cox, William A. Bradley, and Gilbert L. Thompson, proposing to furnish, for the use of the Navy "compressed or composite coal," an article of fuel recently invented by them; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, the memorial of Frederic Chataud, a lieutenant in the Navy, praying certain allowances in the settlement of his accounts as acting purser of the United States store-ship Fredonia, in the year 1852; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BRIGHT presented a petition of the inspectors of the customs for the port of Baltimore, praying an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ROCKWELL presented a memorial of citizens of Lowell, Massachusetts, praying the passage of a law prohibiting the employment of officers of the Army as superintendents of national armories; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. ADAMS, from the Committee on Retrenchment and Reform, reported a bill to establish a department of law, to prescribe certain duties of the Auditors and Comptrollers of the Treasury, and for other purposes; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Jonathan D. Ferris, late a sailing-master in the Navy, praying the difference of pay for the time he performed the duties of lieutenant commanding, submitted an adverse report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Foxhall A. Parker, praying indemnity for various expenses necessarily incurred by him while commanding the East India squadron, reported a bill for the relief of Commodore Foxhall A. Parker of the United States Navy; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Jasper Strong and George Terrill, praying authority to construct a railroad from the Perdido river to the bay of Pensacola, near the town of Warrington, Florida, reported a bill granting to Jasper Strong and their associates the right of way for a railroad through the reserved lands, near the navy-yard, Pensacola, in the State of Florida; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the memorial of George W. Harris, praying that Congress may pass an act to vest in him the copyright to the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth volumes of the Pennsylvania State Reports, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of the legal representatives of Henry Payson, assignee of John Randall, owner of the schooner Contradiction, praying indemnity for the confiscation of that vessel and cargo at the Island of Margaritta, in 1812, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SLIDELL, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the memorial of Robert M. Hamilton, United States consul at Montevideo, praying compensation for diplomatic services, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of H. S. Sanford, late chargé d'affaires at Paris, praying to be allowed the difference between his pay as secretary of legation and chargé d'affaires during the time he acted as such, and the reimbursement of the amount paid for clerk hire in said legation, submitted a report thereon, together with a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was recommitted a bill to provide for the payment of such creditors of the late Republic of Texas as are comprehended in the act of Congress of September 9, 1850, reported it back with sundry amendments, together with a report; which was ordered to be printed.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. BRIGHT gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill donating a portion of the public lands, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point on the Ohio and Mississippi railroad, in the State of Indiana, by the way of the Falls of the Ohio and Evansville, to the Mississippi river, at or near Cairo.

Mr. SUMNER gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to repeal the act passed in September, 1850, usually known as the fugitive slave act.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. ADAMS asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill to amend the several acts granting bounty lands, and for other purposes; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill "allowing exchanges of and granting additional school lands in the several States which contain public lands." It has passed the Senate several times, and been sent to the House of Representatives, but it has never been taken up there.

Mr. MALLORY. The bill which is first in order to-day, as the unfinished business of yesterday, is the bill to "authorize the sale of reserved lands and for other purposes," which was half read through yesterday at the time of adjournment. It is on the same subject as the bill to which the Senator from Arkansas refers. There will be no opposition to it, I am satisfied. It has been prepared at the Department. Its object is to authorize the sale of lands hitherto reserved for military purposes. I would ask the Senator from Arkansas, as that bill is a prior order, to let it be taken up first.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope the Senator will not object to taking up this bill. It has heretofore passed the Senate without any objection. I cannot consent to give way. It is for the benefit of the Senator's State as well as mine; and I do hope he will not object to it.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not object to the bill; but the one to which I refer is first in order, and is on the same subject.

Mr. JOHNSON's motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize that where the sixteenth section, heretofore set apart for the use of schools in each of the several States which contain public land, has been or shall be found unfit for cultivation, or wherein the township, being fractional, it shall appear that there is no, or only a part of a, sixteenth section, the States, respectively, shall be at liberty to relinquish that sixteenth section, and to select any other section, either as a whole section, or in any legal subdivisions within the same township that may remain subject to sale by private entry; or should none such remain in the same township, then that the selection may be made in each case from any land within the limits of the State subject to sale by private entry, and upon the approval, by the Secretary of the Interior, of the new selection, the original tract is ipso facto to revert to and become public lands of the United States.

There is to be selected, in the same manner, an additional section of land, either as a whole section, or in any legal subdivisions, for each township within the States, and under their authority, which section granted for the use of schools within the township, is to be recorded and conveyed as before stated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

THE AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the Senate take up for consideration the bill reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, "for the more effectual suppression of the slave trade in American-built vessels."

Mr. SUMNER. Before that motion is put, I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Delaware, whether it is his purpose to have the bill put on its passage now?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes, sir, if I can. There is no time to lose. If it be longer delayed, the other House cannot act on it.

Mr. SUMNER. I have not examined the bill with the care which I should like to give to one of such importance. So far as I do understand it, I hope it may be amended in an important particular.

Mr. CLAYTON. That will be a subject for consideration when the bill is taken up. Let it come under consideration, and then it will be subject to amendment. The bill is not under consideration yet; when it is, the gentleman can offer his amendment, or give his objections, if he has any.

Mr. SUMNER. I know it is not up; but I made the remark by way of suggestion to the Senator from Delaware; and I wish to follow it up by the direct suggestion that the bill be allowed to lie over for the present. It is within my knowledge that at least one honorable Senator desires to speak somewhat at length on some aspects of the questions presented by the bill. I do not myself.

Mr. CLAYTON. I have only to say that the effect of such an opposition will be to defeat the bill, and that I want the American people to understand. It is to defeat a measure which has for its object the suppression of the slave trade. Now, sir, let us get at it, and then let us witness the opposition. The question is now on the motion to proceed to its consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct whenever any American registered ship or vessel shall, in whole or in part, be sold or transferred to a citizen or citizens of the United States, at any foreign port or place in North or South America, or in any of the West India Islands, or in the Cape de Verde Islands, or any island on or near the coast of Africa, the instrument of writing in the nature of a bill of sale, reciting at length her certificate of registry, in pursuance of the fourteenth section of the act of Congress of December 31, 1792, concerning the registering and recording of ships or vessels, shall be utterly void, unless it shall be executed in the presence of a minister or consul of the United States there residing, and shall contain an express condition that such instrument, and the title of the purchaser claiming under it, shall not be valid if the vessel shall make, or attempt to make, a voyage to the coast of Africa before returning to the United States for a new register. And if any citizen of the United States, in any such place, being the owner or agent for the sale of an American vessel, shall sell it, knowing that she is to be employed in the African slave trade, or that she is about to make a voyage to the coast of Africa before returning to the United States, or shall charter a vessel of which he may be the owner or the agent for a voyage to the coast of Africa, with the intent to sell the vessel on that coast, every person so offending, on conviction before the circuit court of the United States, for any district wherein he may be brought or afterwards found, shall pay ten thousand dollars, and be imprisoned for a term not exceeding three years, at the discretion of the court. Every charter of an American ship or vessel at any such foreign place, with the intent that the vessel shall be employed in the African slave trade, and every sale of an American ship or vessel on the coast of Africa, except it shall be duly condemned as unseaworthy, is to be illegal and void.

When any citizen or other person shall lodge information with the attorney of the district of any State or Territory, against any person for the violation of the act, by any sale or charter, or attempt to sell or charter any American vessel, contrary to the provisions of this act, it is to be the duty of the attorney to commence a prosecution against the offender, and upon conviction of such offense, the informer or informers who shall have lodged the information, as aforesaid, are to be entitled to receive one half the net sum recovered and paid into the hands of the marshal of the district, exclusive of costs; and every vessel illegally sold or chartered, contrary to any of the provisions of this act, is with all her tackle and furniture, to be forfeited to the United States, which, after condemnation by any court of the United States in the district into which she may be brought or found, are to be sold, and one half the proceeds paid over to any citizen, or other person, who shall have lodged the necessary information before the attorney of the district for the condemnation of the vessel.

Every owner or agent for the sale of an American ship or vessel, who shall sell such ship or vessel in any of the ports as described, and every purchaser thereof, are, at the time of the execution of the instrument of writing in the nature of a bill of sale for the transfer of the vessel, to make oath or affirmation before a minister or consul of the United States residing at the place, that the vessel is not intended to be engaged in the African slave trade, which oath or affirmation is to be reduced to writing by the minister or consul, and by him duly certified and transmitted to the Department of State of the United States, which certificate, or a copy thereof, under the hand and seal of the Secretary of State, is to be evidence in any court of the United States; and if any such owner, agent, or purchaser, shall swear or affirm falsely in the premises, he is to be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall, on conviction suffer all the pains and penalties imposed by the acts of Congress for willful and corrupt perjury. Each party to every charter party executed in any foreign port is to make the same oath or affirmation, to be taken, certified, and transmitted, and a copy authenticated and proved in the same manner, and he is to be punishable in the same way for swearing or affirming falsely. No such instrument in the nature of a bill of sale, and no such charter party is to be held legal and valid unless the provisions of the act shall have been complied with.

Mr. CLAYTON. I have only one small amendment to offer. It is in the first section, to strike out the words, "North or South America," and in lieu thereof to insert "on the Atlantic coast of America, or on any island, gulf, bay, inlet, or river, on or near that coast." The object of this amendment is to confine the foreign port or place where these sea-letters shall be prohibited in the way they are by the bill, to the Atlantic coast, instead of the Pacific coast of North and South America.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, I have but a few words to say upon the merits of the bill. We now maintain a squadron, and we have four ships on the coast of Africa. The English have twenty-seven, and the French twelve or thirteen. The English and French together have about forty vessels on the coast of Africa, and we but four. It is but a fair calculation to say that they have eight times the force there, that we have. Now the effect of this bill is simply this: Even if our squadron be withdrawn from the coast of Africa, which this bill does not contemplate, it will put eight times the force on the coast of Africa for the suppression of the slave trade which exists there now, because it deprives every slaver of American nationality, and, in consequence of that, a foreign cruiser can search her and seize her. Without this alteration in the law, a foreign vessel cannot seize, cannot search her. If she, as I stated the other day, has a thousand slaves in her hold when a foreign cruiser boards her, she cannot stop her. Then, sir, the bill recommends itself at once, without further discussion, to the humane consideration of every gentleman present. I hope, without further debate, it may pass now, in order that it may go to the House of Representatives in time to become a law during the session.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I shall vote for this bill in the form in which it is now presented to the Senate; but still, I desire to make a suggestion to the honorable Senator who has reported it, which, if adopted, will meet my approbation, and will, I think, make the bill much more effectual. I think I am justified in saying that there is no commerce between the Atlantic coast of South America and the coast of Africa, in which our vessels have been engaged, which is not directly connected with the slave trade; or, in other words, none of our vessels leave the South American Atlantic coast for Africa, except for the purpose of participating in the slave trade.

The bill, therefore, in my judgment, should be one absolutely prohibiting trade in American vessels between the South American Atlantic coast and Africa, and forfeiting the vessel for any engagement in that commerce. Then, let the bill contain a further provision, that where any transfer has been made in the islands adjacent to us the vessel shall return home and take out new papers.

The object of granting sea-letters, I take it, originally was to benefit the navigating interest, to encourage ship building in the United States, in order that American vessels might be sold abroad. I so understand it. If a sale were made in a South American port, as low down as Brazil, or lower, and you were to compel that vessel to return to the United States and obtain a bill of sale before the transfer was made, you might find it impossible, in many instances, to sell where you can sell by granting a sea-letter. I would not, therefore, compel a return of the vessel absolutely, before the sale of the vessel in those ports, to get a bill of sale from the proper officers in the United States; but I would absolutely prohibit the trade in that vessel between the South American Atlantic coast and the coast of Africa. Then there can be no avoiding the provision.

Why, sir, the law is well enough now, but for an avoidance of it; and let me tell the honorable Senator from Delaware; that in my judgment, men who will engage in this traffic, will find ways enough to evade the provisions of this bill. There is no adequate method by which the trade can be suppressed, except by prohibiting intercourse entirely between these two coasts. I have come to this conclusion from a long conference with gentlemen who have resided in Brazil, and from a thorough investigation of it with a gentleman of Virginia, who was at the time resident in that place. He satisfied me, beyond a doubt, that the only possible way of suppressing the trade was to declare it illegal in whole from these southern ports, and then require your vessels absolutely to return from the islands which are nearest—Cuba, Jamaica, and all those islands—before transfer.

This latter provision may be some hardship. Perhaps sales may be sometimes prevented, if you require our vessels to return from there; but still the distance is not so great as to make it very onerous upon them; and a bill containing these two provisions, in my judgment, would be vastly more effective, and vastly more certain of producing the results which the honorable Senator from Delaware desires. Still, I shall vote for the bill in its present form, if it cannot undergo this alteration.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, I could make the bill more effectual, as the honorable Senator says, very readily by prohibiting all trade whatever from any Atlantic port, or any West India port; but, then I should trespass on a great principle of policy to which the United States have uniformly adhered; and that is, not to interfere with either the ship-building or the navigating interest of the country. That has been the cherished policy of the Government.

Now, sir, I do not wish to have this great measure encounter any such opposition as this bill will meet if the suggestion of my honorable friend be adopted. I do not say that, thinking as I do of this inhuman traffic, I might not agree with him, even at the expense of the navigating interest, in the suggestion he has made. But, sir, I am satisfied that this bill is sufficient for the purposes we have in view, and it is not necessary at all to interfere either with the navigating interest, or the ship-building interest of the country.

I think it is true that there is not a very extensive trade between the South American and African coasts, but nevertheless there is a trade, the extent of which probably neither the honorable Senator nor myself is aware of. Our trade is growing with that country, and will continue to grow between different parts of the world, every year.

Here, sir, we have in view the adoption of a great measure of humanity, and in endeavoring to get it through, let us avoid bringing it into conflict with any of these questions of national policy. As the bill now stands, it cannot interfere at all with the navigating interest of the country, nor with the ship-building interest in any form. It cannot encounter objection from any man who is not resolved that the African slave trade shall go on as it has under these sea-letters. I trust, therefore, that the bill will pass as it stands.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, I regret that I am not better acquainted with the strategy and detail of commerce, and especially this kind of commerce which it is proposed to suppress. I will say, however, that there is no Senator who will go further than I will to suppress this traffic, which is abhorred by God and denounced by man. Its suppression is a measure that commends itself to the consideration and the approval of every man of heart in the country, as I believe.

I regret, sir, that I have not had an opportunity to examine the details of this bill. No such opportunity has been given the Senate at all. The bill has been but recently brought before the body. I urged the Senator at his seat to consent to let the matter lie over until Monday, but he did not see fit to do so. I hope that something will arise that shall render it necessary to pass the bill over, until we can consider it further.

Before I sit down, I shall offer an amendment to this bill, providing for putting into the hands of the colonization society some funds, to furnish them help and aid to suppress this trade. Such a measure, in my judgment, will be more efficient than even this bill. Nothing, in my opinion, is so well calculated to suppress that trade as to create a cordon of civilized towns upon the African coast, south of the present settlements in Liberia. A small amount of money, probably one third or one fourth the amount which it now costs us to maintain the squadron which we are bound by the Ashburton treaty to keep up on the African coast, will do four times as much service in the suppression of the slave trade as is now done by the maintenance of that squadron. I am therefore by no means wedded to its continuance. I am willing that the treaty shall be abrogated, so far as that is concerned, provided always we get something more efficient to take its place. But, sir, I am not willing now, in view of the passage of a recent measure that has excited the country, to remove and repeal the last barrier, as it will be said, whether truly or not, to the suppression of the slave trade, with a view to the importation of slaves into the country to answer a supposed increased demand. I cannot consent to withdraw that squadron, unless something more efficient, or, at least, as efficient, be placed in its stead.

I believe, sir, that, instead of appropriating eight hundred thousand or a million of dollars a year for the maintenance of eighty guns on the coast of Africa, an annual appropriation of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to the American Colonization Society, to enable them to ply steamers between our coast and the African coast, with ordinary equipments, perhaps one long gun and other preparations for seizing and suppressing African slavers, and with a view to the purchase of tracts of country from time to time on this coast, upon which to plant your emigrant negroes and build up civilized societies, will be the most efficient measure that can be adopted. On this coast slaves are now brought to market and sold there, as is well known, to traders for this continent and its adjacent islands. I believe that, by enabling the American Colonization Society to settle it with civilized communities, we should do tenfold more to suppress the slave trade than by the maintenance of the present squadron, or even the provisions of this bill.

The subject has not been well matured by me, but there can be, in my judgment, nothing so well calculated to suppress slavery and the slave trade, as civilization. Put civilization as a wall along the coast of Africa, where these creatures are brought from the interior by their brethren and sold to the cupidity of American traders, and you will at once, I believe, effectually suppress this trade. I wish to accomplish that object. But not being willing that our present preventive measures shall pass from our hands; not being willing that this provision of the Ashburton treaty shall be abrogated, or even that this bill shall be passed at present; and not being willing to trust to the liberality of Senators and members to pass what, in my judgment, the occasion demands, after the adoption of this bill, I shall insist, before it be passed, that some provision like that which I now offer shall be adopted, or some evidence given that it will be adopted. With that view I offer the following additional sections, as an amendment to the bill:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $250,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the order of the proper officer of the American Colonization Society, for the year ending 30th of June, 1855, for the purpose of enabling said society to establish a line of steam vessels consisting of two steamers. Said steamers shall each make three trips within the year, and, as near as possible, at regular intervals, alternating between the ports of New York, Baltimore, Norfolk, Savannah, and New Orleans, and the west coast of Africa, touching at such places as said society shall direct.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the Government of the United States shall have the privilege of transporting to and from West Africa, the Government mails, and likewise the Government stores, each trip.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That said society shall arm each steamer with one long, heavy gun, on a pivot, and two small guns, and shall man them with a proper complement of seamen to render efficient service, under private commissions from the Government, to repress and check slavers on the line of their voyage between this country and the west coast of Africa, and along the line of said coast, and on their return voyage shall run down said coast as low as Cabinda, and return cruising along said coast as high as the Gambia.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not prevail. If it be adopted it may perhaps defeat the bill. If the honorable gentleman desires to offer such a proposition as that the Government of the United States shall employ the Colonization Society in the business of navigating steamers between this country and Liberia, let him bring it forward on some other occasion. Let him bring it forward on some occasion when it will not embarrass a measure of this salutary character. There is nothing of necessary connection between this amendment and the bill.

I, sir, am myself a friend of the Colonization Society, and I should be very happy to see it advanced in all its great objects; but I do think that if this amendment be engrafted on the bill at this time, it will defeat it. We know that honorable gentlemen here, who are friendly to the bill as it stands, are directly opposed to this amendment. There is no necessary connection whatever between the two. I trust, therefore, that as the honorable gentleman professes to be in favor of the bill, he will consent to withdraw the amendment, if he discovers, as I think he will, on a very slight examination, that it must necessarily obstruct the passage of the measure.

I do not go into a discussion of the questions arising out of the amendment the gentleman has proposed. I confine myself in my objection to it to this single remark, that it must have the effect of impeding the passage of the bill. There is barely time now left for the bill to pass through the House of Representatives as well as the Senate, although I believe there is a general feeling in favor of the measure, in both branches of Congress. I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment.

Mr. PETTIT. I will not say that the honorable Senator from Delaware is opposed to this measure to appropriate any money for the suppression of the slave trade, but he talks very much like a member of any legislative body who is opposed to a measure submitted. He says this is not the right place, it is wrong; it has no connection with this bill, move it somewhere else. Move it again, when we have the least possible chance of success, is the advice the Senator gives me.

Sir, so far as relates to its connection with this bill, none could be more appropriate. The bill is entitled "A bill for the more effectual suppression of the slave trade in American-built vessels," and nothing can be more appropriate for that purpose than the appropriation of a small amount of money to carry out the object. What could be more efficient than the plying of two steamers which it is proposed shall be plied? What could be more efficient than the appropriation of the money proposed by it?

I desire, Mr. President, however, while I am up, to say, that I shall press this amendment, or something in its form. I am not willing that this bill shall pass, that the subject shall be up in any form, that the abrogation of the treaty of 1842 shall take place, withdrawing our squadron from that coast, unless there shall be some substitute for it. I desire, however, to ask that the whole subject may lie upon the table, and the bill be ordered to be reprinted, with the amendment, in order that Senators may see it. It may need some pruning, some alteration, and some amendment; and until Senators can see it, they cannot well make up their minds. I move that the bill lie on the table, and be ordered to be reprinted with the amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the Senator will withdraw that for a moment.

Mr. PETTIT. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. The honorable Senator labors under an entire misapprehension of the character of the bill. Why, sir, the bill has nothing to do with the abrogation of the fifth article of the Ashburton treaty of 1842. It contains no provision on that subject whatever. It has nothing to do with it. It contains provisions for the suppression of the slave trade in American-built vessels, but it does not, in any part of it, refer to the Ashburton treaty, or to the withdrawal of any part of our squadron from the coast of Africa.

Mr. PETTIT. Another proposition does contemplate that.

Mr. CLAYTON. What is the effect of the Senator's proposition? To order this to lie on the table until he can have time to look at it further. The session is nearly at an end; we have no time to lose. If honorable Senators concur with me in the beneficent character of this measure, and the humanity of it, they will, unless they have objection to it, assist me in its passage, and I call upon them to stand by me and assist me in passing it now, in order that the other branch of Congress may have an opportunity to act upon it.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope this subject will go over. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana presents a very important question; and I think it is likely to commit the United States to the adoption of a very dangerous policy. At any rate, I should like to have time to look into it further. I hope, therefore, it will be allowed to go over. We ought not to be hurried to a vote on such a subject as this.

Mr. PETTIT. I move to postpone the further consideration of the subject until Wednesday, as the Senate has agreed to adjourn from to-day until Wednesday; and that the bill be reprinted with the amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does the honorable Senator from Virginia propose to sustain the amendment of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HUNTER. No, sir; I am opposed to it as far as I understand it. I wish to examine it further, however.

Mr. CLAYTON. Would the honorable Senator under any circumstances give $250,000 to the Colonization Society for this purpose?

Mr. HUNTER. Certainly not. But I wish to look further into the matter.

Mr. BRIGHT. I sympathize with my colleague, and think his amendment germane to the bill. If he intends to press the consideration of the subject upon the attention of Congress at this session, it cannot be so properly done upon any bill as upon this. The amendment is an important one; it appropriates a large sum of money. The hour of one o'clock is arrived, at which the Senator from Texas is entitled to the floor. I therefore hope the subject will be postponed for the purpose of letting him proceed with his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BADGER in the chair.) The question is on the motion to postpone the further consideration of the subject until Wednesday next, and that the bill be reprinted with the amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. It is not to order it to lie on the table.

Mr. PETTIT. No, sir; I submitted a motion to postpone in place of the other motion.

The motion was agreed to.

TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. GWIN. I move that the Senate take up the bill to authorize the construction of a line of telegraph from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean, not for the purpose of considering it now, but to postpone it until Wednesday next, so as to have it considered then. It has been reported from the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to offer a few amendments to the bill. It will take but a few moments for their consideration. The first is in the first section of the substitute of the committee, to strike out the words "or some other point on the Pacific coast." The object is to make the termination definite at San Francisco instead of indefinite.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The next amendment is in the second section of the substitute reported from the committee, to insert after the word "and" the word "after," so as to provide that—

"Said working stations are to be supplied with all the requisite telegraph apparatus, instruments, operators, and men necessary to its efficiency and reliability; and the same shall be completed and put in operation within two years from the passage of the bill, and after such State legislation as may be necessary to authorize its construction by the States through which it may pass."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The next I propose is to add, after the word "legislation," in the same clause, "shall have been secured." It is a mere verbal amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The next amendment is in the sixth section of the committee's substitute, to insert after the word "lands" the words "excluding all mineral lands." It now provides for land warrants to be issued for two millions of acres of lands. The amendment is, that all mineral lands shall be excluded therefrom.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The next amendment is to add after the word "section," in the same section of the committee's substitute, the words, "in alternate sections." That is in the clause giving the right to select from the public lands along the line of the telegraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The next amendment is in the same section to strike out the word "less" and insert the word "more." As it now reads, it gives the right to select "not less than a section or more than a township in one body." The amendment is to make it read, "not more than a section."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I next propose to strike out of the sixth section the words: "Nor more than a township in one body. If more than a township shall be selected in the same locality, alternate townships only shall be taken." The bill will then simply provide for the sections to be taken in alternate sections, instead of townships.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I next propose, in the same section, after the word "surveyed," to insert "if practicable," so that the clause shall read, "where unsurveyed lands shall have been selected, the President of the United States shall cause the same to be surveyed, if practicable."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The last amendment which I propose is in the proviso of the sixth section, after the word "with," to insert "the location and," so that the proviso shall read:

"That in the event a railroad to the Pacific ocean shall be located on or near said line of telegraph, the grant of land contemplated in this section shall be so located as not to interfere with the location, and any grant Congress may make in aid of the construction of said railroad."

Mr. GWIN. These amendments have been made at my suggestion, and others may be necessary before the bill is perfected. That in regard to the exclusion of mineral lands from donation I had inserted to put a stop to the circulation of falsehoods in my own State that, because these land donation grants do not, in express terms, exclude the mineral lands, they can be selected as other public lands, if the bills asking for those grants become laws. This is not true; but those who have told one falsehood to prejudice me among my constituents will repeat it on every occasion that a pretext is given them. Years ago, soon after I took my seat in this body, I advocated the exclusion of the mineral region in California from the operation of general legislation in regard to the public lands; and it is now the law of the land, and through my agency. Yet I intend every bill donating the public lands, that may apply to California, to have an express provision excluding the mineral lands from its operation, to prevent enemies from misrepresenting me to my constituents. I move now the postponement of the further consideration of the subject until half past twelve o'clock, on Wednesday next.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ought to have stated that the amendments were all made with the approbation of the Committee on Territories.

Mr. GWIN's motion was agreed to.

JAMES ROBERTSON.

Mr. EVANS. A man of the name of Robertson, who is probably known to every Senator, sometime since presented a claim, through a memorial, which was laid before the Senate by the Senator from Mississippi. It was referred to the Committee on the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and a report is now before the body on the subject, which I ask, as a special favor to myself, may be disposed of now. I am harassed day by day by his applications. I have just received a note from him, in which he says that General Houston is willing to defer the commencement of his speech, in order to enable him to have this thing acted upon.

Mr. HOUSTON. If it should lead to no debate, I have no objection.

Mr. EVANS. I presume there will be no debate. The report is adverse to the claim; but he tells me that more than a majority of the Senate are disposed to give him something. He particularly mentions my friend from Iowa, [Mr. DODGE], who is on the same committee as myself. I move that the report be taken up, so that we may dispose of it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I shall not certainly interfere with the Senator from South Carolina, if it be possible to dispose of this report immediately. I have already given way this morning to gentlemen, to enable them to bring forward their bills, but it seems to me that the applications multiply; still, if this subject can be disposed of without debate, I shall yield with pleasure.

Mr. EVANS. If it gives rise to debate I shall consent to postpone it.

Mr. HOUSTON. With that understanding, I give way.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to consider the report.

The committee do not consider the case as coming within the subjects of their cognizance. Their proper business is to audit and control the funds set apart yearly for the contingent expenses of the Senate. The claim of the petitioner is for damages sustained by reason of the unlawful arrest and imprisonment by the officers of the Senate. This cannot be considered as one of the contingent expenses of the Senate which it is the duty of the committee to audit or control. If the petitioner is entitled to any damages, it should be granted by an act of Congress, or by a resolution of the Senate. Taking this view of the case, they are unable to conjecture why the petition was referred to them, unless it be that they should report on the facts. The subject has been more than once before the Senate, and two very full reports have been heretofore made, which, it is believed, embody all the facts of the case. To these, the committee have nothing to add, except that so far as has appeared to them, the petitioner is a harmless and inoffensive man, and had no design on the life of Mr. Clay, on a suspicion of which he was arrested by the officers of the Senate. He had conceived the notion that Mr. Clay had done him great injuries, and was unworthy of a seat in the Senate. He had drawn a memorial setting out his charges, and had applied to Mr. Foote, of Mississippi, to present it, and had come into the Senate Chamber with a view to get it presented. This led to the apprehension that his mind was disordered, and in order to prevent any act of violence, whilst under this delusion, he was arrested and committed to prison.

Although the committee do not consider the subject as falling within the sphere of their duty, yet they were willing to collect the facts and to recommend, as has been heretofore done, some reasonable gratuity to one in his condition; but, on conversing with him, his demands were so exorbitant that they decline to make any recommendation—leaving it to his friends, of whom, he says, he has many in the Senate, to submit a resolution for further compensation, if it is considered he has any claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BADGER in the chair.) The Chair does not perceive that this report contains any recommendation for the action of the Senate.

Mr. PETTIT. I move that the Senate concur in the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair supposes that the Senator's intention is to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the subject.

Mr. PETTIT. Yes, sir.

Mr. EVANS. Some Senator may have a proposition to offer.

Several Senators. Oh, no.

The motion to discharge the committee was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the resolution providing for the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

Mr. GWIN. I am instructed by the committee of conference to make a report. It is of course the same as that which has been concurred in by the House. I hope it will be concurred in by the Senate.

The report was read. It recommends that the House recede from their original resolution, that the Senate recede from their amendment thereto, and that the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House adjourn their respective Houses sine die on Friday, the 4th of August, at twelve o'clock, m.

The report was concurred in.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BADGER in the chair.) The Senator from Texas, in pursuance of notice, asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to make a personal explanation. If there be no objection, the Senator will now proceed.

Unanimous consent was given.

Mr. HOUSTON addressed the Senate for nearly three hours, in the course of which he quoted much documentary testimony in relation to the late Texas Navy, and certain acts of Commodore E. W. Moore, when Texas was an independent Republic, and the Senator was its President. The subject of incorporating the officers of the Texas Navy with that of the United States, has frequently been before Congress, and a personal controversy has arisen, which the Senator from Texas thought required from him the explanation and statement which he this day made. His speech will be published in the Appendix.

LAND SYSTEM IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill of the House of Representatives, "to establish the offices of surveyor general of New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes," have instructed me to report it back without amendment. I wish to state that this is exactly similar to a bill which passed the Senate with the addition of a section providing for a surveyor general's office for the two Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, and a land office for each. As it is important that we should have early action on the subject, I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

REFERENCE OF HOUSE BILLS.

The bill from the House of Representatives further to amend the act entitled "An act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States, and for other purposes," passed March 3, 1851, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The House bill for the relief of A. B. Roman, of Louisiana, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The joint resolution from the House to correct a clerical error in an act approved June 22, 1854, to authorize a register to be issued to the steamer El Paraguay by a new name, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

TITLE TO LANDS.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. The Committee on Public Lands have instructed me to report a bill "to vest in the several States and Territories the title in fee of the lands which have been, or may be certified to them." This bill is stated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to be necessary, in consequence of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States at its last term. I am sure no one will object to the bill. I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the bill was read twice and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that where lands have been, or shall hereafter be granted by any law of Congress to any State or Territory; and where the law does not convey the fee simple title of the lands, or require patents to be issued therefor, the lists of such lands which have been, or may hereafter be certified by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the seal of the office, either as originals, or copies of the originals or records, shall be regarded as conveying the fee simple of all the lands embraced in such lists of the character contemplated by such act of Congress, and intended to be granted thereby; but where lands embraced in such lists are not of the character embraced by the acts of Congress, and are not intended to be granted thereby, those lists, so far as these lands are concerned, shall be null and void, and no right, title, claim, or interest shall be conveyed thereby.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 1, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER yesterday appointed Messrs. ORR, MATTESON, and BARKSDALE the committee of conference on the part of the House to meet a like committee on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses with reference to the resolution of the House fixing a day for the adjournment sine die of the present session of Congress.

ISAAC BOWMAN.

Mr. EDDY. I ask leave of the House to make a correction of a report made by me yesterday in the case of Isaac Bowman. Perhaps I failed in being understood by the Speaker of the House, when I made that report in this case. I stated at the time that the committee concurred in a former report, and that they asked to be discharged from its further consideration. If I did not say this, it was my object to say that the committee had concurred in a former report made by the same committee, and that they desired the adoption of a resolution by the House that they should be discharged from its further consideration. I ask that the Journal be corrected in this respect.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana made a report from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims for the relief of Isaac Bowman. He states that the committee directed him to report its concurrence in a former resolution adopted by the committee, which is in the following words:

"Resolved, That the petition in the case of Isaac Bowman be referred to the Secretary of the Interior for liquidation, under the act of April 5, 1832, and that this committee be discharged from its further consideration."

This is the resolution in which the committee concurred, and which they reported to the House. The Chair did not understand that a vote was to be had upon that resolution, and in the usual form directed that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the case, as requested by the gentleman making the report, and that the report lie upon the table. The gentleman from Indiana, and the committee, it seems, intended to have the action of the House upon the resolution in favor of the claimant, and that the papers should be transmitted to the Department. It will be for the House to determine what course it will take upon the subject.

Mr. HAVEN. I could not hear what the gentleman from Indiana said. I desire to know if he supposes that the Secretary has power, under existing law, to act upon the subject without our conferring on him additional power?

Mr. EDDY. I suppose he has.

Mr. HAVEN. If that is so, we may as well pass the resolution, as it is not a joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the question will be upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. COBB. I ask the gentleman from Indiana what act is referred to?

Mr. EDDY. I will explain. Lieutenant Isaac Bowman was a lieutenant in the Illinois regiment, under the command of General George Roger Stock. From the evidence before the committee, there can scarcely be the shadow of a doubt but that the services for which the claim is made were performed by Lieutenant Bowman in that regiment, and performed for a period which should entitle him to a pension under the act of 1832. I suppose it is scarcely necessary to go into the history of the case now. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] Not one of the committee to whom the case was referred entertained a doubt of the justice of the claim. It was a clear one; and the claimant is a very meritorious man.

The resolution was then agreed to.

DUTIES ON FOREIGN MERCHANDISE.

Mr. FULLER. I have a Senate bill here (No. 245) which I desire to have put upon its passage; and I ask the unanimous consent of the House for that purpose. It is a bill for the purpose of facilitating the payment in specie of duties on the importation of foreign merchandise, as it seems that serious inconvenience exists under the present law. It is a bill "to amend the provisions of the fifty-sixth section of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the collection of duties on imports and tonnage,' approved 2d March, 1799."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Let us hear the bill read for information.

The bill was read in extenso by the Clerk.

It provides that whenever merchandise is imported into any port of the United States from any foreign country, in vessels propelled, in whole or in part, by steam, and when it shall appear that such merchandise is to be delivered immediately after the entry of the vessel, it shall be lawful for the collector of the customs to take possession of said merchandise, and deposit the same in a bonded warehouse; and whenever it shall not appear that the merchandise is to be immediately delivered, it shall be lawful for the collector of customs to take possession of the same and deposit it in any bonded warehouse at the request of the owner, master, or consignee of the vessel, on three days' notice from such collector.

Mr. DISNEY. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS, of Mississippi. I do not wish to inflict a speech upon the House, and I ask the privilege of printing one.

No objection being made, leave was granted.

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS SINE DIE.

Mr. ORR. I ask leave to submit a report from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution fixing the day of adjournment of the present session of Congress.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference have met, and, after a full and free consultation, have agreed to recommend that the House of Representatives recede from their original resolution; and that the Senate recede from their amendment thereto; and that the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House, do severally adjourn their respective Houses sine die on Friday, the fourth day of August next, at twelve o'clock, m.

Mr. ORR. The committee had a very long conference, and agreed upon the report which has been just read at the Clerk's table. The members of this body are as well prepared, I presume, to vote on this question now as they would be after a further debate. The usual practice in this matter is, I believe, to demand the previous question on the concurrence in every report from a committee of conference. And I therefore demand the question on concurring in this report.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the report of the committee of conference upon the table, and I hope it will be niled there; and if the House would allow me, I could give the reasons.

Mr. ROBBINS. I ask the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 50, nays 114; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Banks, Belcher, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, John G. Davis, Disney, Eddy, English, Everhart, Florence, Fuller, Green, Hendricks, Henn, Hillyer, Hughes, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Lindley, Lindsey, McMullin, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, Mayall, Smith, Miller, Noble, Parker, Bishop Perkins, Pratt, Richardson, Riddle, Rowe, Sabin, Shannon, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, David Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Vail, and Vansant—50.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchill, Clinegar, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Craig, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Dowdell, Eastman, Edmunds, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Ewing, Farley, Faulkner, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Gamble, Greenwood, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W.

Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hiester, Hill, Houston, Howe, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kerr, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, McDougall, McNair, Matteson, May, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Peck, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Alexander H. Stephens, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Trout, Wade, Walley, Walsh, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, and Zollcoffer—114.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The question then recurred upon seconding the call for the previous question.

Mr. ORR demanded tellers thereon.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ROBBINS and CORWIN were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported 75 in the affirmative, and 66 in the negative.

So the previous question was seconded.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for the yeas and nays upon ordering the main question?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to know if it will be in order to move to reject the report of the committee of conference, and raise a new committee?

The SPEAKER. If the House refuse to adopt the report of the committee, it will then be in order to move to appoint another committee.

Mr. McMULLIN. Well, sir, I give notice that, if the report be rejected, I shall make that motion.

The question was then put upon ordering the main question; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 102, nays 63; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, David J. Bailey, Banks, Barksdale, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Breckinridge, Bridges, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chastain, Chrisman, Clingan, Colquitt, Corwin, Cox, Craig, Crocker, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Dowdell, Edmunds, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Ewing, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Gamble, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Harrison, Haven, Hill, Houston, Howe, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Letcher, Lindsey, McCulloch, McNair, Matteson, May, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Peck, Phelps, Powell, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Alexander H. Stephens, John L. Taylor, Trout, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Yates, and Zollcoffer—102.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Ashe, Belcher, Brooks, Campbell, Caskey, Clark, Cobb, John G. Davis, Disney, Eastman, Eddy, English, Everhart, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Green, Grow, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hiestor, Hillyer, Hughes, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Lilly, Lindsey, McMullin, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, Mayall, Smith Miller, Milson, Noble, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Bishop Perkins, Phillips, Pratt, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Rowe, Sabin, Shannon, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hestor L. Stevens, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Walsh, and Wells—63.

So the main question was ordered to be put, being upon adopting the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. DISNEY demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 114, nays 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingan, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Craig, Crocker, Culom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Dowdell, Edmunds, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, English, Ewing, Farley, Faulkner, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Gamble, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hiestor, Hill, Houston, Howe, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, Matteson, May, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Peck, Phelps, Powell, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, Alexander H. Stephens, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Wade, Walley, Walsh, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Yates, and Zollcoffer—114.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashe, Banks, Belcher, Campbell, Caskey, Clark, Cobb, John G. Davis, Disney, Eastman, Eddy, Everhart, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Green, Grow, Hendricks, Henn, Hillyer, Hughes, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Lindsey, McMullin, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, Mayall, Smith Miller, Milson, Noble, Parker, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Phillips, Pratt, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Rowe, Sabin, Shannon, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hestor L. Stevens, David Stuart, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Vail, Vansant, and Wells—54.

So the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the vote by which the report was adopted be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider lie upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE IN THE HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. HENN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That when this House adjourns on Monday next, it adjourn to meet at eleven o'clock, a. m., on Wednesday, the 5th instant, and that thereafter the regular hour for meeting each day shall be eleven o'clock, a. m., until otherwise ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to make an appeal to the House. I am aware that it is hot weather, and that it is Saturday afternoon. But I wish, nevertheless, to ask the House to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and take up the civil and diplomatic bill. If members will agree to do it, we can finish that bill to-day.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope that the House will do no such thing.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. I will tell the House, that, having fixed the day for the final adjournment, we shall be told, day after day, by the members of the Committee of Ways and Means, that the whole time of the House must be appropriated to the consideration of the business of that committee. The appropriation bills are to have our whole time and attention, to the neglect of the general business of the country.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think we had better take the question at once. If this discussion proceeds, the whole day may be occupied by it.

The question was taken; and Mr. McMULLIN's motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 79, nays 51.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, (Mr. WALLEY in the chair.)

RICHARD W. MEADE, DECEASED.

The CHAIRMAN. The question under consideration when the committee rose was the bill for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Richard W. Meade, deceased, on which, by order of the House, general debate has been closed. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHANDLER] having reported the bill, is, under the rule, entitled to address the committee an hour.

Mr. CHANDLER. The history of the claim of Richard W. Meade is the argument in its favor. When I presented the case to the committee, some time since, I took occasion to state how the claim originated, and how it came to be, in my opinion, and the opinion of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, a claim on the Treasury of the United States. I shall disturb nobody if I partly repeat that statement by declaring that the Governments of Spain and the United States negotiated a treaty, of February 22, 1810, in which the Government of the United States agreed to settle and pay all claims which our citizens should have at that time against Spain, provided that these claims had been filed in the Department of State. That treaty included the claim of Richard W. Meade.

Another article of the treaty was, that if both Governments did not ratify that treaty, it should, at the termination of six months, cease to be binding upon either party. On the 23d August, Spain, owing to the convulsions of that Government, had failed to comply with that last mentioned article of the treaty, and it fell. Richard W. Meade then renewed his negotiation with the Spanish Government, asking for a liquidation of this claim. A portion of this claim was allowed, and an order given him upon the treasury of the King for the payment of it. After that negotiation, after the settlement of that claim, and after its liquidation, and the signing of an order upon the treasury, the two Governments entered anew into a negotiation for a treaty; and that treaty was brought before the Cortes of Spain in October, 1820; and when the Cortes were considering it, Mr.

Meade himself was an applicant to that body for the payment of his debt. Very wisely a member of that Cortes asked whether the new treaty also included the claim of Mr. Meade? Because it was a large claim, and because it was necessary to settle all matters, a committee was appointed to wait upon the American Minister to ask him whether the claim of Mr. Meade was included in this treaty, as it was in the last treaty—this one being the same except in one of its provisions, which I shall notice afterwards. The answer, that committee brought back to the Cortes was, that the claim of Mr. Meade was included in this treaty, and that the Government of the United States by that pledge relieved Spain from the payment of the debt. On these grounds the Cortes of Spain recommended to the King the ratification of the treaty, and on these grounds the King of Spain did ratify it.

I hold in my hands the letter of one of the members of that Cortes, alluding to the matter. Mr. Guerra, who had been a member of the Cortes, and a special agent to whom the treaty had been referred, in a deposition taken at Philadelphia before Francis Hopkinson, deposes and says:

"The said Joseph Moreno Guerra, on his solemn oath, doth depose and say: That he is a native of the town of Rumbia, province of Cordova, Andalusia, in Spain, and is aged about forty-six years and upwards; that he was duly elected, from his native province, a deputy to the National Cortes of Spain, in the year 1820, for that and the following year, 1821; and that the said Cortes assembled at Madrid on the 7th day of July, 1820; that on or about the beginning of October, in the same year, the Cortes discussed the question relating to the treaty signed during the year before, at the city of Washington, between Spain and the United States of America, involving a cession of the two Floridas. At the same time a special committee, to whom the business of that treaty had been referred, made a report on a memorial previously presented by the agent of Richard W. Meade, of Philadelphia, in the United States, claiming an appropriation for the payment of a sum acknowledged to be due him by his majesty the King of Spain.

"This committee, in their report, informed the Cortes that, in order to decide definitively upon the claim of the memorialist, it was necessary to ascertain whether the amount of money due to Richard W. Meade, and to those who were represented by him, had been included among those claims which the Government of the United States undertook to pay, and from which it was wholly to exonerate Spain; for, if this should not prove to have been done, the debt owing to Richard W. Meade, in particular, ought immediately to be paid, as it was considered a national debt, arising either directly out of contracts, or from the consequences of contracts, made by him in aid of the liberty and independence of Spain at the most critical periods of the Revolution; that at the periods of those contracts, and in the full confidence that they would be fulfilled, the services of Meade had been of the most important kind; and that the sum for which payment was required had been liquidated and fixed by a special commission of councillors appointed for that purpose by his Majesty, the King, who had subsequently sanctioned and approved the settlement.

In consequence of this report of the committee, it was proposed in the Cortes to address an official letter to the Secretary of State, to ascertain whether or not the sum then claimed in the memorial above-mentioned had been included among those which the United States undertook to discharge. Such a letter was accordingly written by the Secretary of the Cortes, in the usual manner, and a reply from the Secretary of State was received, stating distinctly that the debt due to Richard W. Meade was expressly included in the treaty; that the nature and amount of said debt were well known to the Government of the United States, as the same had been officially communicated to the American Minister residing at Madrid; but that the same Government of the United States required the large cessions of lands made to the Duke of Alagon, Count Puno Rostro, and Mr. Vargas, to be cancelled, considering the entire Floridas appropriated to the payment of the claims of its citizens upon the Spanish Government. In order to avoid any possible misunderstanding or mistake upon this subject, it was proposed in the Cortes that a committee of two of its members should be appointed to wait on the Minister of the United States, Mr. Forsyth; and accordingly this deponent, with Mr. Thomas Isturiz, member of the city Cadiz, were appointed, did wait on Mr. Forsyth, and obtained from that gentleman the clear and distinct assurance that the debt due to Richard W. Meade would certainly be paid to him by the United States, if the treaty were ratified by the Spanish Government, and the cessions above-mentioned totally annulled.

"And this deponent solemnly declares that these assurances, thus conveyed to the Cortes, and these assurances only, induced that body to annul the grants of land in the Floridas, two of which had been acknowledged valid in the treaty itself; that had not the Cortes been perfectly satisfied by these solemn assurances that the national debt (as it was regarded) due to Richard W. Meade, would be fully paid by the United States, as far as respected the United States, but would have vacated them as respects individuals to whom they had been made, reserving them to the Spanish nation by the law of reversion, for the express purpose of paying, by them, the debt due to the said Richard W. Meade, either by their transfer to said Meade, or by sale, and with the product thereof would have paid the debt and interest.

"In this debt to the said Meade, the deponent says that the Cortes took a particular interest, as it arose from contracts, the most of which had been sanctioned by the former Cortes, which sat in Cadiz during the years 1811 and 1812. The Cortes deemed itself especially bound to see such engagements complied with; and the said Meade was considered as more than commonly meritorious, having been unjustly persecuted on account of the services he had rendered the Spanish nation. The deponent adds, that the Cortes founded their right to vacate, as to the individual grantees, the cessions of land in Florida above referred to, and to reserve them for the nation, to be devoted to any purpose that might be deemed just and proper, upon the law called reversion and incorporation, well known in the history and legislation of Spain since the fourteenth century—a law which converts into national property whatever the prodigality of the monarchs might confer on their favorites, as happened with those termed Enrrequenas, and with many others."

The whole of the deposition goes to prove most fully and distinctly that that was the understanding of the Cortes. Another deposition, that of Don Alvaro Flores Estrade, is to the same effect; and there are still others which likewise go to prove the same. Don Alvaro Flores Estrade deposes that he is in possession of most indisputable proof that the Cortes of Madrid acceded to the cession of the Floridas on the basis that the claim of Richard W. Meade should be satisfied by the Government of the United States. It should be known, and I desire gentlemen who feel an interest in the matter to note, that the first treaty, the treaty of February 22, 1819, ceded to the United States the two Floridas; but, of course, did not cede with them the private rights, the fee-simple, which had been granted to three distinguished Spaniards. But, between the negotiations of 1819 and those of 1820, the Cortes of Spain, by the exercise of a power granted to them by an old law of that country, took back the lands which the King of Spain had granted to these three noblemen, and included them in the grant of the Floridas to the United States; and that is what this deponent alludes to when he says that, having withdrawn the land from these individuals, and having included it in the cession made to the United States, Richard W. Meade was to be, as if he had said therefore he was to be, paid the full amount of money due to him from Spain by the Government of the United States because of such an extraordinary grant of the best lands in Florida.

Mr. Chairman, I have examined this claim with more care than I usually give to cases of this kind. I have examined it with the assistance of a lawyer's eyes. I have examined it with a conscientious desire to bring to this House nothing more than was justice, and nothing more than what I should endeavor to do, in all honesty, to persuade this House of the amount justly due to the claimant. When this was decided in Spain when the treaty was signed, it was generally understood that Mr. Meade had no longer any claim upon the Government of Spain. The understanding, of course, arose from a report of the committee of Cortes and the action of that body. He returned, at once to this country, and made arrangements to present his claims before the commission appointed in pursuance of the provisions of that treaty. At the proper time he called upon the commissioners—or waited upon that court, which is a more proper expression—with his claim. After some consideration, they asked him for the vouchers of his claim. He presented to them the order upon the Treasury, signed by the King of Spain. He presented it to them with the same confidence that you would present to the Treasury of the United States any token of indebtedness; a Treasury note, or any certificate of loan, signed by the proper officer of this Government. But the commissioners hesitated. They said: "These are not the vouchers of the original debt; and the law, which is based upon that treaty, the treaty itself, gives us the right to claim those vouchers." They did claim them.

Mr. Meade, pursuing his rights, addressed a letter to the Spanish Minister, asking him to supply him with the ways and means of presenting those vouchers, that he might lay them before the commission. Indignant at the insult, as he considered it; indignant that any one should refuse to comply with the order, and dare to go behind the record, he refused. The court was all the time acting—or, what is more like a commission—was waiting for the supply of these vouchers, that they might decide upon the credit of that claim. They had ceased to doubt that it was included, but they thought they had the right to demand the vouchers; and the fact that they demanded the vouchers is proof that they considered the claim included in the treaty. The Secretary of State of the United States undertook the affair. He addressed our Minister at the court of Spain to call upon the Government and demand the vouchers. The Spanish Government delayed, and stood upon its dignity—a very small standing point it proved, but the Government finally yielded, and promised to supply them.

She sent her orders to the several officers to supply the American Minister with the vouchers from the courts. Those orders were reluctantly given, and were very tardily obeyed. No vouchers came. Mr. Meade grew restive. The Government again interfered. Our Minister there, at length, when the commission was approaching its termination, again interfered, and the Spanish Government offered a part of it, and pleaded, as an excuse for not giving the whole, that there was a great deal of difficulty in complying with the demand, from the fact that the court had changed from Seville to Cadiz, and thence to Madrid, so that the whole archives of those courts were in confusion. They found it difficult, they found it impossible, at that time, to supply the vouchers. The vouchers were necessary, absolutely necessary, to establish the claim.

Mean time, as I have said, the time when this commission was to expire grew near. The law, which gave it existence, gave it existence only for such a time. The board wrote a letter to Mr. Meade, confessing that, in their judgment, the claim was just, but at the same time denying the proof of that justice. If it was founded upon justice, undoubtedly. But the time to which the commission was limited in its existence expired, the money was distributed among the other claimants, and Mr. Meade was left to seek justice from other sources. The letter from the chairman of the commission is worth reading. He speaks of it as a just claim, but states that it was impossible for the commission to allow it, in consequence of the want of these proofs.

These vouchers did not make their appearance; but is that any excuse for not doing justice to this claimant? Suppose Spain had, in the progress of events, refused to give up the Floridas. Suppose, after reflection, she had come to the conclusion that it would be better for her to retain possession of them, and sell the fee-simples out to purchasers. They would have been valuable. But if Spain had done this, everybody knows that an appeal to arms to enforce the treaty would have been the result.

Now, sir, I believe that no one part of a treaty is more binding upon the parties than another. And it was the duty of this Government, when it had made a treaty, to enforce it in all its provisions. It was not only our duty to insist upon the giving up of the Floridas by Spain, but it was our duty to insist upon the carrying out in every respect all the stipulations contained in the treaty. One of those stipulations was that Spain should give up these vouchers; and it was the duty of the Government to insist upon their being given up. Spain held these vouchers, which were against herself. But Spain delayed—this Government delayed—the commission delayed. Mr. Meade, however, did not delay. He was early, constant, and unflinching in his applications for these vouchers. But, sir, they were, as I said, delayed. The commission delayed. They met one day, and did not meet another day. At the end of eight months they had done something. At the end of a year they had done something more, and so it went on. Mr. Meade suffered by the negligence of the commission, and suffered still more from the negligence of his own Government to enforce the treaty. They were bound to enforce it; and shall we allow them to take advantage of their own error? Shall we allow the Government to do what would not be allowed between individuals?

Mr. White, the president of the board of commissioners, said:

"I cannot see that anything has been either said or done, by any of those officers, by which this claim is to be treated different from what it would have been if they had been entirely ignorant of this award at the time the treaty was finally ratified. Although I am unwilling to trust this evidence as at present furnishing any evidence of the validity of these contracts, their terms, or the extent of compensation for a violation of them, yet, believing as I do, from the other testimony, that Mr. Meade has a well founded claim, or at least a claim which the Spanish Government considered well founded, I am perfectly willing to require any document from that Government which there is reason to think they possess which will elucidate those transactions; and for that purpose am willing to continue the cause. If we can procure more evidence, it is well; we shall have greater certainty in our ultimate decision. If we cannot procure more, we must come to the best conclusion in our power, from the proofs as they now exist, as to the validity of the claims and the extent of allowance."

Why, if Mr. Meade had no claim, if he was not included in the cession, was Judge White willing to allow him to take measures, or them to take measures, to prove the claim? If he believed that Mr. Meade was not included in it; if Judge White believed that he had no claim on them by the agreement of the Cortes of Spain and our Minister, their duty, his duty would have been—and none knew it better than Judge White—to reject the whole concern, and reject it whether right or wrong, good or bad, faithful or unfaithful. He should have said, "We have nothing to do with it. The whole question is between Mr. Meade and the Government of Spain; and Mr. Meade and the Government of Spain must make a settlement of it." This must strike the attention of every gentleman who hears me. They admitted that he was included if he had a claim on Spain; I assert that he had a claim, and now ask, by the bill I have presented, that he may be allowed to prove that he had.

Now, sir, I am aware—I hear it while I am talking—I am aware that while I have quoted to this committee the language of the members of the Cortes, there is objection made that Mr. Forsyth, our Minister at the time to Spain, does not agree to it; that he does not think that that was the language. Nothing is more clear in the affidavits presented in the report than the assertions of four or five of the members of the Cortes that, on the understanding of the Spanish Cortes, the Spanish King was authorized to ratify the treaty of 1819, which was renewed in 1820. And, sir, an honorable gentleman, a month or two since, asserted on this floor that Mr. Forsyth did not allow that any such agreement had been made. Mr. Forsyth, after his return, and when this matter had come into discussion between the Secretary of State and the Marquis de Casa Yrujo, bore this testimony:

"Richard W. Meade having submitted to my examination a deposition of Joseph Moreno de Guerra, dated at Philadelphia, the 23d day of April, 1824, and taken before Francis Hopkinson, and by him reduced to writing: On that part of the deposition which relates to myself, I certify that I have no recollection of any conversation with Joseph Moreno de Guerra and Thomas Isturio, both of whom were deputies of the Cortes in 1820, in relation to Mr. Meade's claim. No persons ever presented themselves to me, as a committee of the Spanish Cortes, during my residence in Madrid as the Minister of the United States. If I ever had any conversation with those deputies on the subject of the Florida treaty, I am entirely unconscious that they spoke with me by the authority of that body, or that any importance was attached to the opinion I might express. It is proper to add, that I should have stated, on such application, that I believe Mr. Meade's claim was provided for in the treaty of cession. This opinion was freely expressed to all who conversed with me, and may have been, and no doubt was, to Joseph Moreno de Guerra, in the presence of Mr. Isturio. The only conversation I distinctly recollect was held with Martinez de la Rosa, also a deputy of the Cortes, and of the commission to whom was referred the treaty of 1819.

"Having learned, by accident, that an attempt was about to be made to make a distinction favorable to Meade, between his claim and the claims of other persons embraced in the treaty, I expressed my conviction to Mr. De la Rosa that the claim was just, and was provided for by the treaty, but that it ought to be left to share the same fate, as to its payment, with the equally just claims of other citizens of the United States. The Cortes deliberated in secret session on the subject of the treaty of 1819, and of Mr. Meade's claim. The little information I could obtain of what was done was communicated to my own Government, and is on file in the Department of State. From the nature of the case, I did not consider myself at all answerable for the correctness of the information procured and communicated.

"The conversation I had with Mr. De la Rosa was not considered by me as of sufficient importance to be communicated to the Secretary of State in any of my letters written at Madrid; nor has it ever been stated in writing to the Department since my return home.

"I wish it to be clearly understood that I do not question the accuracy of Joseph Moreno de Guerra's statement further than relates to my conversing with him and Mr. Isturio as a committee from the Cortes. The Cortes may have given them such a commission, and the conversation may have been held in consequence thereof; if it was, I have no recollection of it, and do not know that they were conversing with me officially, and certainly did not say more than that Mr. Meade's claim was included in the treaty of 1819."

Mr. Forsyth says, in this affidavit, that no persons ever called upon him as members of the Cortes. Three or four gentlemen called upon him, but he does not know that he stated what they said years afterward he did state. He thinks that he told them that he asserted it only as Mr.

Forsyth, and not as his Excellency the American Minister.

Does not the fact that he said that Mr. Meade's claim was included, show it was tantamount to saying, although I did say what they attribute to me, yet it was only upon my honor as a man, and not upon my dignity as a Minister. He says:

"If I ever had any conversation with those deputies on the subject of the Florida treaty, I am entirely unconscious that they spoke with me by the authority of that body, or that any importance was attached to the opinion I might express. It is proper to add, that I should have stated, on such application, that I believe MR. MEADE'S CLAIM WAS PROVIDED FOR IN THE TREATY OF CESSION."

He says, though I do not remember that I had any conversation with these gentlemen as members of the Cortes, yet, talking to them as gentlemen, I certainly should have told them that Mr. Meade's claim was included in the cession. He stated this as a man occupying a prominent position in Spain, not as Minister, but as a distinguished gentleman of the United States expressing his opinion. Does Mr. Forsyth mean that he would assert that as a man which he would contradict as an officer? Surely he would not.

MR. EWING. Do I understand the gentleman to say Mr. Forsyth stated that he made this declaration?

MR. CHANDLER. Yes, sir. I have another note in the affidavit of Mr. Forsyth, which I will read:

"I wish it to be clearly understood that I do not question the accuracy of Joseph Moreno de Guerra's statement further than relates to my conversing with him and Mr. Isturiz as a committee from the Cortes. The Cortes may have given them such a commission, and the conversation may have been held in consequence thereof; if it was, I have no recollection of it, and do not know that they were conversing with me officially, and certainly did not say more than that Mr. Meade's claim was included in the treaty of 1819."

MR. COX. My recollection of the matter which gave rise to the inquiry of my colleague is: Mr. Forsyth states that he recollects no conversation whatever; and if he did have a conversation, that he used the language attributed to him in a private capacity. That is my recollection; and if I am at fault, I would like to have it corrected.

MR. CHANDLER. The opinion was freely expressed that he believed Mr. Meade's claim was approved.

MR. COX. He does not say that he recollects having any conversation with them at all, at any time.

MR. CHANDLER. Let the gentleman take his own case. If we were talking about a question which interests a hundred persons, the gentleman does not talk with me alone, but he talks with the ninety-nine other persons. I continue to cite from his testimony:

"The only conversation I distinctly recollect was held with Martinez de la Rosa, also a deputy of the Cortes, and of the commission to whom was referred the treaty of 1819. Having learned by accident that an attempt was about to be made to make a distinction favorable to Meade, between his claim and the claims of other persons embraced in the treaty, I expressed my conviction to Mr. de la Rosa that the claim was just, and was provided for by the treaty."

I expressed my opinion, he says, that the claim of Richard Meade was just, and that it was provided for in the treaty! Why then was it not mentioned? Let us hear! "I expressed my conviction," he says, "that it was just, and was provided for in the treaty, but that it ought to be left to share the same fate, as to its payment, with the equally just claims of other citizens of the United States." And thus he admits that Mr. Meade's claim was included. But he was anxious, as a public officer, not to make any official admission which should place Mr. Meade on a footing superior to that of any other American claimant. We only ask that he may be allowed to occupy the level of all the claimants—of those whose claims were admitted—and paid pro rata.

MR. HOWE. I wish to ask my colleague a question on that point. Is this opinion expressed by Mr. Forsyth before or subsequent to the liquidation of the claim?

MR. CHANDLER. It was subsequent: it was after the treaty. Let me say to the gentleman, [Mr. HOWE,] that the liquidation of the claim was previous to the second treaty, to that treaty which is binding upon us.

MR. HOWE. That is, it was previous to the final ratification of the treaty by Spain?

MR. CHANDLER. Yes; previous to that. It was made in July, and that ratification took place on the 20th of October.

MR. HOWE. But what I want to know is, whether this expression of opinion on the part of our Minister, Mr. Forsyth, was before the liquidation of the claim?

MR. CHANDLER. I misunderstood the question of the gentleman. It was not. Mr. Forsyth expressed his opinion to these gentlemen who came to him when they were getting ready to settle it, and it was the expression of that opinion by Mr. Forsyth, viz: that Mr. Meade was included, that enabled the Cortes to recommend the ratification of a treaty.

MR. HOWE. The reason why I ask the question is this: I understood the treaty to provide for unliquidated claims.

MR. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

MR. HOWE. It seems that Mr. Meade went to the Spanish authorities and procured a liquidation of his claim, which was construed by the commissioners, as I understand it, as taking it without the provisions of the treaty. That is the reason why I asked the question.

MR. CHANDLER. The commissioners admitted the justice of this claim; the Minister admitted it, and admitted also its inclusion in the new treaty, when he states that he had no desire to have this claim specially mentioned, because he would not give him the right to take $390,000 instead of taking that part to which he would be entitled. He did not believe that $5,000,000 would pay all the claims; and he had no idea—although through him came that treaty—that he should get $390,000 in full, while other merchants, claimants, might get but sixty, or eighty, or ninety per cent. of their claims. That is the secret of the matter. That is why he was held back. That is why his name was kept out of the treaty.

Here, then, the report states that Mr. Forsyth admits that, in a conversation with these gentlemen, he did say that that claim was included in the treaty, and he states that if he did not say so to them, he did say so to others.

He admitted that it was a just claim, and was included in the treaty. That appears to me to be a pretty plain matter. I do not dwell upon this. The whole report, page after page, is full of that kind of proof—the best kind of proof to a well organized mind. The impression that existed between the two parties is a better kind of proof than your assertions, "your affidavits," and your declarations. To every honest and candid mind better evidence than so many affidavits and documents, setting forth the "whereas," and the "wherefore," and the "aforesaid," and so forth, is the clear and distinct understanding between Mr. Forsyth, our Minister, and the committee of the Cortes, who waited on him, that the claim of Richard W. Meade was included in the treaty.

One little objection was made by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] a few months since, and it was this: That a part of this claim of liquidation, a portion of the sum, was for personal imprisonment. Mr. Meade was not a very good friend of the Government. He was a republican; and the Government was, with all its changes, only different phases of tyranny. There was one claim of a hundred thousand barrels of flour, at fifteen dollars a barrel. I say they were not very friendly, he expressing himself liberally, and refusing to shell out another one hundred thousand barrels, and they put him in prison for two years. There are merchants within the sound of my voice, and they know that, besides the evils of durance, besides the evils of a loathsome imprisonment—

MR. JONES, of Tennessee, (interrupting.) My understanding is, that Mr. Meade was imprisoned under a regular process of the court, for not paying over funds which came into his hands as commissioner.

MR. CHANDLER. He was so, perhaps, but the subject to which I allude is another matter entirely.

I was going on to say that the merchant knows that, besides the mortification and evils of that mode of dealing, he would be obstructed thereby in the management of his commerce, his eye would be withdrawn from it, and he would sustain damage thereby. His ship was also detained, and gentlemen looking carelessly at the matter even, would see the result of it. The ship was detained. What then? The cargo was not taken indeed, away, but a merchant knows, and any man knows, that the greatest damage which the ship-owner sustains is demurrage for the non-fulfillment of his voyage. When a ship with a large cargo is detained, it is detained at an enormous expense to the detainer. Let a man agree with a merchant to supply a part of a cargo, and delay it a few days, and he will see if the owner does not come against him with a large claim for damages. The law allows it, and the court will award it.

But gentlemen say that this claim was not wholly founded upon a transaction of dollars and cents. The gentleman [Mr. JONES] did, I am sure, the other day, rely upon the authority of John Q. Adams. In alluding to that very matter, Mr. Adams gave a strong opinion, declaring that to shut a man up in a stone house is quite as bad as to take away his money.

Mr. Adams, in a letter to the commissioners, says:

"Of the absolute obligation of this Government to interpose in behalf of their fellow-citizens possessing such claims, and imploring the aid of their country to obtain satisfaction for them, no very subtle or punctilious scrutiny had been made. It was the need of the claimant, and not the legal classification of his claim, for which the assistance of his Government has been solicited. The delay or denial of justice, which it was desirable to remedy, was the same, whether it was for a wrong committed or a contract broken. The claimants have alike been promised that, at the negotiation of the treaty, their claims would be considered, and endeavors made to provide for them, in common with others."

Mr. Adams was a strong man, a very strong man. He knew, as a statesman as well as a lawyer, that a "tort" was as much a matter for settlement as a robbery of his flour. He knew well enough, as every man knows, that in making a settlement of a matter of that kind, there is as large a claim for false imprisonment as for property taken.

One further remark. Some one said that the claim arose, in part, out of a purchase of the State debt Libramientos, at a less price than the face. Without troubling the House at length upon that subject, I will simply say that there are probably twenty persons within the sound of my voice who own stock in the debt of the United States, which cost them from ninety-nine to one hundred and four cents on the dollar; and yet if any of them should go to the Treasury of the United States on any day, they will receive one hundred and twenty-two cents for it. Why, sir, if the Treasurer should say to him, but I cannot pay you this whole amount; you did not pay it yourself, you only paid ninety-nine, would the objection hold good? No, sir. The whole amount must be paid from the Treasury, no matter what the man who presents it has paid. And the same point will hold good in reference to this bill.

But all these objections are useless. I ask the Clerk to read the bill.

The bill was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to settle the claim of the legal representatives of Richard W. Meade, on their producing the testimony required by the commission from the claimants, under the Florida treaty, which, in the opinion of the said officers, shall be satisfactory as establishing said claim, according to law and usage.

SEC. 2. And he it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay the amount so found due, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That more shall not be paid than the said Meade would have received out of the $5,000,000 appropriated to pay the claimants under the Florida treaty, if his claim had been admitted by the commissioners.

Gentlemen will perceive that by the provisions of this bill, in the first place, a commission must be appointed by the Government—either consisting of the officers of the Government themselves or of others appointed by those officers, which must examine every claim presented by the heirs of Mr. Meade. They must exercise the same scrutiny and the same astuteness that the commission which sat here to adjudicate upon these claims would have done. That will be their duty; and instead of allowing the whole sum which is set forth in the claims, they may find it convenient—for justice should be convenience, and I hope they will always go together in this Government—I say they may find it convenient to reduce the amount claimed twenty-five or thirty per cent., because the claimants may fail to produce the vouchers which are necessary to establish their claim for the whole amount. If they act as they must act, according to the law, the law requires that they shall demand vouchers for whatever is claimed, and that they must be produced before the commission pass judgment upon it. Sufficient evidence must be produced in every case to substantiate it. If they should be of the opinion that he was not imprisoned improperly by the Spanish Government, they will not make any allowance for it. There is a claim for Spanish scrip (Litramientos) which he is said to have obtained at thirty-three and one third per cent. discount. They may find it convenient from this fact to reduce that item thirty-three and one third per cent. Every item must be examined with as close and jealous scrutiny as it would have been before the commission had adjudicated upon it.

I ask gentlemen to understand the nature of the provisions of this bill. They are not to appropriate so many hundred thousand dollars unreservedly to Richard W. Meade. They place so much money at the disposal of the Government to adjudicate claims which are made in the name of honesty against the Government. Surely there is no man here who would hesitate to do that. Surely there is no man in this committee who would say to this man, we have you in our power, and we will fleece you right or wrong. Was not the claim adjudicated by Spain?—I am asked. I have been arguing that point as to whether the claim was not adjudicated prior to the treaty. Admitted; but was it not included in the treaty?

While I declare to you the settlement was made in June, the treaty was not ratified until October, I also say to you that the conditions of that ratification were, and I proved it, that Richard W. Meade's case, whether settled or unsettled, liquidated or unliquidated, was included in the contract, and that Spain for giving three grants of land, including the best portions of Florida, should not be compelled to pay Richard W. Meade. The oaths of four members of the Cortes are given in proof of that, and the admission of Mr. Forsyth is enough to sanction it.

I am also asked, Has not Meade, subsequent to the ratification, insisted on payment from Spain? I do not know that he has. Mr. Meade has pursued his claim here. All the testimony will show that, from the time the commission was established, almost every year, this claim has been brought before us. The great question is: If the judgment reported by Spain be not inclusive, is not Meade compelled to prove the original indebtedness? Certainly; and the bill provides for that. I have presented no bill which shall take from the Treasury of the United States a sum of money to give it to somebody because he claims; not at all. I have presented a bill which makes an appropriation to pay any sum of money which just and righteous men shall declare, after proof, the Government owes. That is all. If officers of the Treasury be appointed to investigate the case, I ask nothing of them more than I would ask of any other court. I do not wish them to grant anything to Richard W. Meade more than to any other man. I only ask that when Richard W. Meade has been deprived of his claim on Spain by the action of this Government, and this Government itself has neglected to bring from Spain, in pursuance of the treaty, the vouchers for his claim, and he has been shut off from petition, that the Government, with manly rectitude, with a spirit of justice and uprightness, allow this man to plead his own claim before it, the Government itself being the judge.

The feeling has gone abroad that this is an argument to give $300,000 or $400,000 to some few persons. It is not so. We should do justice as we love mercy; and our Government should walk uprightly before the world in this as well as all other matters. The pamphlet which is presented here as the report, shows that there was a doubt even about the citizenship of Mr. Meade. I should have had better hope of success if he had not been a citizen. If he had been a foreigner, he would have received a liberal and gentlemanly answer. But Mr. Meade was an American citizen; and the case here is with one who only claims American citizenship; and we stand here from 1822 to 1854, dallying, waiting, and hesitating to give his family his just dues. Our justice, if it ever comes, will come too late to aid those who have been suffering most for the want of it. The descendants of Mr. Meade, permit me to say, live in the luxury, the great republican luxury, of earning their bread by the sweat of their brow. Whenever they get any portion of this claim by our righteous decision upon it, they will have learned the value of that which they have earned; and they will have earned, I think, all they will get from Congress?

Mr. EWING. I would inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania how many reports have been made in favor of this claim, and how many against it?

Mr. CHANDLER. There are a great many made in favor, and I believe but two against it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would ask if Mr. CLAYTON did not make a report against the claim?

Mr. CHANDLER. Thomas M. Clayton made a report against it.

Mr. JONES. Did not Mr. Forsyth report against it? He thought that the action of the commission was not conclusive. I ask the gentleman if there have been more than two reports made in favor of this claim—one by Edward Everett, and the other by Horace Everett? A bill was reported again and again by Mr. Archer, of Virginia, when in this House.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Thomas M. Clayton made a report against the claim founded only upon the decision of the commissioners. Mr. Forsyth did the same thing; at the same time, he said that the claim ought to be paid. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] says that two reports were made in favor of it. Does he suppose that the Committee on Foreign Affairs did not make a favorable report? Does he suppose that there are not eight or ten reports made in favor of this claim, containing, substantially, the views and opinions of the gentlemen who made them, and who, after a very careful investigation, expressed their views in the reports which they adopted, repeating as sufficiently explicit the reports of former committees? But gentlemen say the sum claimed in this case is too large. Is that any reason against the justice of this claim? Does any man assert here that the principle of a claim is to be decided by its amount, withholding from the claimants their just rights?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Does not the report, in express terms, except this claim from the treaty?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to the gentleman reading an isolated passage in that report. In my former remarks, I stated that this could not be done. If I said that there was not any inclusion expressed or understood between the parties, the second treaty did not make it. That is all that is said there. I protest, also, against an argument founded on the antiquity of the claim—if it is old, it is not the claimant's fault. Shall we deny justice, and then plead our own denial. Shall we say to the honest claimant, give your claim the advantage of years, that we may deliberate, and then deny justice upon the ground of age?

Mr. Chairman, the heirs of Richard W. Meade present themselves here with a claim upon the Spanish Government, with proof that the Spanish Government believed, and the American Minister admitted, that the treaty of 1819 included that claim, and made the Government of the United States responsible therefor. The testimony of the members of the Spanish Cortes is ample on this point. The admission of Mr. Forsyth is fully corroborated, and the action of the American commissioners under that treaty show that they believed that Mr. Meade's was included in this treaty; and their decision establishes the fact, that while his claim was rejected, it was rejected only because he did not produce the vouchers required by them. It is in proof that application was made to Spain for the vouchers; but they were not obtained before the term of the commission closed. It is evident that Spain was as much bound under the treaty to supply that document, as she was formally to cede to our Government the possession of Florida, and that our Government failed in its duty to enforce that part of the treaty against Spain and in favor of Mr. Meade. And thus, by a neglect of the Government, either to extend the existence of the commission, or enforce the fulfillment of the treaty, Mr. Meade was deprived of his property, while the Government has the rich domain which it received as a price of Meade's claim, as well as that of others. We ask, then, not that Meade's heirs be paid, not that they receive a grant, but that they be allowed to prove their claim by vouchers such as the commission would have admitted.

Mr. JONES. I move to strike out the enacting clause of this bill. That takes in the whole merits of the case, as I understand it; and I submit that motion for the purpose of making a brief reply within five minutes, to the remarks of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SMITH,] made some time ago. In his reply to my remarks, he assumed, in the first place, that Mr. Adams was my witness, that I had introduced him here, and thus congratulated himself that, as he was my witness, I could not discredit him. And then, for the purpose of breaking the force of Mr. Adams's testimony, the gentleman says that Mr. Adams was a man not of likings and dislikings, but of love and hate. And did I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHANDLER] to say just now that Mr. Adams had a view to triumph rather than to justice?

Mr. CHANDLER. I said that he had a great view to triumph.

Mr. JONES. Did you not say something as to his desire to triumph wholly regardless of testimony?

Mr. CHANDLER. No, I did not.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said that he had greater regard to triumph than to justice. Now, I never expected that the gentleman from Pennsylvania would attempt to throw suspicion on that man's testimony or character. But I say to the gentleman from New York, that he fell into an error, in supposing that Mr. Adams was my witness.

Here, Mr. Chairman, is the report of the committee made in this case. The committee introduced Mr. Adams here as a witness. They brought him forward as a witness, and published, as a part of the testimony on which they rested this claim, a letter from Mr. Adams to Mr. Salmon, the Spanish representative to this Government. From this the gentleman reads an extract, to show that Mr. Adams thought that the claim was just. He says, also, that he and I read from the same letter. There he was in error again. I read from Mr. Adams's letter to Mr. Nelson, our Minister to the Court of Spain, and he read from his letter to the Spanish representative to this Government. And the letter from Mr. Adams to Mr. Nelson has never found its way, as far as I can perceive, into any report made to this House. They have slept upon that; but you will find it here in an old volume that I have. It is dated Washington, 28th April, 1823, and the one on which the committee reports, is dated 29th April, 1823, and, as I understand it, the copy of this letter to Mr. Salmon was also inclosed to Mr. Nelson, in the one for him.

But the gentleman from New York quotes from this to Mr. Salmon, and he stops at an important paragraph. I will not read what he quoted, in order to sustain the claim. But if he had continued the paragraph, he would have found that Mr. Adams says, Mr. Meade might, with as much propriety, have purchased in the market at its current price, any other order on the funds of the royal finance department, and brought it before the commissioners as a claim provided for by the treaty, as he could this order—a part of the sum constituting which was for interest accrued after the treaty had been signed.

Now, this same report excludes this case from the treaty conclusively.

The committee, in their report, state that the character of the claim was changed by the liquidation of it by Spain. They say:

"This change of the character of the claim, thus communicated to our Government, was per se a revocation of all prior authority to interpose on behalf of the claimant, and a renunciation of any benefit, under any construction or understanding of the treaty, or that could accrue from its resuscitation at any future period.

"The provisions of the treaty, as signed, under any construction, were no longer applicable or appropriate to the case. The claim on which the interposition of the Government had been solicited no longer existed. There was no longer anything, either as to amount or validity, for adjudication. There was nothing left to be done but the payment of an acknowledged debt."

And now, sir, the only mode of getting it back is based upon what Mr. Forsyth said upon the testimony of two or three Spaniards, who say they were members of the Cortes. I admit, that if Mr. Forsyth did say so, he could not change the character of the treaty—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PARKER. This claim, as I understand it, is not only a very large claim against the Government, but it is one which has become very stale. Notwithstanding these things, however, if the facts were clear that the Government ought to pay it, however great it might be, I should, without any hesitation, give my voice in its favor.

When the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER,] some weeks ago, presented his views so ably to this House, I had my attention directed to it, and I have examined with care and anxiety all the documents I could get upon the subject, and, as the result of that examination, I came to the conclusion that this is not a claim which this Government ought to pay.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman has not a right to speak upon the same side as the gentleman who made the motion. I claim, as the gentleman is not going on in order, to make a five minute speech in opposition.

Mr. PARKER. I shall oppose some things said by my friend who preceded me, and the gentleman from Georgia will have an opportunity to speak afterwards.

Mr. STEPHENS. I claim the right to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PARKER. I claim the same right.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman is in favor of striking out the enacting clause, he is not in order, if not, he is in order.

Mr. PARKER. I am not in favor of striking out the enacting clause. I think the bill ought to be amended. I think it is a very clear case that this Government ought to take this case in hand, but that it ought not to pay the claim out of its own pocket. I look upon it as a clear and unquestionable claim against Spain. Had she not interposed between the making of the treaty, and its ratification, we should have paid it. I think it came originally within the purview of the treaty. But between these periods she thought proper to liquidate the claim, and after that, it did not come within the provisions of the treaty.

I think that if Mr. Meade was a citizen of the United States—and it appears clear that he was—it is one of those cases, especially in these times when we are so punctilious in regard to the rights and privileges of those whose citizenship is somewhat questionable, that we ought to take in hand. I have no doubt that there is merit in this claim, but if we pay it now, instead of paying $5,000,000 under the treaty with Spain, we will probably have to pay $5,500,000. Whose fault is it that the claim is not already paid? Not ours. The commission called for the documents as they were required to do under the treaty. Spain refused to furnish them. She said to us: "We have examined this account, we have designated the amounts that are due to Mr. Meade, and all you have to do, is to take our awards and pay them." The commission, however, could not look upon this as a sufficient voucher, and refused to allow the claim. And there the matter has rested until this day.

Now, sir, I believe this Government should take this matter in hand. If there is anything in the Black Warrior transaction, if there is anything in any of those other transactions of which complaint has been made, that is wrong, this matter is, in my judgment, tenfold more wrong.

Mr. CLINGMAN here made a remark which was not heard by the reporter.

Mr. PARKER. It would probably be as well to settle it in that way as any other. We would be justified in taking Cuba, or in taking whatever else we could lay our hands upon, for the purpose of indemnity for our citizens. When the treaty was formed, $5,000,000 was set apart for a specific purpose, which the Government of Spain prevented us from accomplishing though we paid all.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will withdraw the motion to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. SMITH, of New York, moved to strike out all after the enacting clause, and supply its place with the provision to pay $250,000, in full satisfaction of the claim, and said that the speech of the honorable gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] brought to his mind a passage of the Bible: "He, that is first in his own cause, seemeth just; but his neighbor cometh and searcheth him." Now, I am the neighbor of this gentleman, [Mr. JONES and Mr. SMITH sit near each other,] and I have come to search him. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Tennessee finds fault with my speech on this subject, a couple of months ago. I confess that I did say he had read from one paper, when it turned out that he had read from another. But my mistake was of no consequence to the argument. Another of my faults was, that I did not read to the end of the paragraph, of which I read a part. The closing lines of the paragraph upset, as he holds, the interpretation which I put upon the lines preceding them. Let us look into this. In those preceding lines Mr. Adams scouts the idea that the Meade debt is not among the claims which our Government had assumed and "agreed to compound;" and in these immediately following and closing lines, he scouts the idea that a certain "order" is a claim on our Government.

And yet the gentleman from Tennessee regards the debt and the order as identical, the one with the other! and concludes that, although Mr. Adams said, in one breath, that the debt is among the claims against Government, he said in the next that it is not! I offer a simple explanation to the gentleman's mind. It is the same that I offered before. There was an unliquidated claim of Meade, and also a liquidated one. The former I held was binding upon our Government. The latter I admitted was not. This is the distinction insisted on by Mr. Adams. We did not agree, certainly not in the treaty of 1819, to pay whatever sum Spain might admit she owed Meade, but the sum (or a pro rata allowance thereon) which she actually owed Meade.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] who replied to my former speech on this subject, said, that our Government was under no obligation to help Meade get from the Spanish Government the proofs of his claim. But what right had that gentleman to say so, in the face of the treaty obligation of Spain to furnish the proofs? That obligation was as sacred as any other in the treaty; and our Government was as much bound to enforce it, as to enforce any other. What, if, in the case of half of the claims, the vouchers and documents had been in the possession of the Spanish Government, and their production had been refused? Our Government would, surely, have enforced the provision in question, and would have done so, before paying any of the claims.

The true state of the case is this: Our Government absolutely released the Spanish Government from the Meade claim. It, simultaneously, bound the Spanish Government to give up the proofs of that claim. When called on to do so, it refused. And, now, our Government sits still, and says, that Meade has lost his claim! Monstrous injustice! And a deep shame to our country is such injustice!

Mr. Forsyth has been referred to. He, like Mr. Adams, believed with Judge White of the Commission, that Meade had "a well-founded claim."

Not only was Meade entitled to a pro rata allowance from the five millions on his claim, provided he had been able to establish it, by means of the bounden help of our Government; but a strong argument can be made to show, that our Government was bound to pay Meade the whole sum, which the Spanish Government acknowledged to be due him. There is not the least reason to believe, that the Cortes would have agreed to the second treaty, which, in addition to what the first treaty gave us, annulled three Spanish grants of land, had not that body supposed that our Government would pay the Meade debt, as it had been liquidated. The history of the transactions makes this well high certain.

But, if there are any technicalities by which we may escape the payment of this claim, I pray that we may not avail ourselves of them. We all admit that Spain owed a debt to Meade. I say not how much. We all admit that Spain believed that in the bargain she made with us, we assumed to pay or compound this claim. We all know that we made a good bargain out of Spain in getting Florida for five millions of dollars. Can we, in such circumstances, consent to turn over the Meade claim to Spain for payment? Can we, in such circumstances, refuse to pay it ourselves?

The question was taken on Mr. SMITH's amendment; and it was disagreed to.

Mr. EWING. I move a pro forma amendment, in order to submit a few words in reference to this claim.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this claim is a just one, though I confess that I have not examined the question with very great assiduity; or care. It is one familiar to me, and about which I have conversed with Mr. Clay, and other persons who had taken part in its advocacy, and who were earnestly in its favor; and I learn that there are but two or three prominent points in the case, laying aside technicalities, all attempts to get rid of the claim by technicalities, to which the gentleman from New York properly referred, pleading the statute of limitations, and everything of that kind.

I think that it is admitted on all hands that it was and is a just claim against the Spanish Government. It is now a just claim against her, if not paid by us. It is so in morality and propriety; but that does not release us from the moral responsibility to pay it. To pay it is not only a duty which the Government owes to her citizens in the protection of their rights, but she ought to pay it from the fact of her having first given the Spanish Government to understand that she did assume its payment. Mr. Forsyth says distinctly that he did say so. He has no doubt that he did say so to these very men; and though at first he says no commission from the Cortes ever called on him, he subsequently qualifies himself by saying that perhaps the Cortes did appoint a commission. Again, in the next place they assumed the responsibility by their own neglect, as stated in the report which the gentleman refers to as being a report against the claim.

Mr. Forsyth, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred this case, made a report, from which I read the following extract:

"The evidence laid before the committee shows that the commissioners deemed the claim of Richard W. Meade embraced by the treaty; that, at his instance, a demand was made on Spain for the evidences deemed by them necessary to a fair examination of it; that this demand was not made on Spain, owing to unforeseen occurrences, until a short time previous to the termination of the commission, although the application for them by Meade had been made fourteen months prior to that time."

Mr. Meade appealed to this Government for justice, and demanded the evidence upon which his claim was founded. Owing to unforeseen occurrences, the Government neglected to demand this evidence. Is this Government now to seek to release itself from its obligations by an appeal to technicalities, and by pleading the statute of limitation?

I have understood, I will say in reply to the interrogatory that has been made, that some twenty different reports have been made in favor of this claim from time to time, showing that it is owing to no laches that this claimant lost his rights. Only one report has been made, I believe, against it. Again and again has the claimant appealed to Congress for justice, but not through claim agents. I understand that no claim agent has applied in his behalf. Perhaps that is one reason of the failure. I think that from the general obligation resting upon us for the protection of our citizens in their rights of property against all losses and wrongs on the part of foreign Governments, this Government has become morally bound to pay the claim.

The question was then taken upon Mr. EWING's amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass; and upon that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. EWING and HENDRICKS were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 49.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported, that a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar had had under consideration bill of the House No. 58, entitled "An act for settling the claims of the legal representatives of Richard W. Meade, deceased," and had instructed him to report it back to the House with a recommendation that it do not pass.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Yes, let us go back into committee, and dispose of some more private bills.

Mr. JONES. No; let us have this bill killed first.

Mr. CHANDLER. I insist on my motion.

Mr. JONES. I object to going into committee again to-day. We are not going to transact any more business this evening. That is certain.

Mr. KERR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT TO WEDNESDAY.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would be glad that the gentleman from North Carolina would withdraw that motion, with a view to enable me to submit a motion to adjourn over till Wednesday.

[Cries of "Oh no; let us come here on Monday."]

The SPEAKER. The motion indicated by the gentleman from Virginia is in order now.

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; I believe that I have a right to submit the motion to adjourn over.

The SPEAKER. The House has a right to fix the day to which it will adjourn before it votes on the question of adjournment.

Mr. SMITH. Then I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH. There is surely no use in our coming here on Monday, as we shall not have a quorum.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that when the House adjourns on Monday next, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I suppose that motion is not in order now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts whether such an amendment to the proposition is in order or not. The rules recognise no motion, except to fix the hour or day to which the House will adjourn.

Mr. McMULLIN. By unanimous consent my motion can be entertained.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object. I am in favor of the other proposition.

Mr. OLDS demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. ORR called for tellers on the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PARKER, and JONES of Louisiana, were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—yeas 82, noes 48.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOCK. I desire to ask the Chair whether the motion which has just been adopted is one that can be reconsidered?

The SPEAKER. A motion to reconsider would be in order in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. BOCK. I make the motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask the gentleman from Virginia if he voted with the majority?

Mr. BOCK. I did not, but the vote was not taken by yeas and nays, and, therefore, I suppose I have the right to make the motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman acknowledging that he voted in the minority, has not, I contend, any right under the rules to move a reconsideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that on a vote by yeas and nays, those voting with the majority have alone the right to move a reconsideration; but on a vote by tellers, or division, any member may move a reconsideration.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I rise to a question of order, and it is this: Pending a motion to adjourn a motion to reconsider is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has never had his attention drawn to any similar case, but inasmuch as by the language of the rule, it is in order pending the motion to adjourn, to fix a day to which the House will adjourn; and, inasmuch as any vote given by the House may be reconsidered, the Chair is of the opinion that it is in order either by reconsideration or otherwise, pending a motion to adjourn, to change the ordinary time of adjournment, or a timespecially fixed.

Mr. STEPHENS. My point is this: After a motion to adjourn, it is too late to entertain a motion to reconsider. The question on the adjournment must be put.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it is in order pending a motion to adjourn to fix a day to which the House will adjourn. That is so under express rule.

Mr. STEPHENS. So I understand; but that does not allow the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it does.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The motion to adjourn pending, it is a privileged motion to fix the day to which the House will adjourn. The motion to reconsider the vote by which the House fixed the day to which it would adjourn, connects itself with that motion.

The SPEAKER. So the Chair has decided.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I was about to suggest in reply to the position of the Speaker, that the vote on the motion to adjourn over virtually fixes the day to which we shall adjourn; therefore—

The SPEAKER. The Chair must leave it to the House to determine what its action shall be under the rule. It is the business of the Chair to define the rule only.

Mr. OLDS. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order, in the opinion of the Chair, during the pendency of a motion to adjourn.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. But is not the motion to adjourn in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it is in order during the pendency of a motion to adjourn, for the House to fix a day to which it will adjourn. The House, by a vote, have determined to adjourn over until Wednesday next. The motion is now made to reconsider that vote, and the motion to adjourn is not in order until the House shall have settled the question as to the day to which it shall adjourn.

Mr. STEPHENS. The House have already settled that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the House have the right to reconsider that vote.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will withdraw the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The question then recurs on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House determined to adjourn until Wednesday next.

Mr. OLDS. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I renew the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table, if they will have the yeas and nays.

Mr. OLDS. Upon that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 78, nays 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bliss, Campbell, Carpenter, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chrisman, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Disney, Eastman, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Ewing, Farley, Fenton, Florence, Franklin, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Hiester, Howe, Hughes, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kerr, Knox, Latham, Lilly, McCulloch, McDougall, Mace, Mayall, Middleswarth, Murray, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Bishop Perkins, Powell, Preston, Ready, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Sabin, Sage, Seward, Shannon, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walsh, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, and Westbrook—78.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Appleton, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Belcher, Bock, Breckinridge, Bridges, Chastain, Clingman, Cobb, Cox, John G. Davis, Eddy, Edmunds, Ellison, English, Flagler, Fuller, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Houston, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Kittledge, Kurtz, Letcher, Lindsley, McMullin, McNair, Matteson, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Milson, Morgan, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Orr, Packer, Phelps, Pratt, Puryear, Reese, Richardson, David Ritchie, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Sapp, Shaw, George W. Smyth, Hester L. Stevens, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, Vail, and Walley—65.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

The question then recurring on the motion to adjourn, it was taken, and decided in the affirmative.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I ask the consent of the House to make a personal explanation.

There being no objection,

Mr. A. proceeded. I will detain the House but a single moment. I notice that in the Globe of this morning I am recorded as having been absent upon a call of the roll. It is true that I was not present, but as I think the House will bear me witness that I am constant in my attendance here upon almost all occasions. I beg leave to state that I received notice that a son of mine, who is at Alexandria at school, was sick, and I went there for the purpose of seeing him. That was my reason for being absent, and that is all the explanation I have to make.

The House thereupon (at half past three o'clock p. m.) adjourned till Wednesday next at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 5, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

Mr. BADGER. Senators, I have received a note from the President of the Senate, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

WASHINGTON, July 5, 1854.
MY DEAR SIR: You will oblige me by presiding over the Senate this day.

Your friend,
Hon. GEORGE E. BADGER. D. R. ATCHISON.

Mr. BADGER. If there be no objection, I will take the chair in pursuance of the request of this letter.

There was no objection.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information of the condition of the marine hospital building at New Orleans, and the sum necessary to place it in a proper state of repair; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information respecting the present condition of the building of the United States branch Mint at New Orleans; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented a petition of inhabitants of Wisconsin, praying the establishment of a post route from La Crosse to Portage, in said State; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. CASS presented a petition of merchants of Detroit, Michigan, praying the reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. He expressed a hope that the committee would report favorably in regard to the subject of the petition.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of James F. Shores and others, citizens of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, praying the repeal of the fugitive slave law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a petition of C. E. Stowe and others, legal voters of Andover, Massachusetts, praying the repeal of the fugitive slave law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RUSK presented the petition of the legal representatives of Seth M. Leavenworth, praying that a joint resolution, heretofore passed for his relief, may be carried into effect; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PAPER WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That the petition of merchants, ship-masters, and others, residing in the Belfast collection district, praying the erection of a custom-house building at Belfast, Maine, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. SUMNER, from the Committee on Pen-

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1st Session.

THURSDAY, JULY 6, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 101.

sions, to whom was referred a bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of Charles Staples; reported it back without amendment.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a letter from the Commissioner of Public Buildings, communicating information of the destruction of a portion of the Long Bridge, by fire, on the 8th instant, and asking an appropriation for the repairs of the same, reported a bill making an appropriation for the repairs of the Long Bridge across the Potomac river, in the city of Washington; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. DIXON asked, and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate, to introduce a bill to provide for taking charge of the Louisville and Portland canal, and to prevent the same from falling into bad repair; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT WHEELING.

Mr. MASON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of constructing a custom-house, post office, and court-room at Wheeling, in Virginia; and if, in their opinion, the same be expedient, then to report the appropriation necessary therefor.

THE BARK GRIFFIN.

Mr. MASON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested (if, in his opinion, not incompatible with the public interest) to communicate to the Senate copies of the correspondence between Ferdinand Coxe, late chargé d'affaires of the United States at Brazil, and the Brazilian Government, concerning the seizure of the cargo of the American bark Griffin, and the imprisonment of George Marsden, a citizen of the United States.

STEAMER EL PARAGUAY.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution from the House of Representatives to correct a clerical error in the act approved June 22, 1854, to authorize a register to be issued to the steamer El Paraguay, have directed me to report the same back without amendment, and recommend its passage. I ask that it may be considered at this time. It is simply to correct a verbal error.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that wherever the word "Joy" occurs in the act referred to, it shall be held to mean "Ivy."

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

STEAM LINE BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND CHINA.

The engrossed bill to establish a line of steam mail ships between San Francisco, in California, and Shanghai, in China, touching at the Sandwich Islands and Japan, was read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. MASON. I move that the bill lie on the table, so as to test the sense of the Senate on the expediency of the appropriation.

Mr. WELLER. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GWIN. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Virginia, that it would be as well to allow the question to be taken on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. MASON. Very well. Then I withdraw my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CLAY stated that he had agreed to pair off with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] who was in favor of the bill.

Mr. FITZPATRICK stated that he had paired off with the Senator from Texas, [Mr. HOUSTON,] who was a friend of the bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, resulted—yeas 22, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bell, Brodhead, Cass, Clayton, Cooper, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Fessenden, Gwin, Hamlin, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Pratt, Rockwell, Rusk, Seward, Stuart, Wade, Walker, and Weller—22.

NAVS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Bright, Brown, Butler, Chase, Evans, Gillette, Hunter, Mallory, Mason, Pettit, and Williams—13.

So the bill was passed.

ALEXANDRIA AND WASHINGTON RAILROAD.

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate now take up the bill authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia, for the purpose of voting upon it.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope we shall go on in regular order. The bill for the more effectual suppression of the African slave trade in American-built vessels was made the special order for half past twelve this morning. That hour has arrived, and I now call for its consideration.

Mr. MASON. I hope the Senator will indulge me with the courtesy of having the bill to which I allude voted upon. I only desire to take a vote upon it. It will not occupy five minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. If it be understood that there is to be no debate, but simply a vote upon it, I am willing; otherwise I shall call for the special order.

Mr. MASON. All that I ask is a vote.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill.

No amendment being proposed, it was reported to the Senate.

Mr. SEWARD. I do not rise to speak on the merits of the bill. The indication is that it is going to pass; and one of the indications—the only indication I think—to the contrary is that the present occupant of the chair will not oppose it. He has made a good many excellent speeches this session which have been very persuasive; but I am sorry to say that, as far as I am concerned, they failed to produce the result. I was on the eve of voting for the bill at one time. Afterwards I came to examine the subject, and I found that the Chair had once before made a speech on it which was perfectly satisfactory and conclusive that the Long Bridge ought not to be repaired or kept up for two reasons: first that it injures the health of this city, and next, that it is injurious to the commerce and interests of Georgetown.

Upon that old speech, therefore, made by the Chair on a previous occasion, I should be prepared to vote against the passage of this bill; but the honorable Senator from Vermont, [Mr. FOOT,] who was in favor of its passage, was obliged to leave the city, and asked me to pair off with him. I did so, and I rise for the purpose of doing justice to him, and stating the reasons which influence me.

Mr. BRIGHT. The bill has been taken up with the understanding, I believe, that it should not be further discussed. I have no disposition to violate that agreement, provided that it is not likely to pass. If I thought it would pass I should insist upon being heard upon it. With a view of making a test question I move that it lie on the table; and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 26, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Badger, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Clay, Cooper, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Pettit, Pratt, Sebastian, Sidel, Stuart, Sumner, Toucey, Wade, and Walker—26.

NAVS—Messrs. Chase, Clayton, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Rockwell, Rusk, Weller, and Williams—12.

TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask for the consideration of the resolution which I had the honor of introducing the other morning in regard to the hour of meeting.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is a special order for half past twelve o'clock, to which I hope the Senator will interpose no objection.

Mr. CLAYTON. I call for the special order. Mr. BROWN. What is it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first special order for half past twelve, is the bill to authorize the construction of a line of telegraph from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate now to proceed to its consideration.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to postpone the prior orders, with the view of taking up the resolution, which I have indicated. Its object is to fix a morning hour for the sitting of the Senate, in place of the present evening hour. It requires no discussion. The fixing of a special case for the morning hour, in my opinion, should not have been done; but it has been done; and I, therefore, move to postpone the prior orders to get a vote upon the resolution. I presume every one has made up his mind upon it.

Mr. GWIN. If the Senator will let this resolution go over till to-morrow morning, we can have a vote on it then.

Mr. CLAYTON. Nothing tends so much to obstruct the business of the Senate as taking up subjects out of their order. The debate which arises on the propriety of abandoning the order of the Senate, occupies more time than it would take to pass a measure.

Mr. ADAMS. I will withdraw my motion. I will not be in the way of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first special order is the bill to authorize the construction of a line of telegraph from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I should like to inquire if that is the special order during the morning hour only or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate appointed this bill as the special order for half past twelve o'clock. The custom, the Chair will take the opportunity of remarking, which has grown up in the Senate is, in the opinion of the occupant of the Chair, founded on no authority, but it does not become him to make any objection to it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. If it is only for the morning hour, I have no objection to it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think it was the intention of the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN,] as it was my own, that it should only be for the morning hour, and after that has expired, we shall not interfere with the regular business of the day. Is the bill now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and is open to amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to add another verbal amendment to the substitute reported from the committee. It is to insert after the word "territory" in the sixth section the words "in alternate sections," so as to make it read: "and if, after two years from the completion as aforesaid, said lands shall not have been surveyed, it shall be optional with said Alden and Eddy, their heirs and assigns, and they shall have the right to relocate the like quantities of land in any Territory in alternate sections where they have been surveyed," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I also propose to amend the second section, by inserting after the word "water" the words "where the same is practicable." The section now provides, that the telegraphic line shall be constructed under the surface of the earth, rock or water. It has been suggested by the honorable Senator from Texas, [Mr. RUSK,] that there may be rocks in the spurs of the mountains over which the line may pass of that description, which it would be very hard if not impossible to penetrate. The object is, in such cases, to let the line go on the surface.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as originally introduced by Mr. HAMLIN, proposed to empower Hiram O. Alden and James Eddy, their associates and assigns, to construct, at their own expense, a line of telegraph from St. Louis, in Missouri, or any other point on the western bank of the Mississippi river they may select, through the public lands belonging to, and under the jurisdiction of, the United States, to San Francisco, in California; or to some other point on the Pacific ocean, in as direct a line as practicable, with liberty to construct branch or diverging lines to Texas, to New Mexico, to Utah, and to Oregon. The line is to be constructed of durable materials, thoroughly insulated, securely placed under the surface of the earth, and water with testing tubes every five miles, and with working stations at distances averaging not more than a hundred miles, to secure its thorough working, and its repair and protection. The stations are to be supplied with the necessary telegraph instruments and operators, both night and day, and the whole line is to be completed and put in operation within eighteen months. The General Government secures to itself forever the free use of the line for the transmission of official dispatches and communications between the Government and its officers, not exceeding a monthly aggregate of more than seven thousand words, though the prior use is reserved to the Government at all times. For the transmission of private dispatches from the Mississippi to the Pacific the charges are not to exceed ten dollars for each message of ten words or less, and not exceeding seventy-five cents for each additional word. The line is to be kept in good working condition under penalty of forfeiture of the line and all its appurtenances. On these conditions, the General Government, as soon as the line shall be in operation, will issue to the company land warrants for fifteen hundred thousand acres, which the company may select and locate thus: They may select from any of the public lands along and near the telegraphic line, not before sold or appropriated, any quantity not less than a section, nor more than a township, in one body; and if more than one township shall be taken in the same locality, alternate townships only are to be selected. The President of the United States is to cause the unsurveyed lands upon the line of telegraph, which they may select, to be surveyed, and if, after the expiration of two years from the completion of the line the lands shall not have been surveyed, the company will be at liberty to relocate the like quantities in any State or Territory where the lands are surveyed, and open to private entry or sale, and as fast as the lands are thus located, the Commissioner of the General Land Office will issue patents for them. In the event of a railroad to the Pacific ocean being located on or near the route selected for a telegraphic line, the grant of land contemplated by this bill is to be so located as not to interfere with the grant for the railroad. The bill further provides that any material of foreign manufacture that may be requisite and necessary for the construction of the telegraphic line may be imported free of duty.

The Committee on Territories reported an amendment in the form of a substitute for the whole bill. As amended, on the motion of Mr. HAMLIN, (to-day and Saturday last,) the substitute reads as follows:

That Hiram O. Alden and James Eddy, their successors, associates and assigns, are hereby authorized and empowered to construct, at their own expense, a line of telegraph from such point on the Mississippi or Missouri rivers, as they may hereafter select, through the public lands belonging to, and under the jurisdiction of the United States, over which lands the right of way for that purpose is hereby granted, to San Francisco, in California, in as direct a line as practicable, with the liberty to construct also, diverging lines to and through the public lands in the States and Territories lying both north and south of said direct or main line, as is hereinafter set forth.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That said line of telegraph shall be constructed of durable materials, with at least two independent conductors thoroughly insulated, and securely placed under the surface of the earth, rock or water where the same is practicable, with testing tubes every five miles, and working stations at distances averaging not more than one hundred miles, to secure the thorough working of the same, and for its repair and protection. Said working stations are to be supplied with all the requisite telegraph apparatus, instruments, operators, and men, necessary to its efficacy and reliability, and the same shall be completed and put in operation within two years from the passage of this bill, and after such State legislation shall have been secured as may be necessary to authorize its construction in the States through which it may pass. And said line of telegraph, when so completed, shall thereafter be kept in operation by night as well as by day.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That there shall be reserved and granted to the General Government forever, the free and prior use of said line of telegraph, for the transmission of all official dispatches and communications between said Government and its officers: Provided, however, That said free dispatches and communications shall not exceed a monthly aggregate of more than eight thousand words, but still reserving to the Government the further prior use, to any extent within the capacity of said line, by paying the same tolls or charges paid by individuals for like services, and no more.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That for the transmission of all private dispatches and communications over said main line, between the Mississippi and the Pacific, the tolls or charges shall, in no case, exceed ten dollars for each message of ten words or less, exclusive of date, address and signature; and not exceeding seventy-five cents for each word added thereto.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That said Alden and Eddy, their associates and assigns, shall, at their own expense, keep said line of telegraph in working order, and at their own cost operate the same, transmitting said Government dispatches and communications, at all times, when said line shall be in working condition, as requested by the officers or authorized agents of said Government; and if they shall, at any time, unreasonably refuse so to do, or shall neglect, for the space of six successive months, to operate said line—unless prevented from so doing, by some unforeseen disaster, or some unavoidable calamity, arising from the sickness of operators or from Indian hostility and depredation, said line of telegraph, with all its appurtenances, shall be forfeited to, and become the property of, the United States.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That, upon the completion of said line of telegraph as aforesaid, and so soon as the same shall be put in successful operation, and the free use thereof, as hereinbefore provided, tendered to the Government of the United States, then shall be issued to said Alden and Eddy, their heirs or assigns, in exchange and payment for the free and prior use of said line in perpetuity, as aforesaid, land warrants for two millions acres of land, excluding all mineral lands, which they are hereby authorized to select and locate as follows: from and after said completion they shall have the right to select from any of the public lands along and near said line of telegraph, not before sold or appropriated, any quantity, not more than a section, in alternate sections. Where unsurveyed lands shall have been selected, the President of the United States shall cause the same to be surveyed, if practicable; and if, after two years from the completion as aforesaid, said lands shall not have been surveyed, it shall be optional with said Alden and Eddy, their heirs or assigns, and they shall have the right to relocate the like quantities of land in any Territory, in alternate sections, where they shall have been surveyed, and shall then be open to private entry or sale. And as fast as selections and locations of said lands shall thus be made, the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby authorized and required to issue patents to the said Alden and Eddy, their heirs or assigns, on application therefor: Provided, That in the event a railroad to the Pacific ocean shall be located on or near said line of telegraph, the grant of land contemplated in this section, shall be so located as not to interfere with the location and any grant Congress may make in aid of the construction of said railroad.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That all voluntary or intentional injuries to said line of telegraph, or to any property thereto belonging, shall be deemed, and are hereby declared to be willful and malicious trespasses, and shall be punished as such: and all laws of the United States now in force in any Territory thereof, or which may hereafter be enacted for the better security and protection of property, and applicable to such offenses, shall be, and they hereby are extended, for the protection of said line of telegraph, into and over all the unorganized territory belonging to and under the jurisdiction of the United States through which the same may be constructed; and all legal process and proceedings for the detection and punishment of the aforesaid offenses shall be within the jurisdiction of the courts, and shall be issued and executed by the proper law officers in the adjoining States and organized Territories.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I do not often trespass on the attention of the Senate, and I propose to do so only very briefly at this time. I believe it may now be conceded that there will be no bill urged at this session for the establishment of a railroad communication between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. Certain it is that no such bill can pass at this session of Congress. Indeed, if such a bill should receive the favorable consideration of Congress, it would be years before such a road could be constructed, whether either by the funds of individuals, from the proceeds of the National Treasury, or by appropriations of public lands. Therefore, to obviate the want which is felt for a direct communication between the two coasts, I think it is highly desirable that a small and a limited appropriation should be made for the construction of a telegraphic line.

The bill which I had the honor to introduce at this session was the bill which was reported by the Senator from California [Mr. WELLER] to the Senate last year from the Committee on Territories. The substitute which is reported from the same committee at this session, differs, I believe, from that bill in only two particulars. The bill of last year made a grant of one million five hundred thousand acres towards the construction of this line. This bill makes a grant of two million acres, whilst it also requires of the parties who construct the telegraph to transmit one thousand words monthly for the use of the Government, over and above what was required by the bill of last year. I think, sir, that these are the only differences between the bill of last year and the bill of this year. Now, sir, it is my purpose to state very briefly what are the provisions of this bill, what will be the expense of the work, what are the grants of the Government, and what the Government are to receive therefor.

The first section of the substitute reported by the committee to the Senate grants the right of way across the territories of the Government for the construction of a subterranean telegraph to H. O. Alden and James Eddy, their associates and assigns, to be constructed with two lines of wire, insulated in proper substances, to prevent the action of the frost or the weather thereupon; such wires as are used on similar telegraphic lines on the continent of Europe at this time, and which have proved practicable and useful. It is a simple grant of the right of way over the public lands, leaving to the persons who shall construct the line the obligation of acquiring from the States through which it shall pass such State legislation as may be necessary. Hence I say that the first section provides simply for a grant of the right of way over the territories of the United States. It also provides that the western terminus of the line shall be at San Francisco, and the eastern terminus upon the Mississippi or Missouri, at such point as shall be found most practicable.

The second section provides that the telegraph shall be constructed of durable materials, with two lines of conductors, to be placed under the earth, rock, or water, where the same is practicable, and that, when constructed, it shall have testing tubes at every five miles distant; with working apparatus and machinery at distances of one hundred miles each along the line, with telegraphic stations at every hundred miles. This section also provides that the line shall, at all times, be kept in perfect repair by the corporators.

The third section provides that, after the telegraph shall have been completed by the parties at their own expense, they shall transmit, for the use of the Government, at the rate of eight thousand words per month; and that the right of the Government shall be prior to the rights of all other persons in transmitting the eight thousand words per month for its use. It further provides, that if there shall be other or greater facilities required and demanded by the Government, it shall have prior and exclusive use of the line for transmitting whatever else it may demand, at the same rates which are paid by individuals.

The fourth section regulates the rate of compensation at about twice the price which is charged upon our ordinary lines, although the cost of constructing a subterranean telegraph with insulated wires will be more than three times the expense of constructing a telegraphic line according to the ordinary process. Relatively, therefore, taking into consideration the value of the work, the cost of its construction, the expenses which it will require to keep it in operation through a wilderness country, this is a lower rate, I think, than that which is usually charged. The price which we provide for is ten dollars for a communication of ten words over this line for about two thousand miles.

The fifth section provides that the parties shall at all times keep the line in perfect repair; and whenever, for the term of six consecutive months, they shall fail, without adequate cause, (such as causes arising from sickness, Indian hostilities, flood, or some unforeseen accident,) to communicate for the Government, according to the terms of the bill, then the whole work is to be forfeited and become the property of the Government.

The sixth section provides that, after the line shall have been completed by the parties, the use thereof shall be tendered to the Government for the purpose of transmitting the communications specified in the provisions to which I have alluded. It also contains a provision that when the Government has had the telegraphic line tendered to it, there shall then be granted to this corporation two millions of acres of land, to be taken in alternate sections along the line of telegraph; but the lands are to be so taken as not to interfere with the location of any grant made for a railroad either now or subsequently, and if they shall prove to interfere with the location of any railroad, then they shall be relocated in some of the Territories—not in the States.

If you estimate the value of these lands according to the computation of the General Government itself, when it fixed the price of a one hundred and sixty acre land warrant at $100, or if you estimate your public lands at $1 25 an acre, and take into the account the fact that many of these lands cannot be brought into the market for a long period of years—taking either course as the estimate upon which to place the value of the land, and then allowing a fund to arise from it equal to that which the value of the lands shall be—the service performed by this company for the Government will be equal to seven or eight per cent. upon that value. This, then, is in the nature of a contract with the Government. In consideration of the grant of these lands, the company covenant and agree with the Government to perform for it these services, which will be equal to a compensation of from six to eight per cent. per annum upon such fund as the lands might produce if sold now, or if estimated upon the same rule that the Government estimated its lands when it commuted one hundred and sixty acre land warrants at $100. No grant, in the nature of a gift, is asked or made—a full equivalent is made to the Government for all it contributes.

The language of the bill is as follows:

"That upon the completion of said line of telegraph, as aforesaid, and so soon as the same shall be put in successful operation, and the free use thereof, as hereinbefore provided, tendered to the Government of the United States, then shall be issued to said Alden and Eddy, their heirs or assigns, in exchange and payment for the free and prior use of said line in perpetuity, as aforesaid, land warrants for two millions acres of land, excluding all mineral lands, which they are hereby authorized to select and locate as follows: from and after said completion they shall have the right to select from any of the public lands along and near said line of telegraph, not before sold or appropriated, any quantity, not more than a section, and in alternate sections."

The last section simply provides that any depredation committed upon this line of telegraph shall be taken to be a malicious trespass, and shall be punished as such under the laws of the United States, and that the proper officers of the adjoining States and Territories shall have jurisdiction of such offenses. This provision was drawn before any bill was passed providing territorial government for the regions through which the line must be constructed, and it therefore provides that the proper court in the adjoining States or Territories shall have jurisdiction over the subject-matter, and shall try and punish all offenses for willful depredations upon the property of the company, as though they were in the Territory of the United States.

I should have stated at another point that the bill provides that the line shall be established within two years.

These, sir, are, simply and plainly, the provisions of this bill. I do not propose to elaborate them. The committee who reported it have given to us a very excellent report. They have gone into the general uses of the telegraph, the benefits which the Government will derive from the construction of this line, its commercial importance, and they have very fairly and very truthfully stated the uses and benefits which the country and the people will derive from its construction. The uses of such a work, which must necessarily, under any circumstances, precede a railroad for years, are obvious, and will readily suggest themselves to every mind. The commercial utility of such a work, connected with the whaling and commercial intercourse of the Pacific, and connected with what belongs especially to the State of California, cannot be doubted or over-estimated. When we consider what may necessarily arise as to the duty and obligation of the Government in transmitting messages to its officials upon the Pacific, we readily perceive that vast sums must necessarily be saved to the Government by the construction of this line; and that which would be the work almost of months by the slow progress of steam—for it is slow when compared with electricity—would be done on the instant; and messengers, who would be required to be sent around the Cape or across the Isthmus, will all be superseded by the Government in the transmission of its dispatches and messages, which are secured to it by this bill, if the work shall be executed.

These are the principal features of the bill. I do not propose to elaborate upon them. It is in the nature of a contract, and is not an act of incorporation. It is an express contract that you will grant this small pittance of land to these persons and their associates, and that they will, in return, perform for the Government what it is provided by this bill. It seems to me so clear that it must meet the cordial approval of the Senate.

Mr. PRATT. Will the Senator be kind enough to read the clause of the bill which gives jurisdiction to the adjoining States over offenses committed within the territories of the United States?

Mr. HAMLIN. This bill was drafted before any territorial bills had been passed, and consequently, if this telegraphic line had been constructed when the bill was drafted, it would have passed through a wilderness country without territorial organization, and hence this language was used: "And all legal process and proceedings for the detection and punishment of the aforesaid offenses shall be within the jurisdiction of the courts, and shall be issued and executed by the proper law officers in the adjoining States and Territories." I think it would perhaps be as well to strike out that language, and leave the punishment of those offenses to the territorial judge, as the line will now pass altogether through the Territories.

Mr. HUNTER. This bill has been very much amended, and I will therefore suggest that it lie over until to-morrow and be printed, so that we may see all the amendments. It is an important bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until half past twelve o'clock to-morrow morning, and that it be ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN. Before the question is taken on that motion, I should like to inquire of my friend from Maine at what time the bill provides for the completion of the telegraph?

Mr. HAMLIN. Two years.

Mr. BROWN. Two years from the passage of the bill?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. EVANS. The bill has been so much amended, and is in such confusion that I do not know what its provisions are. I wish, therefore, to inquire whether it provides that the grantees shall have alternate sections of land along the whole line?

Mr. HAMLIN. Only to the extent of two millions of acres.

Mr. EVANS. Where are they to be located?

Mr. HAMLIN. Along the line.

Mr. EVANS. Suppose the land is not surveyed, what is to become of it?

Mr. HAMLIN. The bill provides that if it is not surveyed within two years, it shall be taken in alternate sections in territory.

Mr. PRATT. Manifest policy, it seems to me, requires that we should act upon a subject after it has been discussed. I think it would be a great deal better to go through with what is commenced rather than to postpone it from day to day. Such a course leads to prolonged debate. It seems to me that it will always be a great deal better to get rid of a subject which we have discussed.

Mr. HUNTER. I understood that the suggestion of the Senator from Maine was to lay over the bill until to-morrow at half-past twelve o'clock. Surely, that is not too much time for the examination of such a bill as this.

Mr. WELLER. I am perfectly willing myself that the bill shall be postponed until to-morrow, with the distinct understanding that we are to act on it at that time. An explanation of the different provisions of the bill has been made this morning, for the first time, by the Senator from Maine. Certainly we desire that the Senate shall be advised of all the various provisions of the bill before it is passed by them. We do not require nor ask hasty action on it. I am willing, therefore, to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow, at half-past twelve, with the understanding that its friends will then endeavor to bring the Senate to a vote upon it.

Mr. HAMLIN. Before the question is put upon the motion to postpone, I move to amend the last section by striking out the words "the adjoining States and," so as to leave legal process and proceeding for the punishment of the offenses named to be executed and issued by the proper law officers in the organized Territories.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. If it be in order, I should like to move to amend the motion to postpone by in-serting "one o'clock" in lieu of "half past twelve."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion would not be in order.

Mr. BROWN. If by his proposition that this bill is to be taken up, and, if possible, disposed of to-morrow, my friend from California means to carry it beyond the morning hour, I wish to say now, in time, that I shall object to any such understanding. I am willing that half the morning hour shall be devoted to this bill; but there are very many important measures which are being postponed from day to day, while bills like this are taken up by courtesy to gentlemen. For instance, the indigent insane bill, which all of us know stands very much in the way of our progress with other bills, has been here now for nearly three months, and we have not had a vote on it. Then there is the homestead bill, and there are other important bills, whose friends are desirous to see them acted upon. I wish simply to say to my friend from California, that if half the morning hour be devoted to this matter, I do not object, but I must object to any understanding to carry it beyond the morning hour, so as to interfere with other business.

Mr. WELLER. I simply desired to notify the Senate, by the expression which I made, that on to-morrow the friends of the bill would endeavor to obtain a vote. Everybody must regard this as a very important measure, and of course we desire the action of the Senate on it as early a day as possible. I said, therefore, that to-morrow, unless some public reason interfered, the friends of the bill would urge on the Senate the propriety of taking a vote. I do not know whether my friend from Mississippi is an enemy or a friend to it. If he is an enemy of the bill, of course his suggestion will have very little weight on my mind; but if he is in truth and fact in favor of its passage, then of course I shall feel inclined to do every thing I can to yield to his personal feelings. But the Senator has not defined his position, and I fear that we shall find him opposed to the passage of the bill. I desire, therefore, to stand entirely uncommitted as to what I shall do to-morrow. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." I hope we shall be able to obtain a vote to-morrow.

Mr. BROWN. I shall be glad if we can take a vote to-morrow; but what I wished to say was, that by my silence I did not intend to agree to any understanding to give this bill precedence over anything else.

Mr. WELLER. I will pledge myself to my friend from Mississippi, that I will not press this bill to a vote to-morrow to the exclusion of more important business. That ought to be satisfactory—I being the judge, of course, of what are more important. [Laughter.]

The motion to postpone the further consideration of the bill to, and make it the special order for, half-past twelve o'clock to-morrow, was agreed to.

AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

Mr. STUART. I now wish to ask the Senate to take up, with a view of disposing of it to-day, if we can, the bill making a grant of land for the relief of indigent insane persons, which has been returned by the President of the United States, with his objections.

Mr. CLAYTON. We have now on the table a bill which is the special order immediately after this shall be disposed of. I refer to the bill reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations for the more effectual suppression of the slave trade in American-built vessels. I hope we shall take up that bill now.

Mr. HUNTER. I think it would be better to take up the veto message. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRODHEAD] has been here day after day, desiring to speak on it, and I think it is due to him that he should have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. CLAYTON. It was understood on Saturday, when the bill for the suppression of the slave trade was postponed, that it would be taken up immediately after the special order which has just been disposed of. That bill is one on which I presume there will be no debate whatever; for I suppose, from what I understand, that an arrangement can be made which will supersede the necessity of any debate at all. I hope, therefore, that we shall adhere to the special order. It cannot consume more than a few minutes, and then we can take up the veto message.

Mr. STUART. If the bill of the Senator from Delaware be first in order on the table, and if it will lead to no debate, as he supposes, I am willing to withdraw my motion, so as to allow that bill to be taken up; but I assure the Senate that I am exceedingly anxious to dispose of the other question, for it stands in the way of other business.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman cannot be more anxious than I am to dispose of the veto message; but I wish to take up the first bill in order.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to inquire of the Chair if the veto message is not first in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first bill now on the orders of the Senate for consideration is the bill spoken of by the Senator from Delaware. Immediately after that is the act making a grant of public lands to the several States of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons.

Mr. CASS. I agree with my colleague on this matter. If the vote can be taken on the bill of the Senator from Delaware, without discussion, I have no objection to its being taken up. After that I shall be in favor of taking up the veto message. I believe we ought to have a vote upon that. Then, for myself, I shall vote against every proposition to bring other business before the Senate until the homestead bill be taken up.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no objection to taking up the bill of the Senator from Delaware, if it be understood that the amendment which is pending will be withdrawn; but surely he does not suppose that the amendment will be voted on without debate.

Mr. CLAYTON. I suppose that if the bill be taken up that amendment will be withdrawn in the course of a very few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan withdraw his motion?

Mr. STUART. Yes, sir.

The Senate then resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill for the more effectual suppression of the slave trade in American-built vessels, the pending question being upon the amendment offered on Saturday last by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FERRIS] to add the following additional sections:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the sum of $250,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the order of the proper officer of the American Colonization Society, for the year ending 30th June, 1855, for the purpose of enabling said society to establish a line of steam vessels consisting of two steamers. Said steamers shall each make three trips within the year, and, as near as possible, at regular intervals, alternating between the ports of New York, Baltimore, Norfolk, Savannah, and New Orleans, and the west coast of Africa, touching at such places as said society shall direct.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the Government of the United States shall have the privilege of transporting to and from West Africa, the Government mails, and likewise the Government stores, each trip.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That said society shall arm each steamer with one long heavy gun, on a pivot, and two small guns, and shall man them with a proper complement of seamen to render efficient service, under private commissions from the Government, to repress and check slavers on the line of their voyage between this country and the west coast of Africa, and along the line of said coast, and on their return voyage shall run down said coast as low as Cabinda, and return cruising along said coast as high as the Gambia.

Mr. CLAYTON. In regard to that amendment, I have to say that I trust the honorable Senator who offered it will see the propriety of withdrawing it. I understand, distinctly, that the Colonization Society has not desired any such proposition to be moved to this bill. The Colonization Society has not interfered, in any way, to amend or alter the bill. In relation to the proposition itself, I wish to say, that if the object of the honorable Senator be to establish a line of steamers between this country and Liberia, he will always find me friendly to a proposition of that description, if offered in the proper place. I trust the honorable Senator from Indiana, seeing these things, will not be disposed to obstruct the passage of this measure, which is a very important one.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, before I sit down, I shall withdraw the proposed amendment; but, before doing so, it is proper that I should make a very short explanation. I offered this amendment at the instance of the Rev. James Mitchell, who is the agent of the Colonization Society for five States in the West—Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin—as I understand. He presented me the paper, requesting me to offer it as an amendment. I now understand, from the Senator from Delaware, that the Colonization Society do not desire it offered to this bill, and, therefore, at the suggestion and with the concurrence of the gentleman at whose instance I offered it, I withdraw it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

INDIGENT INSANE BILL VETO.

On motion by Mr. STUART, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill making a grant of public lands to the several States of the Union for the benefit of the indigent insane persons, which had been returned by the President of the United States with his objections.

Mr. BRODHEAD addressed the Senate in support of the veto message. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. STUART. There are many Senators not now here who hardly anticipated that a vote would be taken on this question to-day; and, if there be no objection, I suggest that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow at one o'clock, or two o'clock, as may suit the pleasure of the Senate, with the understanding that at that time the vote will be taken. If that be done, I shall then ask the Senate to take up the next special order, which is the homestead bill.

Mr. BELL. I should have no objection to that proposition, but that I should like very much to see a pretty full attendance of the Senate when the question is taken.

Mr. HUNTER. There will be then.

Mr. BELL. A number of Senators are not now in the city, but are anticipated to be in a few days. I think, therefore, it would be better to postpone the time of taking the vote a little longer. I do not suppose any one desires to discuss it further.

Mr. STUART. So far as I am concerned, it is immaterial whether the Senate disposes of it to-morrow or Monday. I should be entirely willing to consult the views of the Senate on the subject; but my desire was to fix a day for taking the vote, that Senators may be here.

Mr. BELL. I should prefer Monday. I do not know whether any advantage would result from it; but I think we shall be more likely then to have a large attendance of Senators than to-morrow.

Mr. STUART. I have no objection to it.

Mr. WELLER. I think it would be utterly impossible to fix a day to suit the convenience of all the Senators. I have no doubt we shall have as many in attendance to-morrow as on Monday; and if there is no gentleman who desires to continue the debate, I should prefer, individually, to take the vote to-morrow, in order that we may proceed with other business, which must necessarily be disposed of. I shall, therefore, move, unless the Senator from Michigan makes the motion, to postpone it until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan submits that motion.

Mr. STUART. I submitted it with a wish to get the general understanding of the Senate as to the time, not to consult my own convenience at all.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the vote will be taken to-morrow at one o'clock.

Several SENATORS. Say two o'clock.

Mr. HUNTER. Well, two o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not intend to detain the Senate by giving my views at length upon the bill; but before the vote is taken, I desire to make a few remarks upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the motion is to postpone the further reconsideration of the bill until to-morrow at two o'clock, with the understanding that the Senate will then proceed to a vote upon it.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest that it had better probably be postponed until one o'clock. I understand there are several Senators who wish to speak a few minutes upon the bill. There are at least two.

Mr. STUART. I have no objection to making one o'clock the hour.

Mr. WELLER. I think, if we postpone it to two o'clock, we can, by that time, get through with the bill which we had under consideration to-day, to provide for the construction of a telegraph from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I think we shall have ample time to dispose of that, if this bill be postponed until two o'clock. I therefore prefer that hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from California that, according to the usage of the Senate, when a question is once up, it cannot be laid aside without being disposed of in some way by a vote of the Senate; so that if the bill to which he alludes should be taken up to-morrow, and it should not be gotten through with by one o'clock, the Senate will continue considering it, unless a majority determine otherwise.

Mr. HAMLIN. I concur in what the Chair has said; but still, if it be the sense of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the veto message, I should not desire to interpose objection to it. If, however, as suggested by the Senator from California, we could dispose of the other, it would be better for us to postpone this until a later hour—say half past one o'clock.

Mr. STUART. The difficulty I anticipate, if we postpone this bill beyond one o'clock, is, that we shall not dispose of it to-morrow, but shall adjourn before it is acted upon. I am entirely disposed, as I said, to consult the convenience of every Senator, if I can; but it seems to me it would be as well to say one o'clock as the hour to which we should postpone it; and by that hour, if we have not got through with the telegraph bill, it can be postponed until next day, and we shall succeed in disposing finally of this question to-morrow.

Mr. CASS. Why not go on with the discussion of this bill now? We must settle it.

Mr. STUART. If the Senator from New Hampshire is disposed to go on to-day, I certainly shall withdraw my proposition to postpone, and hear him to-day.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator does not desire to go on now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not very particular about it. I do not propose to discuss the merits of the bill; but before the vote is taken, I wish to occupy about twenty minutes.

The motion to postpone until one o'clock to-morrow was agreed to.

HOUR OF MEETING.

On motion by Mr. ADAMS, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by him on Friday last, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate hereafter meet at nine o'clock, a. m.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to strike out "nine" and insert "eleven."

Several SENATORS. Say ten.

Mr. HUNTER. I think eleven would be a much better hour. It is to be remembered that the appropriation bills are nearly all to be acted upon yet. When they come here, they will have to be referred to the Committee on Finance. A great deal of labor will be devolved upon that committee, and it is hardly to be expected that they can meet and prepare for the action of the Senate on these bills before nine o'clock in the morning. We ought to have some time in the morning to attend to our committee duties; and I therefore think eleven o'clock will be a much better hour to appoint. That has been the usual course heretofore.

Mr. ADAMS. My purpose in introducing the resolution was that we should have morning sessions, which would be more pleasant and agreeable to Senators than our present evening sessions. I have no particular choice myself, however. If it be the general sense of the Senate to strike out "nine" and insert "ten," I should have no objection. To insert "eleven" would not answer the purpose I had in view in desiring the morning session. I only want the sense of the Senate in reference to it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance a question. Have you received any of the appropriation bills yet?

Mr. HUNTER. None.

Mr. JOHNSON. Has any come here yet?

Mr. HUNTER. We have acted upon one or two of them. We have acted upon the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is disposed of.

Mr. HUNTER. It has been sent back to the House.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is no appropriation bill now pending in this body.

Mr. HUNTER. None.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then what is the use of meeting at an earlier hour? I doubt very much whether it is necessary to force this thing as yet. With the entrance into this body of the very first appropriation bill, I am willing to vote for an earlier hour of meeting; but I am not willing to vote for it when there are none of those bills before us.

I am very well satisfied that if we meet here at nine o'clock, we shall not adjourn before three o'clock. That is the opinion of but one member, it is true; but it is the opinion of very few, I think, that we should adjourn any earlier than that. Then why meet at an unusually early hour? I think we sit now, from twelve o'clock, as long as the nature of the public business requires us to do. We are getting along very well with the business. We are not behind-hand. A vast amount of the business of this body has been transacted and sent to the other House, and there is, comparatively, very little before us. I do not believe that we ought to make this change in the hour of meeting yet. I doubt very much whether it ought to be made until the Committee on Finance are ready to report some one or other of the appropriation bills to us. The committee must have time to labor. They ought to have until the hour of twelve. If we make this change, and meet at the unusually early hour proposed, before they have prepared and matured any of the appropriation bills, they will have to be excused from service in this body for the time being, and be compelled to go and attend to their committee duties while we are in session. The gentlemen composing that committee have interests here to attend to; and we are entitled as much to their counsel as to that of others; and they themselves are entitled to ours; but if we meet at an earlier hour they will be compelled to attend to their committee duties while we ourselves are in session. Every one will see that it is almost impossible for them to meet at a late hour in the evening to transact committee business. The evenings are excessively oppressive. The mornings themselves are oppressive; but the evenings excessively so.

I think it will be wise, and I hope for the present we shall do so, for this body to hold on to its position, and meet as it always does at twelve o'clock, and continue to sit through the day to the usual hour; for at the least, say what we will upon the subject of our sitting here through the day, there are few who will not say that this is the coolest place in the city. It is as little uncomfortable, if not less so, than any other place in the city. I do hope that the Senate will not change the hour of meeting at all, until there is some absolute necessity imposed upon us by the nature of the business brought before us; and I do not see how that can be the case, until the appropriation bills are brought here.

Mr. STUART. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi to modify his resolution as to the time when it shall go into operation—to say "Monday next," in place of "hereafter." Perhaps we could adopt the hour of ten o'clock, on and after Monday next.

Mr. ADAMS. I accede to that proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Senator from Mississippi, modifies his resolution so as to make it read:

"Resolved, That the Senate meet on and after Monday next, at ten o'clock, a. m."

Mr. GWIN. I hope that the resolution will pass in the amended form, which fixes Monday next for its operation. I differ entirely from the Senator from Arkansas when he says that we should not meet yet before twelve o'clock. There is no doubt that this is the coolest place in the city. As far as the Committee on Finance is concerned, I am a member of that committee, and I have no doubt that we can find time to attend to our business, and meet at an earlier hour than we now do. I think we can get through with our business very well by meeting, on and after Monday next, at ten o'clock. I am sure the chairman of the committee will look to it that we get the appropriation bills ready for the Senate by that hour. There are some very important measures which ought to be discussed this session, and I think that by meeting from Monday next at ten o'clock, we shall be able to bring forward the appropriation bills.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Senator from Mississippi having modified the resolution, it is necessary for me to modify my amendment so as to strike out "ten" and insert "eleven." I make the motion because I think there is force in the suggestion which fell from the chairman of the Committee on Finance; and because I believe we shall do just as much work if we meet here at eleven, as we should if we met at nine or ten. From eleven to half past three, this hot weather, is as long as we can be expected to meet here; and we shall accomplish as much work in those hours as if we met earlier. For that reason I make my motion.

Mr. WALKER. I should like to hear the ideas of the Chair on this question. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not at liberty to give them. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRIGHT. I shall vote against any motion to change the hour of meeting, until nearer the close of the session. If, during the last week, it should be found necessary to meet at an earlier hour, I shall be willing to do it; but for the present the hour ought not to be changed. If Senators, who are in favor of the resolution, will look back to the precedents, they will find that this is earlier than the change has heretofore usually been made. But if it is proposed to make that change, I think it will be just to the Committee on Finance, that the mornings on which they hold their regular meetings, Tuesday and Friday, be excepted, so that they may not be denied a participation in the deliberations of the Senate. They will be excluded if we meet here at an earlier hour than twelve, or earlier than eleven at any rate.

There is a mistaken impression abroad, that unless we are sitting here we are not at work. Now, sir, the most laborious services that I perform are outside of this Senate Chamber, getting business ready, and attending to business in the different Departments. I feel the necessity of having time as much for that as I do to come here, and discharge my duties. I hope, therefore, it will be the pleasure of the Senate to let the hour of meeting remain as it is until we ascertain by experience that our business drives us to an earlier hour. Then we can change the hour to eleven o'clock; but under no circumstances should we meet earlier than that.

Mr. SEWARD. I concur in what has been said by the Senator from Indiana, and as the honorable Senator in the chair [Mr. BADGER] is, by his position, precluded from making a response to the question of the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. WALKER,] I will answer for him. I announce, therefore, that the Chair concurs also with the Senator from Indiana; that it is better that the meeting should continue at the usual hour, until some occasion arises for a change. [Laughter.]

But, to be serious. If we meet at nine, or at ten o'clock, we must meet with some purpose, either to sit until the customary hour, or to adjourn at an earlier hour of the day. Now, I think it very clear, if this intensely hot weather is to continue, that it will not be within the bounds of human endurance for Senators to go through their duties on committees, which require an hour every day, and then to sit here either five or six hours, and also to perform the necessary labor which attendance upon the Departments requires from many Senators, to say nothing of the time required for the examination of subjects which come before us. If the expectation be that we shall adjourn at an earlier hour of the day, I concur with the Senator from Arkansas, that an earlier meeting is unnecessary. I do not see any pressure of public business upon us now to require it. I think no good reason has been assigned for it, except the supposition that it may be more convenient during this hot weather. I believe that is a fallacious view; but if not, this proposition comes too late, for we are passing through, and probably coming to the end of the intense heat under which we are now suffering. If the idea be that we are to change the time in order to shelter ourselves from the heat, then the motion comes too late, for I presume that the weather is going to change. We have had ten of these hot days; the wind must now set in from another quarter. We may have occasion for changing the hour of meeting before the end of the session—perhaps ten days before its close. I agree in this matter with the chairman of the Committee on Finance, [Mr. HUNTER,] and I hope the Senate will not adopt the resolution.

Mr. CASS. A good deal has been said in the Senate, almost foreign, in my opinion, to our discussions, which has done great injustice to the body. As the Senator from Indiana has well observed, an idea seems to prevail through the country, which is fortified by a great deal of what has fallen from Senators, that we come here in the morning and spend an hour or two, and that that is all we do as members of Congress. A more fallacious idea could not prevail. You know, sir, and we all know, that a large portion of the business of the Senate, and of the other House is done in committees. The principal part of it is matured there. Facts are investigated, principles examined, and reports made, by which we are very much guided; and a great portion of the labor of the Senate consists in the preparation of that business. There is not a member of the Senate who, day after day, I might almost say, hour after hour, is not required to go to some of the Departments to investigate some matter connected with some of his constituents. Then we have an immense correspondence to attend to. The task of franking and overseeing the direction of the great number of speeches and documents which we send to our constituents, is no slight one. When a man has to sign his name forty thousand or fifty thousand times he feels that he has a serious job before him. I believe those numbers are not very unusual, and I know by my own experience that they are sent. I mention these facts, although they are well known to Senators, because they are necessary in justification of the Senate. It is generally pretty hard work for us to attend to all these duties. I have been a working man all my life, and generally a pretty hard one; but I never worked harder than I have done as a member of Congress. I rise every morning before the sun and begin my labor; and I find myself pretty tired by the time night comes on. The idea is perfectly fallacious, that the little time which we spend here is all the time which we employ in executing the duties intrusted to us.

Besides that, questions come up which require consideration and examination, and I regretted very much, the other day, to hear some remarks which fell from the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. DAWSON,] who is not now in his seat. He talked about extemporaneous discussion—skirmishing, as he called it, being the best mode of carrying on debates. I do not believe a word of it. He has a very incorrect estimate of himself, of this body, or of the country, who comes to the Senate to mingle in its debates unprepared. I am not in the habit of doing that. The higher the subject, the deeper should be its consideration. Skirmishing never gains victories, either on the battle-field, or in mental conflicts. It was not through skirmishing that the great orators of ancient and modern days obtained their eminence. Their example is good for us. It was labor, incessant, eternal, and unmitigated labor, by which they obtained their reputations. That labor we must go through with in the investigation of all subjects; and I repudiate in toto the idea of the honorable Senator from Georgia, that it is best for us to come here and carry on a skirmishing, extemporaneous debate, on the most solemn questions which come before us. I am not one of those who measure the value of legislative labors by the thickness of the statute-books. I would rather, sometimes, take the proportion in the inverse ratio. I believe advantages arise to this Government from discussion here; it turns the attention of the public to great subjects. There is no discussion in Turkey, none in Russia; but wherever there is freedom, there is discussion; and the more freedom, the more discussion.

I repeat, that the duties of a member of Congress are laborious and incessant; and if he is a conscientious man, as I believe we all are, he can only discharge them by untiring labor. I have no idea that my own labor is greater than that of other members, and in one respect I am more favored, as the Senate has excused me from serving upon any of the standing committees, except that on the library.

Now, with respect to the proposition before us,

I wish to say that I shall be willing to meet at eleven o'clock at the proper time—although not yet—for I believe if we meet at eleven, and sit four hours a day, it is as much as we can well do, and have time to attend to the other business which we are required to perform. But I do not think it is necessary yet to meet any earlier than we now do.

Mr. MALLORY. My friend from Mississippi, I presume, supposes that his proposition will facilitate the business of the Senate. I shall vote against it, because I think it will retard the business. I shall be, however, prepared to vote at any time for a continuance of our session as late throughout the night as may be proper. I think we should accomplish much more business if we had a recess, say, from three o'clock to eight o'clock, and then meet a few hours in the evening; but, sir, a radical objection to meeting at ten o'clock, in my judgment, is this: all of us from the new States have a great deal of business with the Departments. We are in the habit of meeting there; and they do not open before ten o'clock in the morning, and do not fairly get under way, perhaps, with their business, until half-past ten o'clock. We shall be compelled to be there. That business is, perhaps, as equally important as any we have to attend to here. Another objection is, that none of us reach our committee rooms at present, with the utmost haste, before half-past ten o'clock. Much of our business, as has been said, is effected in committee. If we meet at ten o'clock we cannot get there sooner than we do now, residing, as we do, at a great distance from the Capitol. If then, our having to be at the Departments and the committee rooms at those hours is a sufficient objection to the resolution, it ought not to pass. But if any Senator will bring forward a proposition to have a recess from four to eight at night, I am very well convinced that we could accomplish much by adopting that course.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the resolution lie upon the table.

Mr. ADAMS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 27, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Bright, Brodhead, Butler, Cass, Chase, Clay, Cooper, Dixon, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Gillette, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Morris, Pettit, Pratt, Sebastian, Seward, Stidell, Sumner, Toucey, and Wade—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Badger, Brown, Geyer, Gwin, Hamilton, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Rockwell, Rusk, Stuart, Walker, Weller, and Williams—14.

So the resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

WILLIAM BROWN.

The bill for the relief of William Brown was read a second time; and, on motion by Mr. HAMLIN, considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of William Brown, alias Billy Brown, a colored man, now a resident of Portland, Maine, on the pension roll, at ninety-six dollars per annum, commencing May 30, 1844, and continuing during his natural life.

Brown was one of the crew of the United States frigate Constellation, and served as a powder-boy during the engagement of that ship with the French frigate l'Insurgente, on the 9th of February, 1799, which resulted in the capture of the latter. During the engagement he was wounded in the foot, which has made him a cripple ever since. When his papers, establishing the fact and extent of his disability, were filed with the Commissioner of Pensions, that officer, supposing that the claim was founded on the eighth section of the act of 1800, rejected it, on the ground that the injury was anterior to the passage of the act, which was prospective only. In point of fact, however, the claim is covered by a similar provision for a pension to those disabled in the line of duty, in the eleventh section of the act of July 1, 1797, "providing a naval armament," and under which the frigate Constellation, together with the frigates United States and Constitution, were manned and employed. That act was temporary, but did not expire by its limitation until the 4th of March, 1799, and the injury was received by the petitioner on the 9th of February in that year. It appears by a letter of the Commissioner of Pensions of May 28, 1844, that the proof in the case is satisfactory, but that a rule of the Department prevents his exercising any discretionary power. The rule alluded to is that which excludes all evidence of the injury but record evidence after the lapse of twenty-five years. As there is no doubt of the identity of the petitioner, and satisfactory evidence of the fact that he was wounded in his foot during the engagement of the l'Insurgente, and that he is now, and has always been, a cripple from that cause, the committee are of opinion that he is entitled to a pension under the provisions of the act of July 1, 1797.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. SLIDELL, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 5, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

RESIGNATION OF HON. GILBERT DEAN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letter from Hon. GILBERT DEAN, tendering his resignation as a member of the present Congress:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 3, 1854.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I have this day resigned my seat as a member of the Thirty-Third Congress. In parting with this body, I tender to its members my sincere wish for their prosperity and welfare.

For yourself, sir, believe me truly, &c., G. DEAN.

HON. LINN BOYD,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The communication was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Treasury Department, relating to the leases made with the Bank of Commerce and the Bank of the State of New York, for their respective buildings, for the use of the assay office, in the city of New York.

On motion by Mr. ROBBINS, the communication was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

The SPEAKER stated that the question before the House was on recommitting to the Committee on Public Lands the bill "granting lands equally to the several States to aid in the construction of railroads, and for the support of schools," on which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. BENNETT addressed the House in explanation and defense of the bill, and in reply to the speech made by Mr. DISNEY some time since on the subject of the disposal of the public lands. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. B. then withdrew the motion to recommit, and moved that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the third Tuesday of December next, and also moved the previous question upon that motion.

Mr. DISNEY. I trust the gentleman will withdraw his motion for a moment, as I want to say a word or two to him. He has made some remarks in reference to a speech which I have made, which naturally calls for a response. I will not be very severe upon the gentleman. [Laughter.] I ask the gentleman to give me an opportunity to reply.

Mr. BENNETT. The gentleman can take any opportunity, if the consideration of this bill is postponed.

Mr. DISNEY. Does the gentleman refuse to withdraw his call?

Mr. BENNETT. I cannot withdraw the motion. The gentleman once refused to allow me to make an interruption, and I do not know why I should comply with his request.

Mr. CHASTAIN. I move to lay the bill upon the table; and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BENNETT. Does not the motion to postpone take precedence of that motion?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. HOUSTON. As the morning hour is nearly out, I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I make this motion in order that we may go into committee, and finish the civil and diplomatic bill.

Mr. BENNETT. If the motion of the gentleman from Georgia takes precedence of mine, I withdraw it, and renew my motion to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the motion cannot be made while the motion to lay upon the table is pending.

Mr. BENNETT. Then I adhere to my former motion to postpone.

Mr. FENTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report a bill, "to increase the compensation of collectors of customs," merely for the purpose of reference.

Mr. LETCHER. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to understand precisely the state of the question before the House. Does the gentleman from New York move to recommit merely to keep the bill before the House?

The SPEAKER. The motion made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CHASTAIN] cuts off the motion to recommit.

The gentleman from New York indicated his desire to withdraw the motion to postpone until the third Tuesday in December next, and to make the motion to recommit the bill. The motion to lay upon the table, however, will cut that motion off.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What I desired to know is, whether the object of the gentleman from New York, in making his motion, was to prevent the gentleman from Ohio from replying to his remarks?

Mr. DISNEY. That is the object, of course.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If it is, then we may as well vote upon the motion to lay upon the table now.

Mr. BENNETT. I am willing the gentleman from Ohio should take his own course in reference to replying. He will, no doubt, have an opportunity.

Mr. CHASTAIN. At the suggestion of some friends around me, I will withdraw the motion to lay upon the table, and allow the question to be taken upon the motion to postpone.

Mr. BENNETT. I then withdraw the motion to postpone, and move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DISNEY obtained the floor.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask that the question may be taken upon the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair.)

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee was last in session on the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, the question before the committee was on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GREENWOOD] to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER,] upon which tellers had been appointed.

The pending amendments were reported as follows:

Add to the amendment proposed by Mr. CHANDLER, which is as follows:

"For continuing the aqueduct for bringing water into the city of Washington, agreeably to the plan adopted by the President of the United States, according to the provisions of the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1853, $500,000."

—the words:

Provided, That no portion of the foregoing amount shall be applied unless the corporations of Georgetown and Washington shall appropriate and pay a sum equal to one fifth of the amount, to aid in the construction of the water-works proposed.

Messrs. FRANKLIN and CURTIS were appointed tellers.

The question was taken on Mr. GREENWOOD's amendment; and it was agreed to; the tellers having reported—yeas 75, noes 41.

Mr. OLDS. I move the following amendment, as an addition:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended unless in pursuance of a contract to be entered into for the furnishing of all the material, labor, tools, and machinery of every description, and every matter and thing relating thereto, and the completion of the entire work in a masterly and workman-like manner, after first inviting proposals for sixty or more days, in the daily journals of this and other cities throughout the Union; the advertisements to call for proposals for the Great Falls work, as reported on, and recommended by Lieutenant M. C. Meigs; for the Rock Creek work, as reported on, and recommended by Colonel George W. Hughes, and for lifting by steam, or water power, from the Potomac or Rock Creek, not less than nine million of gallons of pure water daily, (sufficient for three hundred thousand inhabitants,) and elevating the same to some convenient location, at or near Georgetown, to two hundred and fifty feet above high tide, into a distributing reservoir, which shall contain not less than fifty million of gallons: And it is further provided, That persons proposing shall accompany their bids with the guarantee of two or more responsible sureties, who will enter into bond with the United States that the work shall be completed within a reasonable time, and be permanent and efficient for five years after its completion; the President of the United States to accept such plan and proposal as, in his judgment, is best for the Government, after first submitting them to a board of three civil engineers, who shall report their opinion of their relative merits in writing, as to which plan is best for the interests of the Government: Provided further, That the whole cost does not exceed the sum of $2,300,000 if the Great Falls report is adopted; $1,000,000 if the Rock Creek project is adopted; and $500,000 if the project to lift by steam or water is adopted.

Mr. OLDS. Gentlemen of the committee are all aware, doubtless, that generally all public works undertaken by the Government in and about this city cost a great deal more than the estimates made under which they were commenced. We have rumors that the probability is that these water-works will cost five, six, or seven millions of dollars, and perhaps a good deal more than that. We also have rumors afloat about this city—I do not know whether they are well founded or not—that the best plan has not been adopted; and that some other plan could be adopted which would not cost perhaps more than $600,000, and which would effectually supply this city with pure water. The amendment I have offered proposes not to defeat the water-works, but that a contract shall be made after having advertised for proposals, and that contracts shall not be entered into at a cost greater than the estimates made by the engineers. It also proposes to give the revision to the President or the United States, of the plan adopted, that he may take the one costing $2,300,000, or the one costing $1,000,000, or the one estimated to cost $600,000—in short to make a revision of the plan.

It appears to me that there can be no objection to the amendment I have offered. It is not to defeat the water-works, but it is that you shall not undertake them, unless you have a responsible bid within the estimates of the engineer. How can you, Mr. Chairman, I, or any other member here, go home to our constituents, and tell them that we have voted for an appropriation of $500,000 towards supplying the city of Washington with pure water, when they have rumors afloat all the while, that before these water-works are completed they will cost some $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 to be taken out of the Treasury of the United States. When the contract is made with responsible persons, who undertake to complete the works fully, fairly, and in a workman-like manner, within the estimates of the engineers, then we can go home and justify ourselves, if we shall be called upon to give a vote of $500,000 for these water-works. I hope that the amendment I have offered, which is certainly a judicious one, will be agreed to.

Mr. CRAIGE obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield me the floor for an instant?

Mr. CRAIGE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLDS] to allow me to tender the paper which I send to the Clerk's desk, as a substitute for his amendment. I hope that when he has heard it read he will accept it.

Mr. OLDS. Well, let us hear it read.

Mr. SMITH's amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That none of the money hereby appropriated shall be expended in the construction of said aqueduct until contracts shall be entered into by the President of the United States with good and responsible persons for such portions of the work to be executed, and materials to be furnished, as will, in his opinion, secure the faithful completion of the work upon the plan above referred to, for the sum of $2,300,000 or less, and within two years from the date of the contracts; and it is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of the act of Congress under which the President adopted said plan for bringing water into the city of Washington, that the sole and exclusive use of the water to be brought by said aqueduct is for the purposes of the Government establishments in said city to the extent they may require it, and the cities of Washington and

Georgetown, and the inhabitants thereof, may, upon such terms and conditions and under such regulations as may hereafter be prescribed by act of Congress, use the surplus water: Provided, that the whole expense of the additional pipes necessary for the distribution of such surplus water through the said cities, shall be borne exclusively by the corporations of said cities respectively.

Mr. OLDS. I do not accept the proposed amendment. It does not provide so effectually as the other does.

Mr. CRAIGE. I must prefer the amendment which has been last read to that which has been offered by the gentleman from Ohio. I have no sort of objection to the limitations and conditions prescribed in the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH,] because, notwithstanding the rumors that have been spoken of by the gentleman from Ohio and others, I feel the utmost confidence that this work can be built within the estimate. I have taken the pains of investigating the estimate of Captain Meigs. I have taken the pains of investigating the work itself: and I repeat that I feel the utmost confidence in his calculations. I feel assured that the work can be built for the amount estimated. And, therefore, it is that I say I have no sort of objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia, or to the restrictions and limitations therein contained.

But my objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is simply this: after the passage of the first appropriation of $100,000 for this purpose, which authorized the President to commence this work after the different surveys had been made of Rock Creek, Little Falls, and Great Falls, the latter—the plan for bringing the water from Great Falls—was adopted by the person who was thus authorized by act of Congress to fix it. And under that the work has been commenced; under that a large portion of the conduit has been commenced, a large portion of the excavations have been made, and a great amount of the tunneling has been executed. I have examined it all, and I am satisfied that what has been done up to this time has been done within the estimate—and this is the most important part of the work.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, (interrupting.) If the gentleman from North Carolina will permit me to interrupt him, I would state to the committee that the only decided and radical objection which I have to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, is this: it calls on the President to adopt a plan. Why, sir, the President has adopted a plan once. The very plan which has been already commenced is the plan which he adopted. Now, the gentleman proposes that the President shall adopt another plan; and if this should be done we might be again compelled to change it, for want of money, or owing to the reports of Madam Rumor. This plan has been carefully prepared and reported by competent engineers.

Mr. CRAIGE. I think the work would never be ended, and therefore it is that I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. I apprehend that if the matter were investigated, it would be found that the outside pressure brought to bear from the different plans other than that adopted by the President, is the basis on which these rumors were founded. I should like, Mr. Chairman, that those who have spoken from these various rumors, to prove that the work would cost $6,000,000 or $7,000,000, would give us the data on which their estimates are based.

Let them tell us why it will cost this $6,000,000 or $7,000,000. The engineer who has this work in charge has told us why it will cost only $2,500,000. The figures are put down, and every man can have the opportunity to judge as to the correctness of the calculations, whether they are extravagant or not. But as to these various rumors in relation to the cost of this work, how can you tell whether they are well or ill founded? Does this rumor give us the calculations as to the various items of the work? Not at all. It does not tell us whether the calculations for the tunneling are too large, or anything of that kind. There is no such thing as that, but it is all vague and idle rumor, and nothing else.

On the contrary, those who advocate this work give us the details. They have looked into it, examined the matter, and have made careful estimates of the cost of each and every part of the work, such as the stone masonry, the excavation, and every different part of the work mentioned in that report. And they report that it can be built for the estimates. And more than that, the work has been finished over the most difficult part of the route, and that portion has been done within the estimate.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS,] a modification of his amendment to the amendment, which, of course, he can accept or not. I desire to have that amendment modified by inserting, after the word "contract," the words:

Provided, One half of the sum necessary for the construction of said work shall be paid for by the citizens of Washington and Georgetown.

Mr. CRAIGE. If the gentleman knew the facts he would not suggest such a modification as that. The amendment does not contemplate furnishing the citizens of Washington and Georgetown with water at all. It merely proposes to furnish the public buildings here, belonging to the Government, with water, and if the citizens of Washington and Georgetown want the benefit of the water, they will have to pay for it hereafter.

Mr. McMULLIN. They ought to be supplied with the water, and they ought to pay their proportion of the expense.

Mr. OLDS called for tellers on his amendment. Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN, and DAVIS, of Indiana, were appointed.

The question was taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 69.

So the amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I now desire to offer the amendment which was read a minute ago, to come in at the end of the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to have his amendment come in at the end of the proviso which has been adopted?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir, as a substitute for that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That will not be in order.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. May not the gentleman from Virginia move to strike out all after the original amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and to insert his amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. He may not. The committee have agreed to insert what the gentleman proposes to strike out.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The committee will observe that that amendment was designed to come in after the rejection—which I hoped would happen—of the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. GREENWOOD.] Still, I offer it now with the hope that when we get into the House the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas will be rejected.

Mr. OLDS. You cannot get a separate vote then.

Mr. SMITH. Certainly we can. Looking at it in that point of view, I ask the committee to contemplate what is proposed. Madam Rumor, said the aged and honorable gentleman from Ohio, is busy on the subject. Now, I head off Madam Rumor with the stipulation that this work shall be contracted for at a sum not exceeding the estimate. So Madam Rumor dies beneath that stipulation, and I shall have the support of the gentleman from Ohio. That is not all.

My amendment goes further, and declares the object of this improvement is to supply the public edifices with water, and those alone; and it expressly stipulates that the cities of Washington and Georgetown shall be at the entire expense of the pipes for the distribution of the water to individuals. These are two fundamental and important provisions. Then these contracts are to be made by the President, with responsible persons, and at a sum not to exceed in the aggregate the estimate. I advert to these things, for I cannot imagine, for my soul, a more practicable scheme within the limits of the estimate. I cannot imagine a proposition which addresses itself more thoroughly and satisfactorily to the intelligence of a body than that embraced by the amendment does to this committee. I trust, without wishing further to detain the committee, that the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I oppose this amendment, Mr. Chairman, for the reason that if it should be adopted in its terms, this work will cost $2,300,000, and introduce into the city of Washington sixty-seven millions gallons of water daily, which is, as I have said heretofore—and the assertion has not been disputed—nearly fifty times as much water as has ever been calculated by any engineer for any population in the world. According to the statement of Colonel Hughes, in his report, thirty gallons per day is as much as has ever been calculated for every man, woman, and child in a city.

Mr. VANSANT. With the gentleman's permission, I would ask him whether Philadelphia, New York, and Boston do not each consume a greater quantity of water daily than that indicated? Also, whether Philadelphia does not consume, by the report of 1852, thirty-eight wine gallons of water for each inhabitant, whether Boston does not consume fifty-eight gallons daily for each inhabitant, and whether New York does not consume daily, for a greater part of the season, ninety gallons for each inhabitant?

Mr. STANTON. Suppose the gentleman's statement to be correct. It is unquestionably true that in this case the water is to be applied to manufacturing purposes. It is unquestionably true that in this case the engineer proposes to bring sixty-seven millions gallons of water into the city, and to use a large proportion of it for manufacturing purposes. Then here the Government of the United States proposes to bring into the city of Washington, with a population of forty-five thousand inhabitants, sixty-seven millions gallons of water daily at a cost of $2,300,000, three fourths of which water is, for fifty years to come, to be used for manufacturing purposes.

Now, this amendment says that it is for the Government only; but something has been said in reference to a change of plan. Now, I wish to call your attention, Mr. Chairman, and the attention of the committee, to the fact that since the commencement of the present Administration, or rather since the transfer of the public works to the hands of the War Department, the law has been violated in reference to the work on the Capitol. The plan adopted by the President of the United States has been, without authority of law, altered, at an additional expense of half a million of dollars.

Mr. CRAIGE. I have heard this statement time and time again. Will the gentleman from Tennessee say how the law has been violated? I say it has not been violated.

Mr. STANTON. I will tell the gentleman how. I say that the letter and spirit of the law has been violated. The law in the first instance appropriated a certain amount of money to be expended upon the wings of the Capitol according to such plan as might be adopted by the President. President Fillmore, after consulting with the Committees on Public Buildings in both Houses of Congress, for many months together, adopted a plan, and after the work was transferred to the War Department, and placed under its control, the Secretary of War and his engineers altered the plan.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I rise to a question of order. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether, under the rules of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee is not bound to discuss the proposition now pending?

Mr. STANTON. I am discussing that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana is well taken, and he does not think that a discussion with reference to the wings of the Capitol is in order, when the amendment pending relates to works for supplying Washington with water.

Mr. STANTON. I am discussing the proposition to change the plan and adopt a cheaper one for bringing water into the city of Washington. I say that if the President, without authority of law, can alter the plan with reference to the Capitol, Congress, by authority of law, can alter and abolish an extravagant and outrageous proposition to bring ten times as much water into the city of Washington as is needed, at a cost of three or four times the amount at which it can be done. I say that the Congress of the United States can do that by authority of law, which the President, without authority of law, has done.

Mr. CRAIGE. The gentleman from Tennessee labors under great misapprehension with regard to a change of plan by the President. I have heard that assertion over and over again. It is not true that the President ever adopted any particular plan for the Capitol wings at all. It is true that a drawing was submitted—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. I would ask the gentleman from Virginia, if he will not modify his amendment by adding after the words "responsible persons" the following: "good and sufficient sureties."

Mr. SMITH. I will accept the modification suggested by the gentleman from New York; and I propose to modify still further by adding at the end the following:

And provided further, That twenty per cent. on the estimate of the work done on each contract, shall be retained till the completion of the contract.

Mr. SEWARD. Is it in order to move now to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at this stage of the question.

Mr. SEWARD. I want to move to strike out the words stating what is the true intent and meaning of the act of Congress under which the plan was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be having an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. SEWARD. This is the manner in which I propose to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The gentleman from Georgia will perceive that there would be no end to amendments, if this were received, as some other gentleman might propose to amend his amendment before acting on it.

The question was taken on Mr. SMITH's amendment to the amendment; and it was agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. CHANDLER's amendment, as amended.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. If in order, I move to reduce the original appropriation $300,000, so as to enable me to make a few remarks. I simply desire an opportunity to defend the positions which I have heretofore taken in regard to this work. All I have said heretofore in relation to the estimates, was based upon a critical examination of the report of the engineer, and did not rest, as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CRAIGE] seems to suppose, upon mere conjecture or outside rumors. I listen to no outside rumors in reference to this matter, because I have had before me all the facts and figures necessary to enable me to make up my own judgment; and I think I understand them without the aid of outsiders. Nor am I the advocate of what the gentleman calls outside projects. All I have said on this subject has been in reference to plans and projects presented by the officers of Government.

I have said that these estimates are false and delusive; and if the appropriation is made under the conviction that they are accurate, and that the work can be done in a substantial manner for the amount, this House and the country will be woefully deceived. In a five-minute speech it is impossible for me to explain them fully, so as to show in what particulars they fall short of the sum which must be expended. But I can point out a few: Captain Meigs, for instance, proposes to construct from the dam across the Potomac a brick conduit three fourths of a mile long. Here are his figures:

2,985 feet lineal, 9 inches thick.

3,931—three-fourths of a mile.

Now, we are given to understand that this part of the conduit will at times be "twenty feet under water," in consequence of the great floods which take place every year at that point. This comes from Captain Meigs's report, not from outsiders. It is his own language, not mine. This brick tube is not to rest upon solid masonry, and covered over with stone work firmly and solidly built for its protection, but is to lie in a trench dug in the earth, and only covered over with loose earth and rock. It will be nine feet in diameter, and not more than one and a half bricks thick. There is no estimate, not one cent, for a foundation and masonry for the support and protection of this conduit. No, sir, none. To make the conduit secure, to protect it from destruction by the immense floods rising twenty feet above it, and bringing down with the torrent huge trees and rocks, not one cent of expenditure is estimated for. If gentlemen will take the trouble to look at the report of Captain Meigs—

Mr. STANTON. Page 25. If they will look at this report, they will see that he speaks of the floods rising twenty feet above this conduit, and see also, by his estimates, that he has omitted to estimate for at least three fourths of the work which will be required at this point. The Croton aqueduct rests upon and is covered up for its protection with solid masonry. It would not otherwise have lasted a single year. But one of the city papers, feeling the force of this omission, has attempted to justify it, by referring to the Boston aqueduct, which, it is alleged, was laid in a trench dug in the earth, and covered up in the manner proposed by Captain Meigs for the Washington aqueduct. In the first place, the Boston aqueduct is a small affair compared with the one projected by Captain Meigs. It is only six feet by four, while this is nine feet, and the one is only about a third as large as the other. In the second place, the conduit was only laid on the earth in some places, and was sustained and protected by masonry in others. But I have before me a description of this work, printed in Boston, which says that laying the conduit on the earth was but an experiment, which has proved unsatisfactory. The aqueduct leaks, and is cracked in places, in consequence of this experiment. Captain Meigs is unfortunate in the adoption of plans which have failed and exploded before he took them up, as may be seen in the plan for the ventilation of the Halls of Congress, as well as in this of the aqueduct. But it is useless to dwell further upon this point. If the work goes on, there must be a great expenditure of money not estimated for, or the structure will not stand a single year.

Captain Meigs's estimate for the brick work of the conduit is $4 50 per running foot. It is based upon a calculation that the brick can be laid in the conduit at $14 per thousand, including every expense—the bricks, cement, lime, sand, &c. Now, he has contracted for forty millions of bricks, at $7 75 per thousand. This leaves $5 25 for all other expenses—laying the bricks, furnishing cement, sand—

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, obtained the floor.

Mr. CRAIGE. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to allow me to say a word. I was very anxious to have some data upon which these estimates of Captain Meigs's may be tested. I was very much in hopes that my friend from Kentucky, who has just taken his seat, and who is not influenced by any outside plans, would have furnished such data. But, sir, instead of doing that, he spent his whole five minutes in reference to the plan of Captain Meigs.

The only reason he gives for doubting the correctness of those estimates is, that he allows only $4 50 or $5 for brick work, when the cost would be $14 per thousand. The gentleman says, too, that he pays $8 81 per thousand for the bricks. Why, sir, the reason for that, as he very well knows, is stated by Captain Meigs himself—that the contractor who agreed to furnish them for $5 88 failed to carry out his contract.

Then the gentleman speaks about the protection Captain Meigs proposes for the conduit. Why, sir, that is not the conduit that is to bring the water to Washington at all. It is merely the one that is to be placed at the head of the work in order that it may not be flooded at the start.

Mr. TAYLOR. I must interrupt the gentleman. I wish to say a few words upon the subject myself. If we had not an official report before us, I confess that the good sense, the experience of the gentleman from Kentucky, and the attention he has given to this subject, would divert me from my support of this truly great national work, for such I consider it. He is a gentleman of great experience, and understands a great deal about this kind of business. But, sir, there are other men of experience. General Totten, the Chief Engineer of the United States Army, is a man who, as an engineer, has no superior in this country, and, perhaps, none in any other country. He is a man of unimpeachable reputation, and yet he in every way confirms the report of Captain Meigs, made to Congress in 1853.

Sir, all these representations that this work is to cost five or six millions are delusive and imaginary. We have the estimates of General Totten, whose statement we can depend upon, telling us that it will only cost $2,300,000. Here is a letter from Captain Meigs, written to me as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, bearing date 25th of May, in which he says:

"I forgot to mention, that, since the attempt to provide that the work should not be done, unless a contract should be made to build it for $2,300,000, I have already received an offer to build it for $2,300,000, made in good part, I believe, and by men whom I know to be able. I should be willing to accept such a proviso, except that it is so difficult to manage these great jobs, and better to make smaller ones."

Now, upon whom am I to rely? This is the statement of an educated man—of an officer educated at the public expense, understanding his business as well as any other in the country, having had twenty years' experience, and who has made an able report upon this subject to President Fillmore, and again to President Pierce. Sir, I must rely upon his statements, rather than on the surmises of gentlemen upon this floor. Now, sir, I hope the amendment of my friend from Virginia will be adopted. I should have preferred that it should have been done without the amendment of my friend from Arkansas, which has been adopted. I do not think we should make the corporations of Washington and Georgetown—highly respectable, sir, but nevertheless, comparatively poor—partners with the Government of the United States in carrying out this great national work. I do not think we should burden them with one fifth the expense of the work. I hope the Senate will strike out that proviso.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, there being no objection, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I offer the following amendment:

Provided further, That the said work and the cost thereof shall be so reduced in its dimensions as not to include the surplus water, amounting, according to the report, to one thousand seven hundred horse power.

Mr. Chairman, the report of Captain Meigs proposes to bring into the city of Washington, for manufacturing purposes, in addition to an ample supply for half a million of people, water sufficient to carry machinery at a power equal to one thousand seven hundred horses. Now, I put it to the House of Representatives, I put it to the Democrats in the House of Representatives, whether they are to vote to-day for bringing a power of one thousand seven hundred horses into the city of Washington through this aqueduct for the purpose of carrying machinery? That is the simple question.

Mr. CHASTAIN. Does Captain Meigs recommend in his report that it should be used for manufacturing, or does he barely suggest that it might be so used?

Mr. STANTON. In his report he suggests that it can be used for all sorts of light machinery, such as lathes, printing presses, &c. He does not propose it, it is true, but he suggests it as the only proper use which can be made of this surplus water.

Now, sir, I say that this whole work has been grossly exaggerated in point of extent and capacity, exaggerated beyond the wants of the city of Washington for a century to come—yes, sir, for a century to come. The proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLDS] to furnish nine millions of gallons of water daily for a population of three hundred thousand, would be amply sufficient for all the prospective wants of the city; but I propose, by my amendment, to dispense with only the surplus water of seventeen hundred horse power. Is my amendment reasonable or not? If the work is to be diminished so as to cut off seventeen hundred horse power, of course the cost will be diminished to that extent.

Mr. VANSANT. Mr. Chairman, if a bountiful supply of pure water can be introduced into Washington and Georgetown, at an expense but little exceeding that for a meager quantity, should the committee hesitate as to the selection of the source from which the same should be taken? Can pure water be wasted in populous cities when there is an abundant supply for all purposes? I do not believe that it can. The honorable gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] has most truthfully said, that if the entire waters of the Potomac could be poured into the streets and lanes of this metropolis, it would be a bounty rarely equaled.

Honorable gentlemen, opposed to the appropriation, have said much of the theory of thirty gallons per day for each inhabitant, and seem to regard estimates for a greater quantity than this altogether absurd. This theory might answer very well if the recent experience of the great cities of this country did not overturn it. Philadelphia—the city of right-angled streets and broad brim hats, whose people are probably more economical in all matters than those of any other city in this country—consumed, on an average, for the year 1852, 30 66-100 ale gallons for each inhabitant per day, being equal to 37 42-100 wine gallons. The gaugings of waters, and the estimates for supply for the Washington works, both by Colonel Hughes and Captain Meigs, are based upon the wine or United States standard gallon.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much did Philadelphia consume in the aggregate?

Mr. VANSANT. I do not remember the quantity in the aggregate. I am criticising the theory of thirty gallons as a supply for each inhabitant per day. The Cochituate works at Boston will furnish ten million gallons daily. When the works were completed, that quantity, it was confidently asserted by its projectors, would be sufficient for a population of three hundred and fifty thousand; and yet within four years from the completion thereof, when the city of Boston contained less than one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants, the water board of that city, in a report to the city council for the year 1852, say that "the average consumption of water during the year has been at the rate of eight millions one hundred and twenty-five thousand and sixty gallons daily, being one million two hundred and forty-two thousand and sixty gallons more than the year previous, and about fifty-eight gallons to each inhabitant of the city." During the summer months the consumption greatly exceeded the quantity indicated. The Croton works at New York, with the exception of laying a portion of the distributing pipes, were finished in 1842, and it was estimated that the supply of water therefrom would be ample for a population of one million five hundred thousand, and yet at the expiration of eight years, and when the population in the water district did not exceed four hundred and fifty thousand, the water commissioners in their report for 1850, said to the council of New York, "This board now warns the common council, and through it every citizen, that the last drop of water which the works in their present state can supply is now daily delivered in the city." And in their report for 1852, they remark, (referring to former estimates touching a supply of water,) "an experience of ten years enables us to contrast these preliminary calculations with actual results, and thus to see with great certainty the requirements of the future. During the summer months, for two years past, the whole flow of the Croton river has been turned through the aqueduct, and in 1851, for many consecutive weeks, not a drop of water passed over the dam, and the lake formed by it was gradually drawn down to two feet seven and a half inches. The daily delivery in the city for a large portion of these two years; has been about thirty millions of gallons a day, often in the past year at least five millions more drawn from the reservoirs on the island, giving to each inhabitant in the water district (not more than four hundred and fifty thousand) "a daily supply of nearly ninety gallons." What is the thirty-gallon theory worth in the face of such facts?

Gentlemen opposed to Captain Meigs's plan for supplying water from the Great Falls of the Potomac have compared it to the great aqueducts of ancient Rome. No people, Mr. Chairman, knew better than the ancient Romans how to appreciate the first great essential to health, and comfort, and cleanliness—pure water. Nearly four hundred millions of gallons were discharged daily into that renowned city, conveyed through twenty aqueducts, the length of which varied from seven to sixty miles respectively, and which furnished a daily quantity to each inhabitant of about three hundred and seventy-five gallons. Roman example, in the supply of wholesome water, is meritorious of the imitation of the most refined civilization of the present day.

The question was then taken, and Mr. STANTON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I propose to amend by striking out $400,000 of the appropriation, to enable me to continue my remarks on the subject of the estimates. The engineer estimates that the bricks laid in the conduit will cost only fourteen dollars per thousand. He has contracted to pay for the bricks eight dollars and seventy-five cents per thousand. This leaves five dollars and twenty-five cents for the work, cement, lime, sand, &c. The laying of the bricks in the thick walls of the Capitol, under the superintendence of Captain Meigs, cost, upon the authority of the Secretary of War, who has so informed the select committee, an average of five dollars and eight cents per thousand. Is it to be expected that this same engineer can have bricks laid at less cost upon the aqueduct, which is all arching, than he can upon the Capitol? Certainly not; and if any one is credulous enough to believe so, he is deceived. Now let us see how the estimate stands.

Captain Meigs's estimate per thousand for work, and materials, when done.....	$14 00
Contract price of bricks.....	$8 75
Laying at Capitol prices.....	5 08
One barrel of cement.....	2 00
Sand.....	50
Hauling and other expenses.....	50
	<hr/> $16 83

Excess of cost over estimate.....$2 83

This, then, is $2 83 per thousand, which these fifty millions of bricks are to cost more than the estimate; and if an allowance is made for the cost of superintending, it will swell the difference between the cost and estimate, in this one item, $150,000.

Now, in reference to the stone masonry. The estimates for this are $4 37½, $5, and $5 50 per perch, according to the kind of work to be done, and its location. We have recently had some experience in the cost of stone masonry, and can form a very correct idea of what it costs Government for such work under military engineers. The plain massive piers erected at the Little Falls bridge were built by a military engineer, at a cost, if all expenses are included, of eleven dollars per perch. The engineer who unfortunately had charge of the work admitted in his defense of himself in the Union, that the cost was as much as eight dollars. I differ from him, and believe my statement to be correct; but, take his as the basis of calculation, and it exceeds an average of Captain Meigs's estimates as much as three dollars per perch. The work on the bridges, culverts, &c., of the aqueduct should be done quite as well as that upon the piers of the Little Falls bridge; and who for a moment supposes that under Captain Meigs's management it can be done for less?

Mr. CRAIGE. Did Captain Meigs build the bridge at the Little Falls?

Mr. STANTON. It was built by the Government, and superintended by a military engineer.

Mr. CRAIGE. Was it Captain Meigs who made the estimates for it?

Mr. STANTON. I do not know that any estimates were ever made. The engineer who built it maintained that the work had been built at a very cheap cost. That cost was, according to his admission, eight dollars per perch. I make it eleven dollars. If eight dollars is cheap, it is hardly possible that Captain Meigs can have the work done for less, at a greater distance from the city, and under far greater disadvantages. It is idle to think so; and if gentlemen would only consult facts in preference to their partialities and prejudices, and take a common sense, practical view of the subject, they would see the matter in a different light. The estimates of Captain Meigs for the stone masonry is too low by at least three dollars per perch. The experience of the Government proves it.

But Captain Meigs and the Secretary of War do not agree in regard to the cost of the brick conduit. Captain Meigs, in his printed estimates sent to Congress, sets down the cost at $4 50 per running foot. For questioning the accuracy of his estimates, we are looked upon, in some quarters, as guilty of almost treason. Sir, he is talked about as if he were infallible, as if it were impossible for him to err. The Secretary of War does not seem to place much reliance upon his infallibility; for here I have before me his answer to questions propounded by the select committee, in which he says the cost will be $8 17 per foot, instead of $4 50. The Secretary of War is nearer right; but how happens it, if Captain Meigs is so reliable and so infallible, that the Secretary corrects his errors, and places a different amount of cost upon the aqueduct? Sir, the estimates of the engineer are worthless; they are not to be depended upon; and if I had time to take them up and expose them critically, I could demonstrate it to the satisfaction of every man in this House.

The length of the conduit, this side of the piece at the Great Falls, and outside of the tunnels, is fifty-nine thousand nine hundred and seventy-one feet, or eleven miles and one quarter. It will be a brick tube, nine feet in diameter, and one and a half bricks thick. In many places it will be supported, where it crosses ravines, by embankments of earth—nothing else. The engineer will make the embankment, and in that embankment of earth, dig a trench in which to rest the conduit. It will be protected by a covering of earth; and who is stupid enough to suppose that it will stand under such circumstances? The settling of the embankment will break it; the washing of the rains and floods will expose it—

Mr. CHANDLER. I have but a very few words to offer to the committee on this subject, as I am very anxious to come to a vote on the question. I desire to answer the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] but not with calculations. The Secretary of War, it would seem, has entered into a comparison between the cost of laying bricks here on the wings of the Capitol and laying bricks in trenches on the proposed aqueduct. If any man with an eye and with any kind of discernment, will look out of the window, he will see that the bricks here are laid in all kinds of ginger-bread work on arches, &c., which of course must be more expensive than laying them simply on trenches.

Mr. STANTON. Allow me to say, that there is no difference in Captain Meigs's estimate between the cost of laying the brick on the plain trenches, and that of laying it on the arches—they are all arches.

Mr. CHANDLER. In laying the brick on these arches every brick has to be cut and whittled into shape to make it correspond with the form on which it is to rest, requiring five times the work to lay them that it would to drop the brick into the arch through which the water is to run.

Let me say, in regard to these estimates, that they are based upon the calculations of engineers. The worst part of the work has been done, and so far it has cost less than the estimates. In them all allowances have been made by the engineers, exceeding the necessities of the case. All the calculations for the simple excavation of the earth and the laying of bricks are comprised in a formula as simple and accurate as the multiplication table itself. There is no part of practical navigation or surveying which is more simple, more reduced to rules and formula than the calculations for this work, and the youngest engineer who has been in the service only six or eight months, would be scouted at if he could not make these calculations so near that they would come within the real cost of the work. It is a matter which is perfectly easy of calculation.

I could dwell upon this matter for a longer time, but the committee is anxious to vote upon the subject, and I need only ask the committee to vote upon it, with the facts which have been placed before them.

The question was then taken upon Mr. STANTON's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. VANSANT. I am disinclined to take up the time of this committee; but the committee will, I am sure, pardon me, inasmuch as I have not consumed much of the time of the House this session. I offer to amend the pending amendment by increasing the amount $100,000.

I have been, like the honorable gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] somewhat familiar with this subject, theoretically, at least. It became my duty, upon a former occasion, to examine critically the estimates made in reference to the introduction of water into this city; and since I have had the honor of a seat upon this floor, I have compared the estimates of Captain Meigs with the estimates made by other engineers, and I find, in nearly every instance, that the estimates of Captain Meigs have overreached those made by any other engineer who has ever made surveys in the United States for similar works.

Now, if the honorable gentleman from Kentucky was disposed to be critical, he might well have criticised the report of his favorite, Colonel Hughes, a gentleman whom no one more esteems than I do, who admits, in his report on the introduction of water from Rock Creek, that he would have to make a tunnel of one thousand feet through hard rock, near the residence of the late Russian Minister, in Georgetown, and yet, in his report, he makes no sort of estimate for the expenses of that tunnel. And he places the cost of making rock excavation, in general, eighty-seven and a half cents per cubic yard, which is fifty per cent. less than that which has been estimated by other engineers for similar work.

The honorable gentleman from Kentucky, in comparing the estimates of Colonel Hughes with those of Captain Meigs, for the purpose of showing that water might be introduced, according to the plan of the former, at less than one fourth of the sum which the latter estimated for conveying water from the Great Falls, failed to inform this committee that Colonel Hughes made no estimate for laying down mains to the public buildings, whilst Captain Meigs estimates the cost of mains and stop cocks at $290,000.

Corroborative of the declaration I have made, that the estimates of Captain Meigs are liberal, I have compared those estimates with estimates for similar work made by distinguished engineers. John J. Jervis and Walter R. Johnson, who surveyed the route and made estimates for introducing the water of Lake Cochituate into Boston, estimate the excavation of earth for the line of aqueduct, &c., at prices varying from twelve to twenty cents per cubic yard. Colonel Hughes's estimate is from fifteen to sixteen cents. Mr. Slade, who was employed in the construction of the Boston and the Albany works in the capacity of engineer, and who made surveys and estimates for introducing water into Baltimore, estimates the same kind of excavation at twenty cents. The estimates of Captain Meigs vary from twenty to thirty-three cents per cubic yard. For excavation of rock in open cuts, Mr. Slade estimates at $2 per cubic yard; Messrs Jarvis and Johnson at $1.50 and $1.75; Colonel Hughes at 87½ cents, and Captain Meigs from $1.50 to $2, per cubic yard. For excavation of rock in tunnel, Mr. Slade based his estimate upon the cost of the Boston tunnels, $15 per cubic yard. Captain Meigs estimated at $14 per cubic yard; and the tunnels on the Great Falls line are now under contract at a cost but little exceeding $7 per cubic yard.

Mr. Slade's estimates were all made upon the cost of similar work upon the Cochituate line, and those made by Captain Meigs, equal in the average, if they do not exceed those of Mr. Slade. In addition to the liberal estimates made by that meritorious officer of the United States Topographical Department, he has added thereto twenty per cent. for contingencies, land damages, &c. His whole report evidences a commendable determination not to mislead Congress into an appropriation for a work which will exceed the estimate for its completion.

If permitted, Mr. Chairman, under the rules of the House, to occupy the floor upon the subject now before the committee for a few minutes more, I could show, by comparing the report of Captain Meigs with the cost of works which are now in operation, that the cost of introducing water from the Great Falls should not exceed the estimate of $2,300,000.

Mr. LETCHER. It seems that we are to spend $500,000 here either for water or in making speeches about it upon this floor, and I think that to spend it for the water will probably be the best trade of the two. [Laughter.] I rise, therefore, not to debate this proposition, but to suggest to the House that we stop debate upon this subject. If we are to spend $500,000 in this way, let us spend no more time about it. Let us come to a vote, and if there is a majority in favor of the proposition, let it go, but if there is a majority in opposition to it, why, let us have an end to it.

Mr. VANSANT, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

The question recurred upon Mr. CHANDLER's amendment as amended.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. WASHBURN of Maine, and STUART, of Michigan, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—yes 70, noes 61.

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MACE. I offer the following amendment:

For an additional messenger to the post office of the House that was allowed by the Committee on Accounts at the beginning of the present session, $1,000."

I wish simply to explain to the committee the reason for the adoption of the amendment I have offered. At the beginning of the present session of Congress, it was ascertained to be positively necessary to give the postmaster of the House an additional messenger and carry-all. The Committee on Accounts gave him authority to employ such messenger, and to procure such carry-all. The carry-all is provided for in the present bill; but through some oversight no provision has been made for the salary of the messenger so employed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAVEN. I offer the following amendment:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to complete the hospital for the insane of the District of Columbia, and the Army and Navy of the United States, as it is now in process of construction, where the foundations are laid, $18,200, and to enable the Secretary of the Interior to complete the external improvements necessary to carry into successful operation said hospital, according to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, $18,600.

If the committee will hear me for a moment upon the propriety of this amendment, I will then leave it to its fate. I hope a plain and brief statement will establish it in our favor, and satisfy all that it ought to be adopted. It is not recommended by any committee whatever; it comes here upon its own merits, and, so far as I know, without a friend in the House. However that may be, I am quite certain it has no advocates among the hungry gentlemen outside.

This hospital for the insane of this District, and for the Army and Navy, is now in process of construction, and is nearly completed in some of its leading features. It is situated on the opposite side of the East Branch of the Potomac, where we own one hundred and ninety acres of land, most beautifully situated, and adapted in the highest degree to this purpose. This land was purchased out of the first and only appropriation ever made for this object, which left some $70,000 for the erection of the requisite buildings and fixtures, and which, owing to the causes so often described here—increased price of labor and materials—was, and is, insufficient to perfect the buildings commenced, and fit the grounds for the objects intended.

This charity for the relief of the unfortunate insane, who have a claim on the General Government, originated in the House of Representatives. It had no recommendation from any officer of the Government. It is the spontaneous result of our own sympathies, and our own judgment. I think it was on the motion of Mr. Stanly, of North Carolina, that the last Congress, at its first session, passed an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of purchasing a site and building this asylum; and all I ask is, that this House now take charge of it, and dispose of the whole matter as it thinks best. I feel assured it will not allow its own offspring to suffer for the want of that aid that outside pressure sometimes brings here to objects much less worthy in character.

I desire to add, that the work has been under the general charge of the Secretary of the Interior; but it has all been carried on under the immediate eye of Dr. Nichols, a very fair and high-minded man. He is a gentleman of quite a large experience in some of the leading insane institutions of the country. The plan—admirable I think it is—is his. It contemplates, at some remote future day, when the necessities of the country shall demand it, more buildings than are now in process of construction; and one of the proprieties of the matter is, that still the present portion of the building will be a complete and perfect establishment within itself, and will accommodate at least seventy patients.

It appears to me that the appropriation already made has been used in a careful and economical manner. Dr. Nichols seems to have conducted the building as a private individual would his own concerns. He has not paid the extravagant prices for bricks that we have heard so much complaint of this morning in reference to the aqueduct, of eight dollars per thousand. On the contrary, he has made his own brick, out of the clay upon the premises, and, as he assures me, at a cost of not exceeding five dollars per thousand.

The Secretary of the Interior informs us, and such is the opinion of Dr. Nichols, that the appropriation named in my amendment will complete the present portion of the building and the grounds, as it was originally intended it should be completed. In this they may be mistaken, but I hope not. I ask the committee if they will not take charge of it now as their own matter, as they did when the House originated the proposition for this asylum, and make what they deem a proper grant to complete their own work. I hope they will, and that the appropriation will be voted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer the following amendment:

For running and marking the boundary line between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, under the treaty concluded at the city of Mexico on the 30th December, 1853, the sum of $168,130, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That there shall be allowed and paid to the commissioner, surveyor, and astronomer, appointed, or to be appointed, for the purpose aforesaid, each a salary at the rate of $3,000 per annum, and that if the duties of either have been, or shall be, performed by an officer of the Army, his pay during the time of such employment shall be increased to that sum.

By the terms of the treaty made between the United States and the Mexican Government, the ratifications of which were exchanged on the first of this month, a provision is made for the running of this boundary line between the United States and Mexico. I mean for running so much of the boundary line as by the terms of the treaty do not correspond with the boundary as laid down by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

The Secretary of the Interior submits to us an estimate on which that amendment is proposed. The previous commissioner, who was engaged in completing the work on the boundary between the United States and Mexico, was required to submit an estimate of the sum adequate and sufficient to complete the running of this line. He estimates that from twelve to eighteen months will be required for the purpose of completing it; and he estimates the amount indicated in this amendment as being ample. He thinks that if no accident devolve on the work, and if no delays shall occur when engaged in the prosecution of this line, the work may be completed in perhaps twelve months, or a little longer. If so, the amount of money now asked to be appropriated will be more than will be required for that purpose.

It is important that this money should be appropriated now; for by the terms of the treaty it has been agreed that the commissioners to be appointed by the respective Governments of the United States and Mexico shall meet within three months after the exchange of the ratifications of the treaty in the town of El Paso, on the borders of New Mexico, and there enter upon the discharge of their duties. I am informed that these ratifications have been exchanged on the first of July. I shall not detain the committee with any further remarks.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, but to suggest an amendment to it, or to move one. I propose to insert, after the word "pay," in that amendment, in the line before the last, the words "including emoluments." The amendment will then read—

"his pay, including emoluments, shall be increased to the same amount."

Mr. PHELPS. I have no objection to the proposed amendment. I will modify my amendment as suggested.

Mr. JONES. It will be right to do so. It gives the civil officer who may be appointed the amount of pay and emoluments.

Mr. PHELPS, (interrupting.) I agree to the modification. It was the intention to have had the amendment drawn up in that form.

Mr. JONES. I proposed the amendment because in the Army pay is a technical word, and does not include emoluments.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LATHAM. I offer the following amendment:

For building an appraiser's store in the city of San Francisco, California, $75,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

I would not have troubled the House by offering this amendment, but that the matter had been intrusted by the Secretary of the Treasury to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE,] who is upon the Committee of Ways and Means, but who is detained from the House to-day by sickness, and that I feared that the bill might be finished this afternoon, and thus the opportunity be lost for that gentleman to offer it. A recommendation has been made for this appropriation, by the Secretary of the Treasury, in a letter which I hold in my hand, and which I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Suffice it for me to say, that the Government is now paying a rent of $1,800 per month, or $21,600 per annum, for a store which is too small for the business of the appraiser's office.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know if this is an original proposition or not? I wish to know whether this is a matter provided for by law? If not, the amendment is not in order.

Mr. LATHAM. I will state that the House has already appropriated $150,000 to buy the custom-house lot in San Francisco. This appraiser's office is to be placed upon that lot. The letter of the Secretary will show how the matter stands better than anything I can say, and I therefore ask that it may be read.

The letter was read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 4, 1851.
SIR: I have the honor to inclose, for the consideration of the House of Representatives, a copy of a letter addressed to this department by R. J. Hammond, collector at San Francisco, and Samuel J. Bridge, general appraiser for California, the two being also acting commissioners of public buildings.

These gentlemen represent the insufficiency of size of the rented building now occupied as an appraiser's store, and the large rent paid; and recommend the construction of a building one hundred and twenty feet by forty five feet ten inches, on the lot (being part of the public reserves) on which the new custom house has been commenced, by which the business of the port will be accommodated, and the cost of the building be saved in less than four years.

I respectfully recommend that the sum of seventy-five thousand dollars ($75,000) be appropriated for the proposed building, to be expended under the direction of this Department, with a proviso that the said appropriation is not to take effect until the State of California shall release title in said land to the United States.

Permit me also to suggest the great advantage of the appropriation (if proper in the judgment of the House) being made at once, for the reasons stated by Messrs. Hammond and Bridge. I am, very respectfully,

JAMES GUTHRIE,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. LINN BOYD, Speaker House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule upon the subject, the Chair thinks, is positive, and must control. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not in order. The rule provides that no amendment shall be in order to a general appropriation bill for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government.

This being a new appropriation, the Chair is constrained to rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move to strike out the nine hundred and twenty-ninth, nine hundred and thirtieth, and nine hundred and thirty-first lines, and insert the following, which refers to the same subject:

For compensation of twenty laborers in the public grounds and President's garden, at forty dollars per month each, $10,560: Provided, Fifteen of said men shall be employed in the grounds about the Capitol, and such public reservations and streets as are under the supervision of the public gardener, and the other five at the grounds around the President's Mansion.

I do not wish to detain the committee. I have a letter from the public gardener, and also one from the Commissioner of Public Buildings, but I will not take up the time of the committee by having them read.

Mr. LETCHER. I hope the letters will be read.

Mr. TAYLOR. Very well; I certainly have no objection.

The letters were read, as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS,
CAPITOL, May 26, 1854.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a letter from Mr. James

Maheer, the public gardener, to me, asking for additional assistance in the performance of the duties incident to his office, and setting forth his reasons therefor.

Mr. Maheer is the only public gardener known to the law, and was formerly charged with the oversight, under the Commissioner of Public Buildings, of all the horticultural improvements under the General Government, in Washington; and he was allowed by law sixteen men and two horses and carts to carry on these improvements. Within the past year, by direction of the Secretary of the Interior, the grounds around the Presidential Mansion were placed under the especial direction of a person designated by way of distinguishing him from the "public gardener," the "President's gardener." On assuming the duties of this office, I found Mr. John Watt (one of the sixteen laborers authorized by law) in charge of the kitchen garden and green house at the President's; and when the Secretary directed the division of the grounds, having ascertained that Mr. Watt was the most competent person to take charge of the grounds around the President's Mansion, I appointed him to that duty, he still receiving only the pay of a laborer. This involved the necessity of dividing the force under Mr. Maheer. Nine of the men were left under him, and the other six were placed under Mr. Watt.

The committee will perceive that while Mr. Maheer had control of the sixteen men, he could, when occasion required, detail the entire force for any emergency. Now, he cannot; and when his work presses, he is materially short-handed; and I think his request, that he may be allowed six more men, is but reasonable, and ought to be granted.

Mr. Maheer has been long in the public service as gardener. He has been faithful, and has taken a deep interest and great pride in forming and beautifying the public grounds. Since the grounds have been divided, he has not suffered that interest to lag, but, if possible, has been more energetic and watchful than before, and the committee have but to examine to see in what admirable order all the grounds now under him are kept.

To enable him to continue them in this order, to take proper care of the large number of trees under his charge, and to do properly the labor incident to his position he asks the addition of six men and two horses and carts.

I respectfully recommend that the committee take his request into favorable consideration.

I am, with high respect, your obedient servant,
B. B. FRENCH,
Commissioner of Public Buildings.
Hon. BURTON CRAIG, Chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, House of Representatives, United States.

WASHINGTON, May 25, 1854.

DEAR SIR: Agreeable to your request, I give you the outlines of what is necessary and required. I am doing the best I can with the labor of nine hands, to keep the Capitol grounds and all your avenues, trees and boxes, including breakage of boxes by runaway horses and carriages, storms, &c. Also, from East Capitol street to Georgetown; from Carroll's bridge to the railroad depot; from Pennsylvania avenue, Fourteenth street to the Island; from Pennsylvania avenue, Twelfth street to the Island; from Pennsylvania avenue, Seventh street to the Island; from Pennsylvania avenue, Four and a half street to the Island; two reservations near the canal, and all around the Capitol square. All those trees were planted by James Maheer, public gardener. There was one thousand of them planted within six months. They require attention. I am doing the best I can with the few hands I have got, but it is out of my power to do justice to the Capitol grounds and trees with the number of hands at present employed, having at least ten miles double rows of trees and boxes, on avenues and streets to attend to, besides the Capitol grounds. It would require at least the labor of fifteen hands to do it justice; also two horses and carts. Very respectfully &c.,

JAMES MAHEER, Public Gardener.
B. B. FRENCH, Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is not necessary that I should say anything in addition. I will only remark that this amendment is recommended by the Commissioner on Public Buildings and Grounds, and seems to be necessary.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. We pay these men now forty dollars per month, instead of thirty dollars, as that communication states.

Mr. TAYLOR. It does not propose to increase the pay of these men at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. It increases the number of laborers to twenty-two. It adds six to the sixteen now employed. I believe that sixteen are too many.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PHELPS. I move the following amendment:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to replace the moneys already paid for rents and to pay the semi-annual payment of rent falling due on the 1st day of January, 1855, on the two leases, each bearing date 19th day of August, 1853; one thereof with the Bank of the city of New York, and the other thereof from the Bank of Commerce, both being for property on Wall street, in the city of New York, leased for the uses of the assay office in the city of New York, $68,458 33.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that that amendment may be considered as coming in under the head of miscellaneous items. It merely proposes an appropriation of money for the rent of buildings in the use of the Government, and is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury by communication received from him to-day.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I offer the following amendment to the amendment:

Provided, That each and all persons who have been, or who may be, appointed hereafter to disburse money which is now, or may hereafter be, appropriated for the building or repair of any of the edifices or structures for which appropriations are made in this act, and are not now required by law to give bond and security, shall give bond with good security in sufficient penalty, to be approved of by the head of the Department under which said disbursement may be made, or the President of the United States when the work shall be specifically under his direction.

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman has misunderstood the amendment which I have submitted. It is merely to appropriate money necessary to pay the rent of buildings occupied in New York city by the Government as an assay office.

Mr. STANTON. Is it not for buildings to be erected?

Mr. PHELPS. No, sir; the buildings are already erected. They were leased by the Secretary of the Treasury for the uses of an assay office, with the privilege of purchasing them. They have been fitted up, and this money is to pay the rent.

Mr. STANTON. Is not the Government erecting or repairing buildings there for an assay office?

Mr. PHELPS. The buildings are already erected. The Government has had them fitted up and repaired.

Mr. STANTON. If the Chair decides the amendment out of order I have nothing to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not germane. The amendment moved by the gentleman from Missouri is not for the erection of buildings, but for the payment of rent.

Mr. HAVEN. If the $500,000 appropriation be made, all this but $30,000 will lapse and go back into the Treasury.

The question was taken; and Mr. PHELPS's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENN. I move to insert the following proviso after the provision for the payment of the Auxiliary Guard of Washington:

Provided, That the captain and members of the Auxiliary Guard shall be appointed by the President of the United States, and shall be subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by him.

After the following paragraph of the bill:

For compensation of Auxiliary Guard, fuel, and oil for lamps, $1,000.

I have only to say if we appropriate money in order to sustain this guard, we should have control over them, and they should be directed to take charge of public instead of private property. The amendment simply provides that the President shall appoint the guard, and we appropriate the money to pay their salaries.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. It seems to me that we are departing for a very small thing from the ordinary rules for protecting the property of this city. For the last eight or ten years the appointment of this Auxiliary Guard has been allowed to the city of Washington. I do not think we ought to require the President to appoint its members; but I think the Mayor and Common Council are the proper persons to make these appointments, because they will be acquainted personally with the men who are to compose this guard. It is imposing upon the President a duty which I think ought not to be laid upon him—

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish simply to say that this guard is authorized by act of Congress, and that the Constitution requires the appointment of all inferior officers to be vested in the President—

Mr. TAYLOR. Who has appointed the members of this guard heretofore?

Mr. JONES. I believe the Mayor has appointed them.

Mr. TAYLOR. He was a Democratic Mayor.

Mr. JONES. The Constitution requires the appointment of inferior officers to be vested in the President alone, or in the heads of Departments.

The question being upon Mr. HENN's amendment,

Mr. SAGE demanded tellers; which were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the section providing for the purchase of trees:

For cutting down and removing from the public grounds, avenues, and streets in Washington city, under the control of Congress, all the alnus trees, $500.

The clause in the bill to which I offer this as an amendment provides an appropriation for purchasing trees to be planted upon the public grounds. I think every gentleman who was here during the two or three weeks that that tree was in bloom will be satisfied of the necessity and importance of ridding the city of it; and the amendment I have offered provides an appropriation of $500 for that purpose.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I propose the following amendment, to come in after line nine hundred and sixty-four:

For the Capitol extension, $750,000.

That is the estimate of the Department.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I offer the following as an amendment to that amendment:

Provided, That every and all persons who have been, or may be appointed hereafter to disburse the money which is now, or may be hereafter appropriated for the building or repairs of any of the edifices or structures for which appropriations are made in this act, and who are not now required by law to give bond and security, shall give bond and security, with good sureties in sufficient penalty, to be approved of by the head of the Department under which such distribution is to be made, or by the President of the United States, when the work shall be specifically under his direction.

A very large portion of the persons into whose hands the money we are now appropriating for buildings and other structures, will go for disbursement, are performing that duty without giving any bond or security to the Government for its faithful application. We require bond from all civil officers entrusted with public funds, and there is no reason why it should not be required from all others. If a poor widow receives the office of postmistress, where the revenues scarcely exceed ten dollars per year, she is required to give bond, because the law demands it. Immense amounts of money, in some cases over a million of dollars, are disbursed by officers of the Army in civil service, and not one cent of security is required. The reason these officers are exempt from giving bond, is simply because no law compels it. I propose now to change the practice, and require them to be bound by the same obligations which are imposed upon civilians.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. My own opinion in that matter is, that the whole system of taking security from public officers is wrong in principle. What right have we to require two or three men to become responsible for a person to disburse money for the Government, in which work they have no more interest than the twenty-five millions of people of the country? It is the Government that requires the services to be performed; and the Government—that is, the whole people of the country—are better able, if they make a bad selection of officers, to bear the loss, than one or two or three men are. It is wrong for the Government to require security from anybody. They select the officer, and give him his appointment; and if they appoint an improper person, who fails to act fairly, let the whole country be his security.

The question was taken; and Mr. STANTON's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question then recurring on Mr. HOUSTON's amendment, as amended; it was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I offer the following amendment, under the instruction of the Committee of Ways and Means:

For compensation of one watchman, to be employed at the building lying south of the Capitol, used as public stables and carpenter shop, $500.

The reason for this amendment is, that there have been recently attempts made to fire these stables, by which two or three horses have been seriously injured, and, therefore, it is proposed to employ a watchman there.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I offer the following, under the instructions of the Committee on the Public Buildings and Grounds:

For fuel for the President's house, $1,000.

For a furnace keeper at the President's house, at one dollar per day, $365.

For inclosing with an iron fence the circle at the intersection of Pennsylvania avenue with New Hampshire avenue and K and Twenty-third streets, and improving said inclosure, $10,000.

For iron railing and flagging in front of the old portion of the Patent Office building, $5,730.

For taking up, relaying, and for repairing old foot pavements, and making new ones around the public squares, buildings, and reservations, $10,000.

For altering the streets, repairing, &c., in front of the eastern wing of the Patent Office building, putting up iron railing, flagging footways, putting in order yards, and painting new saloon of Patent Office in fresco, $14,250.

For painting and repairs inside of the Capitol, new furnaces under the Senate Chamber, and Supreme Court room, &c., $5,000.

For permanent repair of the roof of the Capitol with copper, where it was temporarily repaired with tin, after the burning of the library of Congress, $2,000.

For completing the improvement of Pennsylvania avenue west of Seventeenth street west, $9,000.

I have a letter from the Commissioner of Public Buildings, in which he says that all these items have received the sanction of the Secretary of the Interior. I will have it read, if the committee wish to hear it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose these appropriations are, in almost every case, wrong. The Committee of Ways and Means have examined these items. Two or three items, I think, make provision for iron flagging for relaying the Patent Office. From the reading of the amendment, I think the gentleman has copied his amendment from the estimates of the Commissioner of Public Buildings. This is all wrong. There is no such thing as iron flagging contemplated.

Mr. TAYLOR. The item to which the gentleman alludes is for iron railing.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is for iron railing and flagging. I believe the gentleman has copied his amendment from the letter of the Commissioner; but I hope that letter will be read.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let the letter be read.

Mr. SEWARD. I object.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have waived my right to speak, in order to have the letter read. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. I really hope the gentleman from Georgia will withdraw his objection.

Mr. SEWARD. I do not. I do not want these officers of the Government to come here and make speeches before this House.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to strike out the first item in the amendment.

Now let us have the letter read in my five minutes; but first, I want to say that my object in having these letters read is, that they may go upon the record. I want to know who is responsible for these recommendations.

Mr. SEWARD. I desire also to state my objection to the reading of these letters. They are from the heads of the Departments or Bureaus, and designed to dictate what this legislative body shall do. It is a means by which they come here into this House and make speeches. I withdraw my objection.

The letter was then read, as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONER PUB. BUILDINGS, CAPITOL U. S., CITY OF WASHINGTON, June 14, 1854.

I most respectfully call the attention of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to the following facts:

Among the estimates submitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior are the following, which have not been inserted in the general appropriation bill by the Committee of Ways and Means. I know not for what reason they were omitted, and can only say that many of them are usual, and that they are all necessary for the public service, viz:

For fuel for the President's house, $1,000.

For a furnace keeper at the President's house, $365.

For inclosing with an iron fence the circle at the intersection of Pennsylvania avenue with New Hampshire avenue, and K and Twenty-third streets, and improving the same, $10,000.

For iron railing and flagging in front of the old portion of the Patent Office building, &c., $5,730.

For taking up, repairing, and relaying old foot pavements, and making new ones around the public buildings, and reservations, $10,000.

For paving the sidewalk in front of the President's house, $1,500.

For altering the streets, repairing, &c., in front of the eastern wing of the Patent Office building, putting up iron railing, flagging footway, putting in order yards, painting new saloon of Patent Office in fresco, &c., $14,250.

For painting and repairs inside of the Capitol, new furnaces under the Senate Chamber and Supreme Court room, &c., $5,000.

(Most of this work has been done.)

For permanent repair with copper of the roof of the Capitol where it was temporarily repaired with tin, after the burning of the library, $2,000.

For completing the improvement of Pennsylvania avenue west of Seventeenth street west, $9,000.

I had the honor to submit directly to the House of Representatives, on the 30th day of January last, sundry estimates of appropriations for public buildings, streets, grounds, &c., which are printed and contained in miscellaneous document of the House of Representatives, No. 11.

Some of those estimates I regard of very great importance to the United States, and hope that the committee will think proper to recommend them to the House for adoption.

I respectfully specify the following, viz:

For watchman and messenger inside of the President's House, ($500 each,) $1,000.

For removing fences, &c., preparatory to extension of Capital square, $15,000.

For additional lighting consequent on the increase of light on Pennsylvania avenue, and to keep the lamps lighted through the night, (in addition to regular appropriation,) $13,000.

For grading and graveling Delaware avenue, &c., $4,080.

The general appropriation bill, lines nine hundred and twenty-nine, nine hundred and thirty, and nine hundred and thirty-one contain the appropriation for the sixteen men.

Should the committee comply with Mr. Maher's request, an amendment to read as follows, in lieu of it, would be proper:

"For compensation to twenty-two laborers in the public grounds and President's garden, at $40 per month each, $10,500 00: Provided, That fifteen of said men shall be employed in the grounds about the Capitol, and such public reservations and streets as are under the supervision of the public gardener, and the other six at the grounds around the Presidential Mansion."

For inclosing Franklin square, &c., $18,550.

For inclosing and improving two triangular spaces on Pennsylvania avenue, &c., $9,000.

For extending the culvert across Tiber creek from Pennsylvania avenue to the north side of B street north, $28,600.

(I regard this as one of the most important improvements in this city, so far as regards health and comfort.)

To pay two men in charge of the green-house at the President's, one to be foreman, $1,080.

Although I believe most of the estimates, and perhaps all, submitted by me as important, those above referred to are particularly so—some of them so much so that the public service will suffer if they are not made.

I am, with great respect, the committee's obedient servant,

B. B. FRENCH,

Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Before the reading was finished,

Mr. LETCHER said: That will do. This is but a recapitulation of the amendment itself. I want to know the reason for making these appropriations. Here is an appropriation for a furnace keeper for the President's House. Now, the furnaces at the President's House have not heretofore been without a keeper. Who has attended to them?

Mr. TAYLOR. The letter of the Commissioner of Public Buildings will probably show, if the gentleman will allow the reading to be finished.

Mr. LETCHER. No, sir; I see how it is. The gentleman from Ohio has merely copied the letter of the Commissioner in his amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR. The estimates for which the amendment provides are contained in the letter.

Mr. LETCHER. But that is not what I want to know. I want the reason. Who takes care of the President's furnaces now?

Mr. TAYLOR. I can only state to the gentleman that the Committee on the Public Buildings and Grounds received this communication from the Commissioner of the Public Buildings and Grounds, and I suppose he has charge of them.

Mr. LETCHER. That is exactly my idea about it. The Committee on the Public Buildings and Grounds received this communication from the Commissioner of the Public Buildings and Grounds, and then, without making any inquiry into the matter, they come here, present the amendment, and say that because he is the Commissioner, appointed by the President, this House must swallow whatever he chooses to offer. Sir, I do not belong to any such squad, which recognizes the right of any official in this Government to come here and require me to swallow a dose, unless he can assign a good reason for it before he does require it.

Now, when this Committee on the Public Buildings and Grounds come here, they ought to be ready to explain the necessity for this matter. We ought not to have been asked to take it on trust, merely because an officer of the Government says so. Why, sir, it looks as if persons who wanted office were rather more numerous than the offices themselves; hence this proposition to create the new office of furnace-keeper under the President's House.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is a matter of perfect indifference to me whether any of these appropriations are made or not. The gentleman's economy seems to grow larger and more strict while there is a Democratic President in the White House. I have no objection to it. I take it for granted that a committee of this House is not required to run all over the public buildings and grounds; and that if they inquire, officially, what is wanted for keeping up and repairing the public buildings and grounds, they have done their full duty. I understand that the House of Representatives will, on official statement, vote the usual appropriation. I do not understand that there is anything unusual in the items of appropriation I have submitted for the adoption of the committee.

The gentleman from Alabama states that the Commissioner of the Public Buildings and Grounds asks for iron flagging for the walk in front of the Patent Office. He has asked for no such thing; neither have the Committee on the Public Building and Grounds recommended it. We recommended what the Commissioner of the Public Buildings and Grounds, in an official letter to the committee, said the Secretary of the Interior recommended; and I state to the gentleman from Virginia, that his own Secretary has recommended these things. The Committee on the Public Buildings and Grounds were liberally disposed to grant them.

It is a matter of perfect indifference to me whether one dollar be appropriated or not; but acting as a member of the House, and considering the recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior as proper ones, not unusual, I, for one, consented to these amendments. I desired to appropriate liberally for the public buildings and grounds of this city. It is said by the Commissioner that the amendments were presented to the Committee of Ways and Means, but were rejected; why, I know not. Did the gentlemen of that committee go and examine these buildings and grounds in person? If they did, they lessened, in my opinion, their respectability very much. I am sure that I would not go in person to these places and examine whether every dollar and cent was required. If these things are communicated officially by the Commissioner of the Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Secretary of the Interior, as necessary, I do not think that I, as one of the members of the Committee on the Public Buildings and Grounds can be upbraided for submitting them to the consideration of this body by the instructions of that committee. Not at all. I do not offer these amendments in my individual capacity as a Representative from the State of Ohio. I offer them by instruction of the Committee on the Public Buildings and Grounds; and I am unwilling to be reproached for asking the usual appropriations to keep the public buildings and grounds in order.

If this House reject these appropriations, be it so. I do not care whether you appropriate a dollar to keep the President's House in order or not; but I believe, as a Representative of the people, that we ought to make the necessary and reasonable appropriations to keep up the public property. You should make Washington city creditable to the nation, and not niggardly inquire into the wood burned at the President's; whether we will take care of the trees planted on your avenues and in the grounds, or whether we will allow the public gardener six additional hands when his duty is doubled. I do not inquire into such economy as that; and if I were chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, I would not undertake to say that the public gardener did not require additional assistance. For one, I have discharged my duty. I have offered the amendments as I was instructed by the committee of which I am a member, and it rests with the House whether they are adopted or not.

The question was then taken upon the amendment to the amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to strike out all except the last clause of the amendment. I do so in order that I may say that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] is one of the last men I would undertake to reproach, either here or elsewhere, as I entertain for him the highest personal respect. But it does seem to me, however, that some of the doctrines laid down by that gentleman are the most extraordinary that I have ever heard broached. The gentleman says it is enough for him to know that a Secretary recommends an appropriation to authorize him to vote for it. Where, then, is the necessity for this House, or any other legislative body, if everything that the Secretary of the Interior or Secretary of the Treasury or any other Government official proposes, is to be received as entirely right and proper? If the House and the Senate are to indorse all propositions because they come from Government officials, then, sir, they are certainly very useless bodies. I hold that when the Secretary of the Interior makes a recommendation, that he stands before this House exactly as any individual stands who comes here with a private claim: I maintain that the Committee on Public Buildings, the Committee of Claims, the Committee on the Judiciary, and, indeed, all other committees, are organized with a view to protect this House, by a careful examination of the matters that may be submitted to them, so that they may be enabled to state, when these questions come up for consideration, whether they are right or wrong. I, as a Representative of the people, do not acknowledge the right of any Secretary under this Administration, as I did not admit the right of any Secretary under the last Administration, to tell me that here is a recommendation, and because I have made it, you have no right to cavil about it. If this doctrine is to be carried out, representative responsibility and representative independence, will be soon destroyed. The recommendations of Government officers should be subjected to the same examination to which propositions of other individuals are subjected that come before this House for appropriations. Do they occupy a higher ground than individual claimants who come here? They occupy a higher official station, to be sure, but they are entitled to no greater consideration than individual claimants who come here with claims that they believe to be just. Committees are organized to investigate these cases; and, by investigation, to satisfy the House that they are right. I take it, if these propositions were all important, and it was necessary that an appropriation should be made to carry them out, that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds would be enabled to furnish the House with satisfactory reasons in favor of each and every item. In addition to that, if they were reasonable and necessary, I take it that the Committee of Ways and Means, the official organ of this House, so far, at least, as its expenditures are concerned, would have been furnished such light upon this subject as would show that these appropriations were required by the public interests to be made. Instead of that, the Committee of Ways and Means have not been furnished with information which would authorize them to say that the appropriation is necessary. All we have to justify our action is what the Commissioner of Public Buildings has said to the Secretary of the Interior, and what the Secretary, relying upon the Commissioner's recommendation, has proposed for adoption by this House.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. When the Committee of Ways and Means offer a proposition to purchase trees, and plants and to make hot-beds, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] makes no objection. He makes no inquiry as to the propriety of granting the appropriation, but takes it for granted that that committee has done its duty, as I have no doubt it has. They then go on and make appropriations of $22,000 for lighting the President's House, and keeping the public grounds in repair, &c. To this the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] takes no exception. But the very moment that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds thinks proper to offer, through me—in the absence of the chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CRAIG], detained from his seat by sickness—an amendment, he comes in and takes exception. Now, it is not an amendment which we have not examined, as the gentleman supposes; for we have got the best information in our power in relation to it. And what is that information? Why, we requested a gentleman connected with the public service, whom we supposed to be the best acquainted with the matter, to give us all the information he possessed in regard to it. This we got; and I venture to say there is not a committee in this House better informed on any subject reported by it.

The gentleman does not surely pretend to say that the Committee of Ways and Means have gone and inquired the price of painting the Capitol, or of lighting it. They have not gone into the market themselves to prosecute such inquiries. But they merely get the estimates from the proper sources, and act on them. I take it for granted, therefore, that the gentleman does not require the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to ask what is to be paid for buying paint for the President's House, or for what amount it can be lighted; but simply to act on the estimates.

Mr. LETCHER. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, for a moment only.

Mr. LETCHER. What I wish to say to the gentleman from Ohio is simply this: that I take it, when a committee comes here and indorses demands on the public Treasury, such committee has means of knowing whether the demand ought to be complied with.

Mr. CHASTAIN. I rise to a point of order. I do not think that the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR,] or the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] have any right to cavil over this amendment, and speak both of them two or three times on it, as they have done. I do not think that they have a right to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is constrained to overrule the point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CHASTAIN. Very well, I have to yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. As I said, Mr. Chairman, in the beginning of my remarks, I regret that this amendment was not offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CRAIG,] who happened to be sick at the time that I was instructed to offer it. I have done my duty in respect to these matters. I have got all the information about them that I could; and I believe that it would promote the public service to adopt the amendment. Having said thus much, I leave it entirely to the committee.

Mr. MACE. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. LETCHER. To save the trouble of taking two votes, I withdraw my amendment to the amendment, and will let the vote be taken on the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to strike out the first three items in the amendment, merely for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Ohio, if I understood him to say that there is nothing unusual in that amendment? Now, Mr. Chairman, it is the first time, I believe, that there has been an appropriation made to furnish fuel for the President's House; and this is a commencement of that expense. It is the first time, too, for us to furnish a furnace keeper for the President's House. These are new items.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not aware of any reason why we should not furnish fuel for the President's House as well as for the Capitol. In my opinion the President's House ought to be kept comfortable for the reception of the people whenever they go to see the Executive there. We ought therefore to make appropriations for fuel there as well as here. Indeed, I would go for making the House more comfortable and more extensive than it is.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. My experience in legislation is, that there has never been a wrong or an outrage committed upon the people through the Legislature, but it has been committed in the name of the people.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, sir, and this is recommended by your own Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. JONES. I acknowledge no recommendation of a Secretary, except such as I think advances the good of the country. I disown all Secretaries, except so far as their recommendations tend to that object.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I desire to say that the necessity for these two appropriations grows out of the fact that, at the last session of Congress, we made an appropriation of $25,000 for the purpose of remodeling the interior of the President's House. The furnaces, which did not exist before, were then put into the House, and until that appropriation was made there was no necessity for a furnace keeper, and no necessity for the fuel now asked for. We have built the furnaces and put them there, but we have no power to compel the President to use them, and if the people who go there want the House warm, we ought to supply the fuel. The furnaces never existed before, and consequently no appropriation of this kind has before been asked for.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, by unanimous consent, then withdrew his amendment.

The question was then taken upon Mr. TAYLOR's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I offer another amendment, as I am instructed to do by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The appropriations are recommended by the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, in the letter which has already been read.

The amendment was reported, as follows:

For a watchman and messenger inside of the President's House, at $500 per annum each, $1,000.

For removing fences, &c., preparatory to the extension of the Capitol Square, incident to erection of the new wings, $15,000.

For additional lighting consequent on the increase of light on Pennsylvania avenue, and where the streets in the vicinity of the Capitol are blocked up with building material, and to keep the lamps lighted through the night, (in addition to the regular appropriation,) $13,000.

For grading and graveling Delaware avenue, &c., $4,080.

For inclosing Franklin Square with an iron fence, and improving said square, $16,550.

For inclosing and improving two triangular spaces on Pennsylvania avenue, $9,000.

For extending the culvert across Tiber creek from Pennsylvania avenue to the north side of B street north, $28,608.

To pay two men in charge of the green house at the President's, one to be foreman, $1,080.

Provided, That when said Delaware avenue is opened and graded as far as M street north, the direction thereof shall be so changed, that said avenue may run parallel with Second street east, to Boundary street, so that said Second street and said avenue may form one street of the width of one hundred and sixty feet, between squares seven hundred and forty seven, and seven hundred and ten, and seven hundred and eleven, as laid down on the plan of the city of Washington. This being upon condition, that the owner or owners of any private property through which said streets are hereby changed, may pass, shall release the United States from all damage that may be sustained by them in consequence of the contemplated change.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I raise a question of order upon that amendment. There is, at least, one item in it, of $28,000 for extending the culvert across Tiber Creek, from Pennsylvania avenue to the north side of B street north, which takes it across private property, I think.

There is another item for removing fences, preparatory to extending the Capitol grounds, incident to the erection of the new wings.

There is no law authorizing either of these works, and therefore these items of the amendment are not in order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will not detain the committee by any remarks, but will ask to have the latter part of the letter of the Commissioner of Public Buildings read, which I sent to the Clerk's desk half an hour ago.

The letter was read as inserted above.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the item alluded to by the gentleman from Tennessee, for extending the culvert across Tiber creek, if it be true that it be private property, would not be in order. The Chair desires to know whether it be true that it is private property?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know if the Commissioner states in his letter whether it is or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that the amendment might be in order if the gentleman would modify it by striking out that item.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will so modify it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his question of order, and that the committee will vote the whole amendment down. It involves too much, it seems to me, to allow it to pass.

Mr. JONES. I will withdraw my question of order.

The question was then taken; and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I offer the following amendment:

For payment of the Annals of Congress for the House Library of the House of Representatives, under resolution of said House, of September 28, 1850, one hundred sets of each volume, from the twenty third to the fortieth, both included, in all one thousand seven hundred volumes, at $5 per volume, $8,500.

For payment of the Annals of Congress for one hundred and forty three members of the Thirty-Second Congress, entitled to them under the resolution of the House of Representatives of July 26, 1852, one hundred and forty three sets, of twenty four volumes each, from the sixteenth to the fortieth, inclusive, in all three thousand four hundred and thirty two volumes, at $5 per volume, $17,160.

For reporting and publishing in the Daily Globe two thousand eight hundred and sixty-five columns of the proceedings of the House of Representatives, for the first session of the Thirty-Third Congress, at $7.50 per column, $21,487.50.

For twenty-four copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the first session of the Thirty-Third Congress, for each member and Delegate of the House of Representatives, making an aggregate of five thousand seven hundred and twelve, at $6 a copy, $34,416.

For binding the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the first session of the Thirty-Third Congress, $13,766.40.

For reporting and publishing in the Daily Globe one hundred and fifty-one columns of the proceedings of the House of Representatives for the second session of the Thirty-Second Congress, at $7.50 a column, $1,132.50.

To pay a deficiency in the appropriation for eight hundred copies of the Documentary History, purchased for the new members of the House of Representatives, from the Twenty-Sixth to the Thirty-Second Congress, inclusive, being at $17.27 and two mills a volume, $655.20.

For payment of a balance due for the second and third volumes of the fifth series of the Documentary History under contract with the Secretary of State, $173.

For one hundred copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the first session of the Thirty-Third Congress for House library, $600, and for binding the same, $240.

For one hundred copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for the second session of the Thirty-Third Congress, for House library, $300, and for binding the same, $120.

The amendment is offered in pursuance of the instruction of the Committee of Ways and Means. It is authorized by resolutions heretofore adopted by this House.

Mr. HAVEN. I offer the following amendment to the gentleman's amendment. Though an unusual thing for me, I move an amendment authorizing the appropriation of $3,000 to enable Mr. Rives to pay the reporters of this House for the Globe the same additional compensation that they received at the last session. They are here all the time that we are, and, besides, work at night. With the addition proposed, their salaries will average $1,500 per annum.

Mr. JONES. I would prefer if the gentleman would withhold his amendment, and introduce it as an independent proposition.

Mr. HAVEN. Would it be in order as a separate amendment?

Mr. JONES. It would be as much in order then as now.

[Cries of "Let the amendment be read!"]

Mr. HAVEN. I offer the amendment, and it is for an increase which ought to be paid to these gentlemen.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

To enable John C. Rives to pay to the reporters of the House, for the Congressional Globe, the same amount of additional compensation for reporting this session as was paid them at the last, the sum of $3,000 is hereby appropriated; and the Clerk of this House is hereby authorized to pay the same to said Rives, to be applied by him for that purpose.

Mr. JONES. Is the amendment in order? Is there any law authorizing reporters for this body, other than that giving Mr. Rives $7.50 per column for reporting the proceedings of the House? These gentlemen are not salaried officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has some doubt about the amendment. The action of the House, at the last session, is favorable to the amendment.

Mr. JONES. The increase of the last session was by separate resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The recollection of the Chair is that it was provided for by an amendment to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order under the precedent, and under the precedent alone.

The amendment to the amendment was adopted.

Mr. JONES's amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. FULLER. I offer the following amendment:

For the erection of a suitable building for custom-house, court-room, and post office at Portland, Maine, in conformity with the plan and estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the site where the old one was burned, $300,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is that amendment in order? The part of the bill relating to custom-houses, and which is distinct of itself, has been passed long since. Can the committee go back now?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that to entertain the amendment would be substantially to recur to a practice never allowed by the committee.

Mr. FULLER. This amendment does not relate to anything that we have passed. It is a proper amendment, because it does not originate a new work; but it relates to a work for which appropriations have been made heretofore. I am not aware of any rule by which the committee are precluded from considering this amendment, or that they are bound to consider subjects of a kindred character precisely in the same connection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment is not in order, because, in the first place, the committee have passed over that part of the bill making appropriations for custom-houses. The practice has been uniform here not to allow a recurrence to what has already been passed, except by the unanimous consent of the committee. As to the point suggested by the gentleman from Maine, that it is an amendment relating to an old work for which an appropriation is now proposed to be made, it might have been in order under the head of "Miscellaneous."

Mr. FULLER. Can I offer it as an additional section?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that it would not be in order.

Mr. FULLER. Taking a different view of this question, I shall be compelled to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I move that the committee rise and report the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order while an amendment is pending. The gentleman from Maine proposes an amendment, which was read in the hearing of the committee. The Chair rules that the amendment is not in order, upon the ground that it relates to a portion of the bill that has already been passed. The question now is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I would inquire whether there has been any appropriation made for the building of this custom-house since it was burned? If there has been none, it is certainly an amendment which cannot be authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is obliged to the gentleman from Tennessee for the suggestion he has made, and considers that another reason why the amendment is not in order.

The question was taken upon the appeal; and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill:

Provided, That, on the fourth day of March next, the clerks in the several Departments of the Government shall be, as nearly as practicable, equally apportioned among the several congressional districts; and that thereafter all appointments of clerks in the said Departments shall be made as nearly equally as practicable from the said congressional districts: And provided further, That each of the heads of the Departments aforesaid shall keep a register, in which shall be entered the names of all the clerks in their respective Departments, with the name of the State and the number of the congressional district from which each clerk has been appointed; and which register shall be deemed a public record, and open to the inspection of all persons interested.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I rise to a point of order. I submit that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. DAVIS. I submit to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. HAVEN. I now offer the following as an additional section of the bill from the Committee of Ways and Means:

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1853, entitled "An act to provide compensation to such persons as may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury to receive and keep the public money, under the fifteenth section of the act of 6th August, 1846, for the additional services required under that act," be extended to the collectors on the northern, northwestern and northeastern lakes and rivers; which compensation will remain as fixed by the fourth section of the act approved March 2, 1851, chapter 9, if the said collectors have been or shall be, designated depositaries; it having been decided by the accounting officers of the Treasury, that said collectors, having fixed salaries, not changed by emoluments, were paid their maximum allowed by law, although much less than the maximum allowed to other collectors, and that, therefore, this could not be allowed them legally."

Mr. SEWARD. I rise to a question of order. I submit that that amendment is not in order, for two reasons: First, that it is not germane to the main question, and, secondly, that it is not intelligible.

Mr. HAVEN. I notice that there were certain moneys ($14,000) appropriated for the purpose two years ago, and I thus propose to make distribution of these moneys so appropriated by law.

Mr. SEWARD. It has no connection with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It is offered as an independent section.

Mr. SEWARD. But upon the very same principle the Chair ruled out an amendment regulating the pay of clerks. This is a provision about the pay of collectors. It is virtually a provision to increase their salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the proposition of the gentleman from New York is not in order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Not yet. I have another amendment to propose from the Committee of Ways and Means. It is as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That hereafter the Warden of the penitentiary of the United States for the District of Columbia, and the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds shall make to the Secretary of the Interior annually, in time to accompany the annual message of the President to Congress, report of their operations for the preceding year, and of the manner in which all appropriations have been applied respectively. And that all estimates of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds shall hereafter be approved and submitted by the Secretary of the Interior annually, through the Treasury Department, as other estimates, to the two Houses of Congress. And further, that all appropriations which are herein made, or may be hereafter made, for repairs or improvement of the public buildings, grounds, and streets, within the District of Columbia, and now under the charge of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and that all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this section, shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The office of the Commissioner of Public Buildings is now a bureau of the Interior Department. This section is to require that officer to submit his estimates through the Department of the Interior, and also to be subject to the Secretary of the Interior in his disbursements in this city. The section is recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means, and by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBBINS. I move that the committee do now rise, and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government, for the year ending June 30, 1855, and had instructed him to report the same back, with sundry amendments.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here a message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed a bill of the following title, in which it asked the concurrence of the House:

S. No. 432. An act to vest in the several States and Territories, the title in fee of the lands which have been or may be certified to them.

And also, that it had passed a bill of the House of the following title, without amendment:

H. R. No. 315. An act to establish the offices of surveyor general of New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska, to grant donations to actual settlers therein; and for other purposes.

FREE NAVIGATION OF THE AMAZON.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I have a resolution to offer, asking for information.

The resolution was read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to this House, if not incompatible with the public interests, copies of all correspondence between either of the State Department or our Minister and the South American Governments with reference to the free navigation of the Amazon."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to the introduction of that resolution, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

The House thereupon (at four o'clock, p. m.) adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 6, 1854.

CONNECTICUT ON THE NEBRASKA BILL.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I present to the Senate a series of resolutions which have been passed by the Legislature of Connecticut. I ask that they may be read, laid upon the table, and printed.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Whereas, in obedience to the spirit of the Constitution of the United States, the early policy of the Government was to discourage, restrict, and repress slavery, and whereas the National Government has been swerved from its original course on this subject, and whereas, the compromise of 1820, by which slavery was prohibited in all the territory then held by the United States, north of 36° 30', has been repealed by act of Congress, and whereas, it is proper, in view of this calamitous and unexpected event, that the State of Connecticut should proclaim her principles, and the line of policy she proposes to pursue, in relation to the subject of slavery, now therefore,

Resolved by this Assembly, in the name and in behalf of the people of this State, that we still cherish the great principles of the Constitution, and based upon these principles, the Union of these United States.

Resolved, That the Federal Constitution, ordained to form a more perfect union, to establish justice, and to secure the blessings of liberty, expressly denies to the General Government the power to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, and that the Government, having no more power to establish slavery than to establish a monarchy, should at once proceed to relieve itself from all responsibility for the existence of slavery, wherever it possesses constitutional power to legislate for its extinction.

Resolved, That this General Assembly, in view of the fact that the compromises heretofore made on the subject of slavery, by act of Congress, have virtually been repudiated and deprived of their moral force and authority, by the repeal of the act preparatory to the admission of Missouri, approved March 6, 1820, do declare their determination to return to the original policy of the Government, founded upon the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this General Assembly, the people of Connecticut demand the repeal of that part of the bill for the organization of the government of Kansas and Nebraska, which declares the Missouri compromise inoperative and void, and will persevere in this demand until the restriction of slavery contained in the act of 1820, shall be restored to full force and effect.

Resolved, That the Hon. ISAAC TOUCEY, a Senator of the State of Connecticut, in the Congress of the United States, having, by his vote on the final passage of the bill for the organization of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, disobeyed the solemn and deliberate instructions of the Legislature, and disregarded the wishes, the interests, and the principles of the people of this State, deserves to be, and hereby is, censured by this General Assembly.

Resolved, That the thanks of the General Assembly are hereby tendered to such of our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States, as have opposed, by all legal and constitutional means, and to the last extremity, the passage of the act by which the Missouri compromise has been repealed.

Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives be requested, to introduce into the Congress of the United States, and vote in favor of, such an amendment of the law commonly known as the fugitive slave law, as shall secure to every person claimed under said law, the right of trial by jury in the State where such person may be arrested and held to bail.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States, to be by them laid before that body.

Mr. TOUCEY. A majority of the members of the present General Assembly of Connecticut have united in a resolution, professing to censure me for the vote I gave upon the final passage of the bill organizing the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska. They had previously assumed the right of directing my vote on that measure, in opposition to my constitutional opinions—of making me a mere passive instrument in their hands, without the right to think or to act upon that subject—and of kindly relieving me from the performance of this part of the duty which the sovereign people of the State, through a former Legislature, had imposed upon me as one of their representatives in the Senate of the United States. Knowing that I had formed a deliberate opinion that the Missouri restriction line was unauthorized by the Constitution, was in direct conflict with its provisions, with the equality of the States and with the right of self-government—that I had already, in conformity with this opinion, upon the first passage of the bill in the Senate, voted to obliterate that unconstitutional line, and to leave it to the people to govern themselves, to pass their own laws, and to regulate their own domestic affairs, and that so large and decisive was the majority in the Senate in favor of the measure, that my single vote could not, by any possibility, change the result; yet the majority in the Legislature had undertaken, notwithstanding these facts, to instruct me to reverse my action, and to obey them rather than my own convictions of duty, under the Constitution, which I had sworn to support. And now the members of the General Assembly composing this majority have stepped aside from their appropriate duties, have overleaped the bounds assigned them by the constitution of the State, and in my absence, have passed upon me what they intend to be a vote of censure for disobeying them instead of disobeying the Constitution of the United States. I know the patriotism and justice of the people to whom I am responsible for the faithful discharge of a public duty, often arduous and difficult, and to whom they are responsible for an unauthorized assumption and abuse of power, and I am not troubled in this matter.

Entertaining still the opinion that the Missouri restriction line was without any foundation in the Constitution; that there is no authority to be found in that instrument for drawing a line across the common territory of the United States, and permitting the citizens of the fifteen slaveholding States to have access to it with their slave property, on one side of the line, and prohibiting their access to it on the other; that the only power conferred upon Congress over the subject of slavery within the limits of the United States is the express power of prohibiting the foreign slave trade, and the express provision for delivering up fugitives from labor or service; that under the grants of power to make all laws necessary and proper to carry into execution the granted powers, and to make needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States, Congress has no pretense for setting up a claim that any law of Congress is necessary, prohibiting the removal of slaves into a Territory where the people have a Legislature of their own, with power to legislate, subject to the Constitution, and have, moreover, the ultimate power of finally disposing of the whole subject; that Congress has no power to add to the number of slaves in the country, unless by opening the foreign slave trade, which, by universal consent, is interdicted, and will never again be opened, and no power to diminish their numbers, unless by inflicting distress and disaster upon them, which could never be vindicated; that while Congress has no power to enslave, and no power to liberate, the entire power of liberation is left exclusively with the people of the separate communities, where it originally belonged, where it is wisely left, and where it will be most safely and beneficially exercised; that all political agitation on this subject, outside of those communities where slavery exists, with a view to act upon them, to coerce them, to control them, or to accelerate their movements, is only evil to the African population, and tends only to remove to an immeasurable distance all hopes of the amelioration of their condition and their final emancipation; and that this subject is the only one which threatens the separation of these States and the overthrow of the Government—it was impossible for me, entertaining these opinions, to vote against the Kansas and Nebraska bill, or to concur in the views of the majority of the General Assembly, or to cooperate with them in legislative warfare against the Constitution and government of the country.

I differ in toto from the united political parties which compose the present ruling majority in the General Assembly of Connecticut. I have never had any political association with either of them, but have been always opposed to both. I belong to the school of strict construction of the powers of the Federal Government, in favor of the rights of the States. I am a strenuous advocate of the right, the capacity, and the power of the people to manage their own affairs, when organized with a Legislature of their own, and as strenuously opposed to any external interference, from whatever quarter it may come. I have the most entire confidence in the people of every community within the limits of the United States, as the best and safest judges of every social evil that may exist among them, and of the time, manner, and measure of redress, and the most entire conviction of the policy and wisdom of leaving the subject exclusively with them. I am hostile to the power of any one community to domineer over another community. I should be opposed to a community composed of the best men on earth, if it were possible to ascertain such individuals, exercising irresponsible power over another community, unless by becoming part and parcel of it. I am entirely opposed to the agitation of the slavery question at the North, where it has no subject to operate upon, as fraught with evils of the greatest magnitude, not only to the class proposed to be benefited, and to the people among whom they dwell, but as leading inevitably, unless arrested, to the subversion of the Government of the country. These have long been my cherished opinions, openly avowed, well known to the people whom I represent; and for entertaining them, and for the purpose of carrying them into execution, more than for any other cause, I am now entitled to a seat in this body.

This coalescing majority have already clearly and decisively manifested the principles by which they are governed, and the policy they intend to pursue. They have appointed in the place of my late colleague two honorable gentlemen, of whom I would speak only in terms of the highest respect and consideration, yet belonging to two political organizations heretofore adverse and hostile, but now acting in friendly concert, the one strictly local and sectional, the other formerly embracing a patriotic portion of the South, from which, I think, it is now severed. They have proposed, by the concurrent action of both Houses, an amendment of the State constitution, by which the word "white" would be stricken out from the qualification of electors, as they had an undoubted right to do, although not long before it had been voted down by an overwhelming majority of the people. They have declared by a joint resolution of both Houses, in opposition to the constitutional action of Congress, their "fixed purpose never to consent" "to the admission of slaveholding States from any portion" of the territory to which the Missouri restriction originally applied; thus assailing the Constitution of the United States on a vital point—the equality of the States. They have, by the concurrent action of both branches, passed an act in the form of a law—

"That every person who shall falsely and maliciously claim, declare, represent, or pretend, in presence of any judge, commissioner, marshal, or other officer of the United States, that any person is a slave, or owes service or labor to any person or persons, with intent to procure, or to aid or assist in procuring, the forcible removal of such other person, shall pay a fine of $5,000, and be imprisoned five years in the Connecticut State prison," and "that every claim, declaration, pretense, or representation, that any person being or having been in the State, is or was a slave, or owes or did owe service to any other person or persons, shall be deemed, in all cases arising under this act, to be prima facie false and malicious; and the truth of any such claim, declaration, pretense, or representation shall not be deemed proved except by the testimony of at least two credible witnesses, testifying to facts directly tending to establish the truth of such claim, declaration, pretense, or representation, or by testimony equivalent thereto."

To say nothing of the bill which passed the Senate of the State, prohibiting the use of court-houses and jails for the purposes of the fugitive law, or of the bill which also passed the Senate incapacitating any United States commissioner, marshal, or deputy marshal, to hold any office of trust or emolument under the State, both of which fell in the House under the assaults of the Democratic members, they have, by the act which I have recited, if it be of any validity, nullified the act of Congress commonly called the fugitive slave law. They have made it prima facie a penitentiary offense, punishable by a fine of $5,000, and by five years imprisonment at hard labor in a State prison, to assert a claim under this law of Congress. They have intruded into the very presence of the judge of the United States, their commissioners, marshals, and other officers, while in the performance of their imperative duties, and attempted to arrest their official action by denouncing fine and imprisonment upon the citizen who shall dare to invoke their aid in the mode pointed out by this act of Congress. They have thus set at defiance the Executive, legislative, and judicial departments of the Federal Government, and trampled under foot the Constitution of the country. And this is the combined political majority, who have undertaken, without the least shadow of authority, to set in judgment upon me, and to censure me for upholding that Constitution, and concurring in an admitted constitutional enactment, which is based upon the equality of the States and the principle of popular sovereignty, has received the sanction of both Houses of Congress and of the President, and is now the supreme law of the land. If I may be allowed to say it without too great disrespect to those who have participated in sending me these resolutions, I accept the vote of censure as the highest eulogy which that majority could pass upon me, and for the truth of my assertion, I appeal to the judgment of the people whom I represent, and to the unerring judgment of the country.

The time has come, I think, when the issue must be met on this great principle of the EQUALITY OF THE STATES UNDER THE CONSTITUTION, which lies at the very foundation of the Federal Government. Without such perfect equality of political right among the members of this political copartnership of States, it were vain to suppose that this Union can long continue to exist. With it, the Union may be perpetual. Now is the time to meet this issue. After the recent outpouring of the popular heart in the recent general election, no more favorable juncture could arise for the solution of this momentous question. It is forced upon us, and it must be met. The untiring efforts, long persevered in, to direct northern sentiment against the existing arrangements of the Constitution, have at last, I fear, been crowned with a degree of success which may well excite alarm, unless the people will rescue the country from the danger which threatens it. The great Whig party of the North seems to have become thoroughly abolitionized, and to have given the signal which will expel thousands of patriotic union-loving citizens from its ranks. Separating from the Whigs of the South, uniting with the Abolitionists of the North, they have begun in earnest a warfare upon the equal rights of the States, which, unless arrested, will sever this country in twain, and sacrifice it to the lust of political power. But the people will again rally. The Democracy of the North, as often heretofore, will again rally with whatsoever there is of patriotism in the country, and will again unfurl the FLAG OF THE UNION as it is, and as it was intended to be by the men of the Revolution, bearing upon it in letters of living light, "THE EQUALITY OF THE STATES," "THE EQUAL RIGHTS OF EVERY PORTION OF THE CONFEDERACY," and will perish before it shall be humbled.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President: I feel deeply embarrassed in appearing before the Senate in a position of unavoidable antagonism to my honorable colleague; but under a sense of duty to the State, which I have the honor in part to represent, I must ask the indulgence of the Senate, a few moments, while I notice some of the remarks which have fallen from his lips on this occasion. As antipodal as are our respective positions on the Great Question of the age and country, I trust that, for the honor of our common State and the dignity of the Senate, we may always be on terms of kindly intercourse. I do not intend, on account of any contrariety of opinions, to become unmindful of the courtesies and proprieties which appropriately belong to senatorial no less than to civilized life.

I do not rise, sir, with any wish or intention of invalidating anything that my honorable colleague has offered, any further than he has implicated others in his defense. So far from it, I am willing, nay, desirous, that he should have the full benefit of all he can say, legitimately, in extenuation of his course. I have no heart to aggravate, by any word or deed of mine, the embarrassments of his position; and had he conducted his defense without assailing the honor of our common State, which, it seems to me, we are alike interested to preserve and defend, I should have been silent.

But, sir, I feel that the character of the State of Connecticut is deeply involved, and I should be false to my convictions of duty and derelict to that good old Commonwealth, if I should sit mute and passive when her honor is assailed—that State which stood second only to Massachusetts in the revolutionary struggle—that State whose history is radiant with so many illustrious names, and which has been a human hive, sending forth swarms of her adventurous and cultivated children, to lay the social foundations of new regions, and mold their institutions by education, virtue, and freedom—that State, of which the great historian, Bancroft, a citizen of Massachusetts, has said:

"There is no State in the Union, and I know not any in the world, in whose early history, if I were a citizen, I could find more of which to be proud, and less that I should wish to blot."

That State, sir, to which the late Mr. Calhoun, in a speech delivered on this floor, in February, 1847, said, with a magnanimity worthy of his great name:

"It is owing mainly to the States of Connecticut and New Jersey, that we have a Federal instead of a National Government—the best Government instead of the worst and most intolerable on earth. Who are the men of these States to whom we are indebted for this excellent form of Government? I will name them—their names ought to be written on brass, and live forever. They were Chief Justice Ellsworth and Roger Sherman, of Connecticut, and Judge Patterson, of New Jersey. The other States further south were blind; they did not see the future. But to the coolness and sagacity of these three men, aided by a few others not so prominent, do we owe the present Constitution."

You will excuse me then, sir, for indulging a little State pride, and feeling somewhat sensitive when the honor of that State is assailed.

I shall detain the Senate but a few moments. I shall not enter into abstract questions, or indulge in pettifogging subtleties; but shall only attempt to disabuse the character of the State, of the aspersions which have been cast upon it, that it may shine forth in its native effulgence.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

NEW SERIES...No. 102.

It may not be unprofitable, in the first place, to inquire what is the cause of the disagreement between my honorable colleague and the State which we represent. Why has this unhappy difference, to use no stronger term, arisen between a sovereign State and one of its Representatives on this floor? It is one of the bitter fruits of the latest great peace measure which was to settle all agitation for all time in this country. It had its origin in the overthrow of the Missouri compromise. This is the pestilential box out of which it sprang. I will state the facts as briefly as possible in relation to this matter.

The proposition to violate the public faith by the abrogation of that compromise, thus breaking down the last barrier against slavery to all the Territories of the United States, and leaving them wide open to its dark inundations—Territories which had been declared forever free by what was considered at the time, to be a solemn and irrevocable compact—startled the good people of Connecticut from their slumbers, and rallied them to the polls at their late State election in April, and the ballot boxes rang out their indignant "No." This was the great issue in that election, and never was there a political revolution in any State more complete and signal. It was attended with no storm of popular excitement. It was conducted with remarkable moderation and calmness. Hardly a leaf trembled in the breeze. It was the natural, spontaneous uprising of the people to avert a great impending calamity, and save themselves and their country from its disastrous consequences. Outside of the pale of the governmental officials there was hardly a voice of dissent. The result, sir, was what we should naturally expect. Both branches of the Legislature were overwhelmingly opposed to the odious measure. Soon after convening, early in the month of May, the subject was brought up, and resolutions presented declaring it to be violative of the public faith, destructive of mutual confidence, subversive of the fundamental principles of natural justice, and threatening the stability of this Government; and they instructed their Senators, and earnestly requested their Representatives, to oppose it by all honorable means, and to the last extremity. These resolutions passed the House by a vote of nearly three to one, and in the Senate with only a single negative.

Now, I submit to the consideration of honorable Senators, whether there was ever a fairer, fuller, more explicit and authoritative expression of the popular sentiment of any State, any where, at any time, on any question? The Legislature expressed the sentiments of the people of Connecticut on that momentous question. There was hardly a discordant note from any quarter of the State. These resolutions were duly forwarded to Congress. The dreaded Bill soon came from the House with an amendment for the final action of the Senate, and what did my honorable colleague? It is known to the Senate and the country. On the memorable night of the final vote, a few moments before the question was put, he arose in his seat, with characteristic deliberation, and informed the Senate that he was under instructions to vote against the bill, but he had determined to disobey the instructions of an Abolition Whig Legislature, and vote for the bill. A beautiful exposition of the doctrine of "popular sovereignty," by one of its distinguished advocates! Hardly had the last word for popular sovereignty in Kansas and Nebraska died away upon his lips before he arises in this Senate Chamber, scolds the popular sovereignty of his own State as an Abolition Whig sovereignty; and assumes autocratic sovereignty in opposition and defiance of the popular sovereignty.

This, Mr. President, is a simple and unvarnished statement of the case. Never was there a fuller, fairer, more explicit, and authoritative expression of the popular will, and I leave it for others to say whether there ever was a more audacious and contemptuous violation of public sentiment.

Inasmuch as the good old Democratic doctrine of the obligation of the representative to obey the will of his constituents, has been dishonored, I have nothing to say. I leave the honorable Senator with Jefferson and his constituents.

But my honorable colleague has seen fit to take sanctuary in certain other acts of the Legislature, some of which he gravely says they did pass, and some of which he also says they did not pass; thus arraiging the Legislature of Connecticut before the Senate, not only for sins of commission, but also for sins of omission. Now, sir, I am unable to see the pertinency of these matters to the question before us—how the enactment or non-enactment of good or bad laws by the sovereign authority of a State, can justify its representative in disobeying positive instructions, to vote against a bad law here in the Senate, unless it has come to pass in these latter times that, contrary to Scripture, the servant is greater than his master. I am yet to learn whether the Legislature of Connecticut is guilty of wrong-doing for enacting such laws as it in its wisdom thought best.

The honorable gentleman has commented upon some acts which the Legislature did not enact, and upon some which they did, among which he gave particular prominence to an "Act for the defense of liberty." This, in his judgment, conflicts with the Fugitive Act, for the safety of which he is alarmed. Now, sir, I would not do the injustice to my honorable colleague to compare myself with him in legal science; but I have given some attention to the law to which he has taken exception, since I saw it heralded through the country as "nullification," and I have not been able to discover anything in it that needs to excite the apprehensions of the most vigilant sentinels of the Fugitive Act. I have consulted several eminent civilians in relation to it, all of whom have assured me that it conflicts with no law of the United States. And I think I can safely challenge those who assert to the contrary to produce the proof.

But, without detaining the Senate on this point, I would here raise the question, whether, under the Constitution of the United States, Connecticut has not as much right to enact laws for the protection of the rights of her people, as South Carolina has to enact laws for the destruction of the rights of her people? Whether freedom may not be protected under the Constitution as well as slavery? Cannot Connecticut be indulged a little with the privilege of protecting the rights and liberties of her own people upon her own soil, when a part of them, at least, have no protection, except such as is furnished by prison-walls in certain other States of this Union? Oh! Mr. President, has it come to this, that we of the North are all centralized, absorbed, melted down, swallowed up, consolidated into this great, central, usurping Government, and the northern States are mere appendages, shorn and rayless satellites, to revolve around this all-absorbing center, in borrowed light? God forbid! To this momentous question Connecticut, I rejoice to say, true to her ancient fame, as the vigilant champion of State rights, and mindful of her grand historic eminence as a defender of liberty, answers, No. I feel somewhat as the great friend of America and liberty felt, when giving voice to these words in the British Parliament in 1776:

"I rejoice that America has resisted. Three millions of people so dead to all the feelings of liberty as voluntarily to submit to slavery, would have been fit instruments to make slaves of the rest."

So I do rejoice that in the great conflict between Democracy and Despotism, now begun in good earnest, Connecticut has been so prompt to take her position on the side of freedom, and to call upon us to restore this Government to the old foundations on which her Ellsworth and Sherman were so active in establishing it, and separate it from slavery at once and forever. She has done with all compromises with the perfidious violators and haughty contemners of the public faith, and now says, return to the early policy of this Government, that of discouraging, restricting, and discountenancing slavery everywhere under its jurisdiction. She calls upon us to discard the vile and contemptible dogma that the Constitution of the United States is a shield of slavery, or any-wise countenances that most cruel and terrific despotism that has ever crushed humanity—a despotism which denies the natural right of a man to his own body; of a husband to his own wife; of a father to his own child; which sells husband, wife, and child, separate or together, in the market-places; which asserts chattel-slavery to be a Divine and Democratic institution, and avows its base purpose indefinitely to extend and forever to perpetuate the terrific curse!

I thank God, sir, Connecticut is washing her hands from this blood, and calls upon us, in her old voice of freedom, to cleanse this Government from its guilty participation in the diabolical work of enslaving and imbrating man. She invokes us to disabuse the Constitution of the miserable dogmas which slaveholders have foisted into it, to serve their own nefarious purposes, and restore to it the original construction in which its illustrious framers conceived and established it—not so much as admitting into it, according to Madison, Sherman, and others, the blasphemous "idea that man can hold property in man." She invokes us to return to the original policy of this Government, as inaugurated by Jefferson, and interdict slavery on every rod of territory under its jurisdiction. She would have us see to it, that this Government, President, Judges, Congress and all, be speedily rescued from the foul embraces of the great Southern Syren, raised up from its low debauchment, to virtue and freedom, vitalized anew by the inspiring breath of liberty, and replaced on the old foundations upon which the great fathers established and left it, there to be resolutely and actively on the side of freedom.

It is meet and proper that the State of Ellsworth and Sherman, who would not admit slavery into the Constitution on any terms, the State of Putnam and Hale, who fought heroically for freedom, should speak out clearly at such a crisis, and call upon us to tear off from this Government the accursed vampire of slavery.

My honorable colleague has undertaken, for the second or third time, to prove the Missouri compromise line unconstitutional. I will not tax the patience of the Senate with any reply, further than to offset the opinion of President Monroe, together with those of all his unrivaled Cabinet, Calhoun, Crawford, Wirt, and John Q. Adams, against the argument and opinion of my honorable colleague.

I have the happiness to agree with my colleague in the principle of popular sovereignty, only we chance to have opposite views in carrying it out. He favored the Nebraska-Kansas Bill for one great reason that I opposed it. He regarded it as promotive of the principle of popular sovereignty, whereas I considered it, in all its details and tendencies, as subversive the antagonistic principle of slaveholding sovereignty; and every day's development, since its passage, has been confirming the correctness of this view.

He has also animadverted on the Fugitive Act, and he is welcome to his opinions upon that subject. I do not intend ever to be drawn into a discussion of that measure. It might have an awkward tendency toward pacification. No, Mr. President, I am not the man to discuss the Fugitive Act. I will not do it. I can never cast so great an indignity upon the Constitution of my country as to admit, by the remotest implication, the possibility that it could kennel such a Cerberian monster. Tell me not of the constitutionality of an act which, by one bound, vaults over all the bulwarks of liberty in all the States of this Union, and strikes down, at one blow, the writ of Habeas Corpus, and the right of Trial by Jury; which commits the great question of personal liberty, not to a judicial trial, but to a summary process, before a magistrate, appointed, not by the President with the concurrence of the Senate, but by the Court; which forbids the exercise of Christian charity toward the poor and perishing, under severe penalties; which seeks to degrade man below the beasts which perish, by accounting him and his precious rights of too little value to be entitled to a jury trial, less than twenty dollars, which holds out the bribe of a double fee to the petty commissioner for dooming a human being to slavery; which, in short, overthrows all the safeguards of human rights, and leaves man an easy prey to be despoiled and captured by the pirate, the kidnapper, and the slave-hunter. It was conceived in sin, shapen in iniquity, and baptized in blood. It has no rival in its savage brutality—nothing in the code of any civilized nation to compare with it, but towers alone in its detestable preeminence of atrocious, unmitigated villainy. I will never affront the Constitution of my country so much as to hold up this frightful Gorgon before it, and ask the question—Is it constitutional? Rather will I assist to drive it back howling to its native hell, if it would not be too terrible an infliction on the damned. Tell me that my constitutional oath imposes an obligation upon me to obey this infernal act—I spurn the deed—I scorn the behest—I defy the authority. As if our free fathers intended their children should act the slave-hunter and the bloodhound for the slaveholder; as if they bequeathed to us such an inheritance of crime, brutality, and shame.

The Constitution which I swore to observe and maintain was ordained "to establish justice and secure the blessings of liberty;" and in accordance therewith, expressly declares that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." By this I stand; by this I will be judged.

I know that Connecticut, in the olden time, was libeled by a Tory renegade, who absconded to England to perpetrate his vindictive falsehood, as the Blue Law State; but, by the blessing of God, the numerous progeny which he left behind him, shall never fasten upon her the damning infamy of the Black Law State.

Do you accuse me of using strong language? I am fresh from the people, and have a right to use strong language in their sovereign name, to whom I hold myself amenable.

In conclusion, Mr. President, allow me to say that I feel a just and loyal pride swelling my bosom, as I contemplate the position of the good old Commonwealth which I have the honor, in part, to represent; she has begun a good work, and will go on unto perfection. It gives me joy to think her dark days of servility and shame are over, and she has entered upon a new career of freedom and glory. But if, from any unforeseen misfortune, she should ever fall back again into the hands of the servile Philistines—the slavemongering Democracy—which Infinite Mercy avert!—I will not follow the example of my honorable colleague, and take advantage of her misfortunes, to insult and expose her "before all Israel and the sun;" but I will love her still, like a true son, for what she was in the palmy days of her beauty and pride; I will cherish and defend her to the last; I will "Walk backward with averted gaze,

And hide her shame."

Mr. TOUCEY. Mr. President, I rise only for the purpose of saying that it cannot be necessary in this body, or before the country, to reply to the remarks which have been made by my colleague. On the contrary, if he will not take it unkindly, I will thank him for furnishing an illustration of the necessity of my having taken the position which I occupy.

Mr. WELLER. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BADGER in the chair.) The question is on the motion to print the resolutions of the Legislature of Connecticut.

The motion was agreed to.

POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS.

Mr. PETTIT. On the 31 of April last, the Senate, by a resolution which I introduced, called upon the President for information as to the performance of the stipulations of a treaty with the Pottawatomie Indians made on the 26th of October, 1832. The Secretary of the Interior has reported, furnishing the information which, I believe, was called for. I move, therefore, that the report of the Secretary be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. WELLER. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill which was postponed yesterday, providing for the construction of a line of telegraph from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the first bill on the list of special orders.

Mr. BROWN. Has the morning hour expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I can hardly inform the Senator whether it has or not.

Mr. BROWN. It is one o'clock, and that is the hour to which the insane bill was postponed. I hope that bill will be taken up and disposed of.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall finish the insane bill to-day.

Mr. BROWN. If we take up the bill which the Senator from California proposes to take up, it is beyond all question that we shall not get to the insane bill to-day, and we shall have to fix another hour to take the vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first bill on the orders of the day is the one referred to by the Senator from California. Do I understand the Senator from Mississippi as moving to pass by this bill for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the bill granting lands for the indigent insane?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WELLER. I do not understand the object of my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to take up the insane bill which has been vetoed by the President, and have a vote upon it, as the hour fixed for its consideration has arrived.

Mr. WELLER. Then I have no objection to the motion of the Senator to postpone this bill until to-morrow.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senator to withdraw the motion for a minute, and I will then renew it. I wish to offer a few amendments.

Mr. BROWN. Very well, sir.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to amend the substitute in the first section, lines seven and eight, by striking out the words: "and under the jurisdiction of," so as to make the bill conform to what the rest of it is. It was originally drawn to apply to unorganized territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move next to insert in line twelve, page four, of the printed substitute, the words, "in the Territories," so that it shall be absolutely certain that the lands granted shall be taken in the Territories.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. The next amendment is on the last page of the printed bill, line ten, to strike out the word "unorganized." It was put in because it was supposed the bill would apply to unorganized territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I now move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until half past twelve o'clock to-morrow, and to make it the special order for that hour.

Mr. CASS. I hope, before that order is made, it will be distinctly understood that at one o'clock to-morrow the homestead bill is to be taken up.

Mr. CHASE. Before this motion is agreed to, I wish to understand whether it is understood that this bill, which I desire to see taken up and disposed of, will be acted on before one o'clock to-morrow, or in the event that it shall not be disposed of at that time, it will be laid aside, so that the homestead bill can be taken up.

Mr. SLIDELL. When, to-morrow?

Mr. CHASE. Yes, sir, to-morrow.

Mr. SLIDELL. To-morrow is private bill day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on postponing this bill until half past twelve o'clock to-morrow; but the Chair advises Senators that to-morrow is private bill day, and it cannot then be considered but by unanimous consent.

Mr. BROWN. That being the case, I move to postpone it until Monday, so as to get it out of the way of private bills. It cannot suffer by a day or two day's delay.

The motion to postpone till Monday was agreed to.

INDIGENT INSANE BILL VETO.

The Senate resumed the reconsideration of the bill making a grant of public lands to the several States of the Union for the benefit of the indigent insane persons, which had been returned by the President of the United States with his objections.

Mr. WILLIAMS addressed the Senate in support of the Veto message, and also in vindication of his position on the Kansas and Nebraska bill. [His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I have already, some time ago, expressed, very fully, and at large, my views upon this bill, in connection with the objections taken by the President in his message. I do not propose, as indeed it would be unpardonable for me, to occupy the Senate by any further discussion, in addition to what I have heretofore submitted on the particular matters embraced in the general question; but as several members of the Senate have done me the honor to refer in their speeches to propositions which I laid down, and particularly the honorable Senator from Michigan [Mr. Cass] has paid no small attention, in his very ingenious and able speech upon this subject, to my views expressed in the Senate upon it, I feel that it is due to myself, and due to the subject, to say a few words in vindication of the position which I have assumed in relation to the power of this Government over the public lands.

I took occasion to say that the power conferred upon Congress "to dispose of" the public lands and other property of the United States, being a power granted without any express limitation, being in its very nature an exclusive power, which could never have been possessed by the States, and could not be divided between this Government and the States, must necessarily be an absolute and unlimited power, except so far as the Constitution itself had withdrawn certain subjects from the powers of this Government. For the purpose of illustrating and enforcing the view which I took upon that subject, I cited, from the posthumous work of the late illustrious Senator from South Carolina, Mr. Calhoun, the view which he takes of the nature of the treaty-making power conferred upon this Government, where, upon precisely the same grounds, he considers that power as liable only to certain necessarily implied limitations, which he proceeds, with great clearness and accuracy, to specify. I deduced from this view of Mr. Calhoun's, just and statesmanlike as it is, that the power conferred upon Congress over the public lands, being in every respect whatever like the power conferred on the President, with the assent of the Senate, to make treaties, being an exclusive power conferred in general terms, subject to no particular limitations expressed, and, in its nature, one that could not be reserved to the States, it follows, therefore, that this power was subject to no restrictions, except those which belonged of necessity and by implication to the treaty-making power itself.

The honorable Senator from Michigan seemed to consider that neither the original remarks which I cited from Mr. Calhoun, nor the application which I made of them to the case in hand, was entitled to very considerable value or respect. With regard to the original remarks of Mr. Calhoun, I think, upon examination, they will commend themselves to every Senator, and to the honorable Senator from Michigan himself, as furnishing the result of a very profound and statesmanlike mind applied to the exposition of the great instrument which originated and maintains our Government. With regard to my application of them, that is a question before the Senate. No man has yet shown, no man can show, that the two cases do not stand, as we lawyers say, on all fours; and that, if the rule applied by Mr. Calhoun as a just mode of interpreting the granted power to make treaties, be a correct one, it governs the question as to the interpretation to be put upon the power "to dispose of" the public lands.

Nor does it concern me, sir, to inquire why Mr. Calhoun did not follow out to the disposition of the public lands the rule which he had so clearly laid down in regard to the treaty-making power, and what motives or influences might have perverted his judgment in not seeing the direct, the clear, the unmistakable analogy between the two cases. That was his affair. I had his rule clear, distinct, applicable, beyond the possibility of any successful contestation, to the question of power which is now under the consideration of the Senate; and his failure to carry out and apply it does not deprive the rule of its value, nor does it prevent its just application to those subjects to which it ought to be applied.

But, Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Michigan has some remarks to which I wish to invite the attention of the Senate, and of the honorable Senator himself in regard to the interpretation of the powers of this General Government. In his printed speech, first quoting the first clause of that article conferring upon Congress its legislative power in these words: "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States," he remarks:

"Now, here is an unlimited power of raising taxes, and still more an unlimited right of applying them, so far as regards the terms of the grant. For the common defense and general welfare, even if considered words of restriction, would practically amount to nothing, as they would leave the utmost latitude of discretion to Congress. But they are not. They merely express the general motives for taxation, and above all, contain no substantial grant of power. For if they did, as is well observed by the President, 'all the rest of the Constitution, consisting of carefully enumerated, and cautiously guarded grants of specific powers, would be useless, if not delusive.'"

And again he remarks:

"The limitation imposed, arising out of the nature of the Constitution, is, that objects connected with the common defense and general welfare, are to be obtained by means of the specific and express grants of power. Without this construction, there would be no limitation to the application of the public money by Congress, but the discretion of that body would be supreme and arbitrary. I have already referred to the clause of the Constitution which recognizes in Congress the power of making appropriations from the Treasury. This power is as general as words can convey, with no limitation whatever. Either, therefore, this pervading principle of construing grants of power by the purposes and provisions of the Constitution, must limit this authority, or it is unlimited, and may be used or abused at the pleasure of the National Legislature, and to the establishment of arbitrary authority upon the ruins of the Constitution. Apply this same rule to the power to dispose of the public property," —that is the public lands and other property.

"Apply this same rule to the power to dispose of the public property, by requiring that it shall be exercised in conformity with the grants of the Constitution, and we carry out the true principle, and furnish safeguards against legislative abuse."

Now, Mr. President, if I understand the view taken here by the honorable Senator, it is that neither the power granted to Congress to lay and collect duties and other taxes, nor the power to dispose of the public lands, is absolutely an unlimited power; that neither of them is subject to the mere limitation; that they shall be applied or used for the purpose of the common defense and general welfare, but that each is limited and restrained by the general principles of the Constitution, and the specific enumerations contained in it. Assuming that to be the case, I ask what is the power of Congress to raise and collect revenues? It is granted in the words specified by the Senator from Michigan, which I have just read. It is to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises—now I will read this as the President in his message says it ought to be read—"in order to pay the debts, and in order to provide for the common defense and general welfare." Is that power subject to any restriction except that Congress shall not raise money but with a view to provide for the common defense and general welfare? The Senator says it is. Then what is the other restriction? Where is it to be found? What part of the Constitution can be read or tortured into putting any restraint or restriction upon it, beside what is implied in these words? Well, sir, there is none. Is there any other power given to Congress?

The Senator speaks of the power granted to Congress to make appropriations out of the Treasury. Now, that does not enlarge the powers of Congress, either in the collection of the revenue or the purposes to which it may be rightfully devoted. As Mr. Calhoun clearly perceived, that provision in the Constitution that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law," is what is called a negative pregnant. It denies any other mode of drawing money from the public Treasury, and thereby necessarily implied that the money may be drawn in that mode; but it adds nothing to, and takes nothing from, the purposes to which Congress may apply the money which has been raised. That power is to be elsewhere determined. This clause provides only the orderly method in which the money in the Treasury may be taken out in order to be applied to the purposes to which Congress has a rightful authority to apply it.

Now, that being the case, and the honorable Senator himself having said that this rule is also to be applied to the power of Congress to dispose of the public lands and property of the United States, let us see how we stand with regard to precedent; and how, if the honorable Senator's views on this occasion are correct, we have been misled by his own high authority upon the subject of the powers of Congress as well over the public money as over the public land. The first session that I had the honor of a seat on this floor, a distinguished, yes, I will say, an illustrious gentleman and friend of mine, Mr. Crittenden, was a member of this body from Kentucky. It was the year succeeding the disastrous failure of crops in Ireland and Scotland; and prompted by the native philanthropy of his mind, he introduced a bill into the Senate, which as it is very brief, I will, with your permission, Mr. President, read. The first section proposed to enact

"That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to cause to be purchased such provisions as he may deem suitable and proper, and to cause the same to be transported and tendered in the name of the people of the United States to that of Great Britain for the relief of the people of Ireland and Scotland suffering from the great calamity of scarcity and famine."

The second section provided:

"That the sum of $500,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry into effect this act."

And the third section provided:

"That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, at his discretion, to employ any of the public ships of the United States for the transportation of the provisions to be purchased as aforesaid."

That bill was ordered to be engrossed in the Senate on the 27th of February, 1847, and bore the title of "A bill to provide some relief for the suffering people of Ireland and Scotland." Now, sir, let us pause for a moment upon the provisions of this bill. First: it was a bill authorizing the President to purchase provisions, and to send those provisions, in the name of the people of the United States, to the people of Great Britain, for the relief of those in Ireland and Scotland who were suffering under the then calamity of scarcity and famine. Secondly: it was a bill proposing to take out of the Treasury $500,000 of the public money, to enable the President to make the purchase, and to ship the provisions. In the third place, it authorized the President to convert the public vessels of the nation from their appropriate business as public armed vessels into transports for the purpose of carrying those provisions across the ocean.

Mr. President, I desire to know under what clause or article of the Constitution, what actual or supposed grant or implication of power to Congress to make dispositions of money from the public Treasury, we acquired, according to the Senator's rule of interpretation, the authority to take a half million of dollars, and send it to feed people who were starving in Ireland and Scotland? Why, the Senator says that the words "for the common defense and general welfare," even supposing them to be a restriction, would amount to nothing, because they would still leave an undefined margin of congressional discretion. Permit me to say, sir, that I think the honorable Senator is mistaken in supposing so, for although I will admit that the words, "for the common defense and general welfare," do not furnish very strict limitations upon the power, yet if they be considered as limitations, I submit to the honorable Senator himself if they do not prohibit this application of the public money. How would the common defense of the United States, how would the general welfare of the United States be advanced or promoted by buying corn and sending it to feed the poor in Ireland and Scotland? Many questions might arise upon the application of money which might bring us to a pause. Generally, difference of opinions might arise. You, Mr. President, might think a particular application of the public money to be for the common defense and general welfare, and I might differ from you. But permit me to ask if there could be any difference of opinion between any two members of this body when they were called upon to say, "will sending money to Ireland and sending money to Scotland, or sending provisions to Ireland or to Scotland, promote the common defense and general welfare of the United States?"

Again, sir, there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States, if there be any limitations at all upon our power in disposing of the money, which makes any distinction between applying our funds to feed the starving in foreign countries, and applying our funds for the benefit of the insane in foreign countries, or the deaf and dumb in foreign countries, or any other class of human beings in foreign countries that may need assistance, or charity, or benevolence—none. No human being can point out, upon the question of power, any reason why, if we can apply the funds in one way, we cannot apply them in any of the others. I will admit, if we once assume the power, upon the expediency of exercising it there may be a great difference between an occasional supply of food to relieve the people of a friendly country, who are suffering under a temporary scarcity, and making a provision for the benefit of the indigent insane, or the deaf or dumb, of that country; but upon the question of power there is no difference.

A second remark I make is this: The Constitution makes no discrimination in our powers between supplying the people of Ireland and Scotland out of our Treasury when they are in want of food, and supplying the people of Russia, of Germany, of France, of Turkey, yes, sir, and of the far East. The Constitution knows no difference. If there is anything said upon it in the Constitution, it has escaped my reading and observation. If, therefore, we have power to make such dispositions for the benefit of suffering people in Ireland and Scotland, we have a right to make similar dispositions for suffering people of foreign countries all over the world.

Mr. President, as I have said, that bill was ordered to be engrossed in the Senate, and after a discussion, but not a very long one—for I do not think we were quite as longitudinal in our debates in 1846-'47 as we are now—but after a discussion, and a discussion upon the constitutional power—this objection being made and insisted upon—the bill was ordered to be engrossed by a vote of 27 yeas to 13 nays. Those who voted in the affirmative were:

"Messrs. Allen, Albion, Berrien, Breese, Calhoun, Cameron, Cass, John M. Clayton, Corwin, Crittenden, Davis, Dayton, Evans, Greene, Hammett, Houston, Huntington, Johnson of Maryland, Johnson of Louisiana, Mangum, Miller, Morehead, Simmons, Soule, Sturgeon, and Webster."

Those who voted in the negative were:

"Messrs. Archer, Badger, Bagby, Butler, Chalmers, Dickinson, Dix, Fairfield, Mason, Niles, Turney, Westcott, and Yulee."

Now, let us pause here. In 1847, on the 27th of February in that year, this bill was ordered to be engrossed in the Senate, on the yeas and nays, by the vote which I have just read.

Now, Mr. President, considering that the distinguished Senator from Michigan, and the late distinguished Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. Calhoun,] the strictest of the strict in his exposition of constitutional powers, voted for that bill, I ask you if those of us here who conceive that this Government may apply something, either of money or lands, for the benefit of their own people, do not stand with a very fair excuse, if not justification. What, sir, have we a government so constructed, and a Constitution so limited and defined, that Congress can collect from the people what moneys it pleases by duties and other taxation, and after they are collected, if the inhabitants of the neighboring city of Alexandria were starving for want of bread, they have not the constitutional power to appropriate one hundred dollars to save them from that calamity? And does the Constitution leave Congress at liberty, if it chooses, to empty the Treasury in applying it to those who are in want of food in other and distant portions of the world? In other words, we should be placed in this position, according to that argument. The Constitution has set out, in its preamble, what were the great purposes for which it was framed: "In order to form a more perfect Union"—where? Not between us and Ireland and Scotland, I suppose, but a more perfect Union here. "Establish justice"—where? At home. "Insure domestic tranquillity"—not in Ireland, surely, but here. "Provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare"—of whom? Of our own people. "And secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity." For these purposes the Constitution was established for the United States of America. The Constitution having declared in the preamble these as being the objects and purposes, and the sole objects and purposes, for which that instrument was established, has yet been made, according to this doctrine, in such a particular and curious method, that whilst we can send millions abroad to help foreigners, we cannot appropriate a dollar to save our own people from starving!

Again, the honorable Senator, in the passage which I have read, supposes the power "to dispose of" the public lands to be subject to the same general restriction? Very well, sir, there is no express restriction upon the power. If it is subject only to these inferential restrictions to which the President refers, and which the honorable Senator from Michigan indorses, then the thing is conclusive to demonstration. Here are two powers, one over the land and the other over the money, both subject to the same and no other restrictions. The money you can dispose of for the benefit of people in foreign lands, and, therefore, you can dispose of the lands for the same purpose; you cannot get clear of that conclusion.

Now, Mr. President, if these conclusions are the result of what are called the principles of strict construction of that instrument, I say beware of them. I do not adopt the principle of strict construction; I do not adopt the principle of a liberal construction; but, so far as I know, I endeavor to plant myself upon the rule of construction which I once heard laid down in the circuit court of North Carolina by that most eminent man and excellent judge, the late John Marshall. A professional friend of mine filed a bill on the equity side of that court. It had been demurred to for want of jurisdiction; and after an argument on the question of jurisdiction, the district judge gave his opinion against the jurisdiction, and concluded by saying that he thought courts of the United States should "lean" against taking jurisdiction. The Chief Justice said in his quiet and emphatic manner:

"In that opinion I do not concur. This court has no leanings; the jurisdiction which the Constitution and the law confer the court is bound to take; the jurisdiction which these do not confer the court has no desire to take. The court expounds the Constitution neither liberally nor strictly, but to the best of its judgment, FAIRLY."

Now, Mr. President, whether I am in error or not, in the views I have taken of the power of Congress to dispose of the public lands, I submit this to you: I am supported by the words of the instrument. I am supported by precedents without number in the legislation of this country. I am supported by the approval of men of the highest eminence and loftiest powers that ever adorned the history of this country—Senators, members of the House of Representatives, heads of Departments, and Presidents of the United States; and I claim that I am supported by the authority of the honorable Senator from Michigan. If I understand his speech, he puts the same limitation upon the power over the money, and none other, as upon the power over the lands; and I have shown by his vote in 1847, upon the bill "to provide some relief for the suffering people of Scotland and Ireland," that he held that we had power to dispose of money from the Treasury to accomplish that object.

Mr. WELLER. Will my friend from North Carolina allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BADGER. Certainly.

Mr. WELLER. I find he is recorded in the negative on that bill; and I desire to know whether that negative vote was given on account of the unconstitutionality of the bill—whether he thought it unconstitutional, and therefore voted against it?

Mr. BADGER. I shall answer that with great cheerfulness. I never thought it necessary to investigate that question at all; for I was satisfied that if we had the power, it was a most inexpedient exercise of it; and I told my friend from Delaware [Mr. CLAYTON] that it was so. He said he would satisfy me on the constitutional power. I said, "Give yourself no trouble on that point, I think it very inexpedient."

I was about saying, sir, when I gave way for the question of the Senator from California, that with regard to the question of the power of Congress over the public lands, and with regard to whether the words "to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," are to be considered in the character of a restriction of the power, or as merely guides to indicate the purposes to which the revenue when raised shall be applied, I have never yet seen the necessity of making up a definite opinion. I took up this subject in former remarks which I made, and I take it up now, assuming the President's exposition as the true one. But, Mr. President, I must say that we are placed in a most extraordinary condition, if it be true that we have power to appropriate money to alleviate the sufferings of the starving inhabitants of foreign lands, and the indigent insane of foreign lands, and yet it is incompetent for Congress to apply a dollar of money, or an acre of land, either to provide for the suffering poor or the indigent insane of our own country! Why, sir, if such a doctrine as that were established by authority, is it not evident that we should subject ourselves to the jeers and scoffs of the whole civilized world? "What," men would say, "here were thirteen Colonies which were separated from the mother country in consequence of the oppression of their rulers; they fought through a bloody war to establish their independence, and soon afterwards finding it necessary to establish a Constitution for the benefit of their own people within their own borders, they gave unlimited power, under the Constitution, to the Legislature, to raise money by duties and taxes on their own people, and to apply it to all the foreigners in the world, but strictly prohibited them from using a dollar of it for the benefit of themselves!"

Will it be said that our forefathers were so beneficent while establishing this Constitution for themselves, that their eye was still bent on foreigners in foreign lands; and in respect to them they left the hands of the Government unfettered to spend what it might choose for their benefit, but tied them up with cords, prohibited any assistance they could afford with reference to any class of our own people whose sufferings might demand their aid? And, Mr. President, see how strangely this rule will operate. Here were certain unfortunate Irishmen who were starving for want of bread at home. According to the views entertained by my friend from Michigan and Mr. Calhoun, we had a right to expend $500,000 in furnishing food for them in Ireland; and yet if some kind friend had furnished them with the means of paying their passage to the United States, and they had landed in Massachusetts, or New York, Congress would instantly have lost all power to help, and must have stood by and seen them starve. The beauty of this system would be to confine our liberality to foreigners, and not only that, but to foreigners in foreign lands. While foreigners are abroad we may help them; but the moment they touch our own shores our power to help is gone. Can this be so, Mr. President? It cannot.

I think, therefore, Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Michigan must either now reverse and renounce the opinion under which he voted for that bill, or he must reverse the proposition which he lays down in his speech, that the Constitution supplies the same safeguard against abuse in this disposition of the public money as in the distribution of the lands. He must do the one or the other, or admit that the power of the Government under this bill is clear and unquestionable. For myself, I have no doubt of it. I do not intend to enter into the question again; but I think that when we hear of a latitudinarian construction of the Constitution, and when the Senator from Michigan acquiesces in the Senate with the consequences which would result from the exercise of the indefinite, unlimited, and arbitrary power of Congress over the public lands for which, he says, I contended, I have a right to ask him how he reconciles with his view of this bill the vote which he gave on the bill for furnishing relief for the sufferers of Ireland and Scotland in February, 1847.

Mr. CASS. I have had a full share in this debate, and the weather is too hot now to make a long speech. I will only say a few words. If the honorable Senator were to establish my inconsistency, that would not weigh anything in favor of this bill. He says that he agrees to the interpretation of the words "in order to," as suggested by Judge Story, and maintained by him "in order to promote the general welfare." How, "to promote the general welfare?" Why, by the provisions of the Constitution, else the powers of this Congress would become illimitable. That is as certain as any fact can be. If you have a right, under the pretense of promoting the general welfare, or under a claim to promote the general welfare, to make any appropriation you please, without reference to constitutional purposes, you are perfectly afloat—a government without a constitution. You must either exercise your power in conformity with the principles and purposes of the Constitution, or you are without any limitation. Therefore, Mr. President, when the Constitution provides that taxes shall be levied to promote the general welfare, it is to promote the general welfare agreeably to the purposes and objects of the Constitution.

Now, with respect to this appropriation to which he alludes. I hold in my hand a similar law, passed in 1812, and signed by Mr. Madison, which was fully discussed, as the honorable Senator knows, some few years ago, appropriating $50,000 for the relief of the distressed inhabitants of Caracas, whose property was destroyed by an earthquake. It was signed by James Madison. I need not say, when I mention his name, that I mention one of the best and most authoritative expounders of our Constitution. I do not pretend to say, that, in a question of foreign intercourse, doubts might be raised upon that subject. They were raised in 1812; though Mr. Madison signed the law. They were raised then. They were raised five or six years. What we may do, as a question of foreign intercourse under the general provisions of the Constitution, I do not undertake to say. There may be great calamities befalling the poor people, that may almost require, or, at any rate, furnish strong motives for the application which they have made; but I repeat to the honorable Senator that he would gain by that step not one tittle. The main point which he relies upon—the power of this Government to make indefinite, unlimited appropriations, under the motives assigned of promoting the general welfare—would leave us without any limitation.

Mr. BADGER. The honorable Senator will allow me to say, that his argument reduces us to this predicament. The money must be appropriated for the general welfare, according to the plan laid down in the Constitution, except where it is necessary for the starving Irish. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLIDELL. Under ordinary circumstances, I would probably have recorded a silent vote to sustain the presidential veto of this bill, but certain joint resolutions of the Legislature of Louisiana, render it necessary that I should give a very brief explanation of the reasons of my voting in the negative on the question of its passage.

The resolutions to which I refer are these:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That our Senators be instructed, and our Representatives requested, to bring in and seek, by all just and honorable means, to secure the passage of a bill granting to the State of Louisiana four townships of land for the education of the deaf and dumb, and three townships for the education of the blind.

Resolved, That Louisiana, asking nothing for the unfortunate within her own borders which she would not freely accord to others, hereby instructs her Senators, and requests her Representatives, to support such just and equitable propositions as may be offered, making similar grants to other States for such laudable purposes.

In terms they do not apply to the bill now before the Senate; but I consider them as fully covering its principle. It would be an unworthy evasion to attempt to discriminate between grants for purposes so closely analogous; and, although I have doubts of its constitutionality, and very decided objections on the ground of expediency, I should, with the opinions I entertain of the right of the Legislature to instruct, and of the correlative duty of Senators to obey, have felt myself bound to sustain it by my vote, if it simply provided for grants of land to the States for the benevolent purposes which it specifies. But the bill goes much further. It establishes not only minute details for the management of the asylums which it is intended to endow, and, by almost necessary implication, gives power to the General Government to enforce a proper application of the fund to be derived from the sale of the lands granted, or of the scrip representing the lands, but it expressly requires annual returns of the amount of scrip sold, names of purchasers, price, &c.

This obligation of periodical accountability is at war with all the views I entertain of the proper relations that should exist between sovereign States and the Federal Government; and I cannot vote for any bill in which provisions so derogatory to the dignity of the States shall be retained. I feel confident that the Legislature of Louisiana would repudiate any grant that sought to impose such an accountability. Should a bill be hereafter introduced free from objections of the character I have stated, and the instructions of the Legislature of Louisiana be not revoked, I shall, in despite of my individual convictions, feel myself bound to vote for it.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the passage, through the Senate, after its reconsideration, of the act making a grant of public lands to the several States of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons. The question is, "Shall the bill pass?" and upon that question the Constitution orders the yeas and nays to be taken.

MR. SEWARD. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. FISH] has been detained in New York; and, if he had been here, he would have voted for the bill.

MR. JOHNSON. Upon this question I have paired off with the honorable Senator from Vermont, [Mr. FORT], he being in favor of the bill.

MR. DIXON stated that his colleague, [Mr. THOMPSON,] if he had been present, would have voted for the bill.

The question being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Brown, Chase, Clayton, Cooper, Dixon, Fessenden, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Hamlin, Jones of Tennessee, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Seward, Stuart, Sumner, and Wade—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Bright, Brodhead, Butler, Cass, Clay, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Pettit, Rusk, Sebastian, Slidell, Toucey, Weller, and Williams—26.

So the bill was not passed.

CORRECTION OF REPORT.

MR. SEBASTIAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

MR. CLAY. I hope the Senator will allow me to make an explanation.

MR. SEBASTIAN. Certainly.

MR. CLAY. I desire to correct an error in the report of the proceedings of yesterday, in which it is said:

"Mr. CLAY stated that he had agreed to pair off with the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] who was in favor of the bill."

The bill alluded to was to establish the line of steam mail ships between San Francisco and Shanghai. I may have said the Senator from Michigan. It may have been my own error, not the reporters. I desire to state, however, that I should have said, if I did not say, that it was the Senator from Illinois, whom I had paired off with, and who was in favor of the bill.

PETITION.

MR. PRATT presented the memorial of the executor of Daniel Randall, late deputy paymaster general of the Army, praying compensation for the services of the testator in receiving and disbursing the duties and assessments levied in the City of Mexico for the support of the Army during the late war with that Republic; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPER WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. BELL, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the memorial of Richard M. Johnson.

REPORTS FROM A STANDING COMMITTEE.

MR. CLAY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Moren Moore, praying to be allowed an increase of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

MR. SEWARD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the memorial of Rebecca P. Stansbury and others, heirs of Thomas Peters, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

DONATIONS OF LAND IN ARKANSAS.

On the motion of Mr. JOHNSON, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill to revive, for a limited time, an act in relation to donation of lands to certain persons in the State of Arkansas.

It proposes to direct that all claimants to donations in the State, which have been adjudicated and allowed by the register and receiver, in the proper land district, in virtue of the provisions of the eighth section of the act of May 24, 1838, (to aid the State of Ohio in extending the Miami canal from Dayton to Lake Erie, and to grant a quantity of land to said State to aid in the construction of canals authorized by law, and for making donations of land to certain persons in Arkansas Territory,) and which have not been located and patent certificates issued, or which, having been located, were compelled to yield to other, prior rights, either in whole or in part, and not subsequently relocated within the period fixed by law, may be entered with the register of any one of the land offices in Arkansas, at any time within two years from the passage of the bill, in the same manner, and under the same restrictions and conditions as existed prior to May 24, 1838, as continued in the act revived; but no such claim is to be located against which fraud has been, or may be, alleged, and to which all objections shall not already have been removed to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

UTAH MILITARY ROAD.

MR. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to say to my friend from Arkansas, that if there is any great necessity for going into Executive session, I shall not object to it, but there are four or five small bills, which have come from the House of Representatives, and been referred to the Committee on Territories, and reported back unanimously for the action of the Senate, and in which the Territories are very much interested. The Territories are very anxious to have them passed. I hope, therefore, the Senate will permit them to be acted upon.

MR. SEBASTIAN. I would suggest to the Senator from Tennessee, that those bills can be more properly acted upon during the morning hour. I have two or three such bills in my charge, but I prefer bringing them up during the morning hour. I will say further to the Senator, it is necessary that we should go into Executive session on matters of importance.

MR. JONES, of Tennessee. I have been desiring for some days to get these bills up; but I have no disposition to interfere with the motion of the Senator from Arkansas. If it is necessary, therefore, to go into Executive session, I am willing to withdraw my motion.

MR. BRIGHT. I hope the honorable Senator from Arkansas will not object to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee. It is a matter of some consequence to him.

MR. SEBASTIAN. Very well.

MR. JONES, of Tennessee. I move in the first place that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives to provide for the construction of a military road from Great Salt Lake City, in the Territory of Utah, to the eastern boundary of California.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to appropriate $25,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the object designated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

OREGON MILITARY ROAD.

On the motion of Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the House of Representatives for the continuation of the military road from Myrtle Creek to Scottsburg, in Oregon.

It proposes to appropriate the sum of $20,000, to be expended for the purpose under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CIVIL OFFICERS IN NEW MEXICO.

On the motion of Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the House of Representatives for the payment of the civil officers employed in the Territory of New Mexico, while under civil government.

It proposes to authorize the Secretary of War to pay to the civil officers employed in the Territory of New Mexico, while it was under military government, the salaries due to them from September 22, 1846, until March 3, 1851, according to the rate of compensation prescribed by the organic law promulgated by General Stephen W. Kearney for the government of the Territory, deducting therefrom such sums as have already been paid to them from the treasury of said Territory; but under the provisions of the bill no compensation is to be made to any officer of the Army of the United States for discharging the duties of any civil office in the Territory.

It further proposes to authorize the Secretary of War to pay such agent as may be appointed to receive the same, on behalf of the Territory, $12,098 64, the amount advanced from the treasury of the Territory in part payment of the salaries of the civil officers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ROGUE RIVER WAR.

On the motion of Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the House of Representatives, to authorize the Secretary of War to settle and adjust the expenses of the Rogue River Indian war.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to settle on just and equitable principles all claims for services rendered in that war, and for subsistence, forage, and stores, as well as for other necessary and proper supplies for the prosecution of the war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

INDIAN HOSTILITIES IN UTAH.

On the motion of Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the House of Representatives, to refund to the Territory of Utah the expenses incurred by said Territory in suppressing Indian hostilities.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to ascertain and pay the amount incurred in the suppression of the hostilities during 1850 and 1851, provided it shall not exceed $20,940 65.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ROADS AND WELLS IN NEW MEXICO.

MR. SEBASTIAN. Mr. President—

MR. DOUGLAS. I have a territorial bill which I desire to have acted upon.

MR. SEBASTIAN. I beg that the Senator from Illinois will not press it now. I have several such bills under my charge, but I am now admonished that only about three quarters of an hour remain until the usual hour of adjournment to-day, and I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

MR. DOUGLAS. I hope not.

The motion was not agreed to.

On the motion of Mr. DOUGLAS, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the House of Representatives, for the construction of certain military roads and wells in the Territory of New Mexico.

It appropriates $20,000 for the construction and repair of the road from Taos to Santa Fe, and $12,000 for the road from Santa Fe to Dona Ana, any portion of which amount may be applied to the sinking of wells, if required by the necessities of the last named.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ROADS IN MINNESOTA.

On the motion of Mr. DOUGLAS, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the House bill making further appropriations for continuing the construction of certain roads in the Territory of Minnesota, in accordance with the estimates made by the War Department.

It proposes to appropriate for the continuation of the road from Point Douglas, on the Mississippi river, to the mouth of the St. Louis river, of Lake Superior, $20,000; for the continuation of the road from Point Douglas to Fort Gaines, now Fort Ripley, $10,000; for the continuation of the road from the mouth of Swan river to the Winnebago agency, $5,000; for the continuation of the road from Wabashaw to Mendota, $15,000.

A verbal amendment having been made, on the motion of Mr. DOUGLAS, the bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ARMIJO, PEREA, AND COLLINS.

On the motion of Mr. DOUGLAS, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Territory of New Mexico to pay to Juan C. Armijo, José L. Perea, and James L. Collins, the amount by them loaned to the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, under the joint resolution of that body, approved June 17, 1851.

The payment of the amount, with interest, is to be made out of the unexpended fund appropriated by Congress for legislative expenses in the Territory, and in accordance with the agreement made when the loan was negotiated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

SALE OF RESERVED LANDS.

On the motion of Mr. MALLORY, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill to authorize the sale of reserved lands, and for other purposes.

The original bill was introduced by Mr. DOUGLAS, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The committee reported back the bill with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following, as a substitute:

That in all cases where public lands have been, or may hereafter be reserved or acquired for military purposes, and they shall be no longer required by the Government for public uses, the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause the same to be sold, in such manner and under such regulations as may best conduce to the public interests; and the net proceeds from the sales of such lands shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, after deducting all actual and necessary expenses attending or growing out of the sales of such lands.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That in all cases of sales of lands, reserved or acquired for military purposes, on which buildings or other improvements have been erected or made by the Government, the net proceeds of such sales shall be paid into the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation from which such buildings or improvements were erected or made.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That where improvements have been, or may be made on any such reserved lands by societies or individuals under authority from the Government, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell to them such quantity of land, not exceeding in quantity a quarter of one section, as may be necessary to the objects for which such improvements were made, and for the proper use and security of them, at a price at least equal to the actual cost to the Government of such lands, and not less than the minimum price of the public lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate; the amendment was concurred in, and the bill ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time, and passed.

ROBERT C. THOMPSON.

On the motion of Mr. COOPER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill for the relief of Robert C. Thompson, only surviving child and legal representative of William Thompson, deceased, formerly a brigadier general in the Army of the Revolutionary war.

It proposes to require the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Robert C. Thompson, only surviving child and administrator, with the will annexed, of William Thompson, deceased, formerly a brigadier general in the Army of the Revolutionary war, seven years' half pay, of an officer of the rank of a brigadier general in that service.

Mr. COOPER. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words: "his surviving child." There are other surviving children.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. NORRIS. If there is any report in the case I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that there is no report.

Mr. COOPER. There was a report accompanying the bill. It was reported upon unanimously by the committee. I reported the bill in the first place without the authority of the committee, by mistake. I then withdrew it, and the report was subsequently made as the committee will recollect. I find that there were two bills printed, one with interest provided for as it was first reported, and the other as it is now read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator state what was the number of the first bill?

Mr. COOPER. I cannot tell what the number of the first bill was. The number of the present bill is 338, I think. I have here a copy of the report.

The paper was read, from which it appears that General Thompson was appointed a brigadier general in the Army of the Revolutionary war, from the State of Pennsylvania, in March, 1776. At the battle of "Three Rivers," on the 13th of June, 1776, he was taken prisoner. He died on the 13th of September, 1781, not having been exchanged, but being on parole. Neither General Thompson, during his life time, nor his children after his death, have received the seven years' half pay he was entitled to by virtue of the resolution of Congress of August 24, 1780. The certificate of the Third Auditor, which is on file with the papers in the case, states that the records of the revolutionary war in that office afford no evidence that General Thompson went into the service, or the date of his death, or that he was on parole and never exchanged; but they do afford evidence that he was in the service, and that funds were placed in his hands to pay the officers and soldiers under him subsequent to his return from captivity. The affidavit of Mrs. Thompson, the widow of the eldest son of General Thompson, proves that he was in the service, and fought in several battles during the revolutionary war, and that he died September 3, 1781, a prisoner. Extracts are also furnished from the proceedings of Congress of that period going to show that he was recognized as being in the service.

The committee consider that the testimony establishes the facts that General Thompson was a brigadier general; that he was taken a prisoner at the battle of Three Rivers on the 13th June, 1776; that he died a prisoner, on parole, on the 3d September, 1781; that neither his widow nor children have received the seven years' half pay to which they were entitled by virtue of the act of Congress of August 24, 1780; that Robert C. Thompson is his legal representative, and is thereby deemed to be entitled to the seven years' half pay claimed by him as such legal representative, from the 3d September, 1781, the date of the death of General Thompson.

Mr. COOPER. I shall not make a speech, but I desire to say that this bill was reported from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims by myself. The way it happens that there is no report, I presume, is this: The petition was at first, with the accompanying papers, committed to me, and I made a report upon them. In presenting reports here on one occasion, I made one on this case without the authority of the committee. It occurred to me, before I left the Senate Chamber that day, that I had done so; and I asked permission to withdraw it. The report was withdrawn. Permission was subsequently obtained from the committee to report the bill; and, I presume, the bill only was brought back and printed without the report. I know of no other reason why the report is not printed. I made the report myself. I know there was a report. I have a great many papers extracted from the public records, which show who General Thompson was. He is familiar to history, and the person for whose relief the bill is his grandchild.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question. I may have misapprehended what was read by the Secretary, but I thought I discovered a very palpable conflict in the testimony as regards dates. As I understood the affidavit of the lady, which was read, it represents that General Thompson was taken prisoner some time in 1776; and that he died a prisoner in 1781. Then I heard it stated, as the Secretary read on, that there is record evidence on file in the Department, that he was appointed a disbursing agent in 1780. I want to reconcile this apparent conflict in the testimony. How happens it?

Mr. COOPER. I will explain that in one moment. General Thompson was taken prisoner at the Three Rivers, with his command. He was retained a prisoner from that time, in 1776, to the end of the war. He was on his parole in 1780, when he was made a disbursing agent to pay his own troops. That all appears in the State papers. He was a prisoner, and he died a prisoner, but he was appointed to pay over money to his own troops, as it appears from the Journals of Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I hope not. I hope we shall act upon this bill first.

The motion was not agreed to, there being, on a division—ayes 12, noes 23.

Mr. BRIGHT. I believe the report in this case has not been printed yet.

Mr. NORRIS. There is no report at all.

Mr. BRIGHT. I understood what the Secretary read was the report. Certainly, I heard some paper read other than the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the right bill, by some means or other, has not been printed, and what has been read is a manuscript copy of the report.

Mr. BRIGHT. That report is very unsatisfactory to my mind. The bill itself, I believe, allows interest and goes back—

Mr. COOPER. No, sir, it does not allow interest.

Mr. BRIGHT. I would ask the honorable Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. EVANS,] whether the general bill which he has reported to the Senate, does not cover this case?

Mr. EVANS. There is a bill pending granting pay in the first instance to officers of the revolutionary army who, under several resolutions of Congress, were entitled to receive it, although a commutation of full pay for five years may have been received; and in case of the death of the officer, his widow and his children are provided for.

Mr. COOPER. I will state that the general bill reported by the Senator from South Carolina does embrace this case; but there is no probability that that bill will pass at this session, and it is no reason, it seems to me, why this bill should not pass. I did not know that there was not a report until to-day. It arises, I presume, in the way I mentioned. I made the report among a number of others, without authority. I recalled it the same day, and went back to the committee, and at the next meeting obtained authority to make the report. I then made it, and I supposed that all were printed together. It seems it was not printed. I hope that the Senator from Indiana will not insist on postponing the action on the bill until the report is printed.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not insist upon the report in this case. I understand the honorable Senator from South Carolina to state that the bill which he has reported meets this class of cases.

Mr. EVANS. I have proposed, for the last four or five weeks, to call up that bill, but have not succeeded in doing so. I propose to call it up to-morrow. I understand to-morrow is objection day, and this can come up in the character of a private bill. I propose to call it up then.

Mr. BRIGHT. I merely desire to state that I am opposed to the payment of all these ancient class of cases. I think all those which have any merit in them have been provided for in years that have passed; and, at this late period, those that are brought forward have, generally speaking, little merit. I see no reason for singling out this case and separating it from many others of a similar character which are before the Senate. If the general bill which has been reported by the Senator from South Carolina can be passed into a law, well and good. I shall content myself with voting against it. In this particular case I shall only ask for the yeas and nays upon the engrossment of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROWN. I think it exceedingly unfair to adopt such a suggestion as that made by the Senator from Indiana; that one man's claim shall be postponed and not acted upon, simply because a general bill is pending, covering that and all other cases. This petitioner comes here and asks to have his case acted upon, and not to have it put into a general bill among five hundred or a thousand, or it may be ten thousand others. He has had his case examined by itself; the committee have reported in favor of it, and he is entitled to have it acted upon by itself. If his claim is right, he ought not to be required to run the hazard of having a bill passed, not only covering his case, but five hundred or a thousand others. I have heard the appeal several times made against particular claims, because there was a general bill covering all such cases. I do not think it fair towards the claimant, and I feel it just towards this person, whom I do not know, about whose claim I know and care very little, to say that I think it is a very unfair way to treat a claim which comes before the Senate. If this man had chosen to take his chance in a general bill, very well; but having now presented his claim separately, and had a favorable report upon it, and having his bill here taking precedence of the general bill, I think he is entitled to the special action of the Senate, and to have his case stand on its own merits.

On the question ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading, the yeas and nays were taken with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Cooper, Dodge of Wisconsin, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Pratt, Rockwell, Sebastian, Stuart, Walker, and Weller—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Bayard, Bright, Clay, Dodge of Iowa, Norris, Pettit, and Slidell—9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 6, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. THURSTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be ten thousand copies of Explanations and Incidents in Texas, New Mexico, California, &c., connected with the Mexican Boundary Commission, by John R. Bartlett, late United States Commissioner, published for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is upon agreeing to the amendments to the civil and diplomatic bill, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union yesterday.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose the usual course will be pursued, which is to read the amendments through, and if any gentleman desires a separate vote upon any one, he will designate it.

The SPEAKER. That has been the usual course, and, if not objected to, the amendments will be read; and if any gentleman desires a separate vote upon any one of them, he will rise in his place and signify it. Those amendments not objected to will be voted upon en masse.

The Clerk then read all the amendments through, when separate votes were demanded on the following amendments by the members indicated below:

On the twenty-second and twenty-fourth amendments, by Mr. LETCHER;

On the twenty-sixth amendment, by Mr. PRESTON;

On the twenty-ninth amendment, by Mr. BRIDGES;

On the thirtieth amendment, by Mr. LETCHER,

On the thirty-first amendment, by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee;

On the thirty-third amendment, by Mr. SEWARD;

On the thirty-eighth amendment, by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee;

On the thirty-ninth amendment, by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee;

On the forty-second amendment, by Mr. SEWARD;

On the forty-fifth amendment, by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee;

On the forty-sixth amendment by Mr. BRIDGES;

On the fifty-first amendment, by Mr. BALL.

Mr. BRIDGES. When the twenty-ninth amendment was read, I asked for a separate vote on it. I now desire to withdraw that request. It is the amendment in reference to the assay office at New York city.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can withdraw his call for a separate vote only by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. HAVEN. I am inclined to ask for a division of the question on the amendment, while I am happy that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has withdrawn his objection.

The SPEAKER. Being reported as one amendment, it is not divisible.

Mr. HAVEN. I would suggest to the Chair, that, under the terms of the rule, we can take away from an amendment, provided we have an affirmative substantive proposition.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is not divisible. As the Chair understands, objection is made, and a separate vote accordingly will be had on the proposition.

The question was then taken on all the amendments upon which separate votes were not asked; and they were concurred in.

The twenty-second amendment, on which a separate vote was demanded by Mr. LETCHER, was read by the Clerk, as follows:

For completing the custom-house at St. Louis, Missouri, $100,000;

For completing the custom-house at Mobile, Alabama, $65,000;

For completing the custom-house at Cincinnati, Ohio, $40,000;

For completing the custom-house at Louisville, Kentucky, $40,000;

For completing the custom-house at Bangor, Maine, $20,000;

For completing the custom-house at Bath, Maine, $20,000;

For completing the custom-house at Wilmington, Delaware, $12,000;

And for purchasing a site for a custom-house at Providence, Rhode Island, $24,000.

Mr. LETCHER. Is that amendment divisible?

The SPEAKER. The previous question operating, it is not divisible; for division is tantamount to amendment, which is expressly excluded by the previous question under the rule.

Mr. McMULLIN. Then we are forced to vote on all these appropriations for custom-houses en masse, as a whole?

The SPEAKER. So the Chair decides. Separate votes cannot be had on each and every of the items. Under the operation of the previous question, the amendment must be voted on as a whole.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 72, nays 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Ball, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bug, Caruthers, Caskey, Chandler, Clark, Corwin, Cox, Cullom, Curtis, Cutting, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Disney, Eastman, Edwards, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Giddings, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hill, Howe, Kidwell, Latham, Lindsley, Mace, Matteson, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Noble, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Phillips, Preston, Riddle, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabine, Sage, Sapp, Shannon, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walbridge, Walley, Elisha B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Westworth, Yates, and Zollicoffer—72.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Bell, Bridges, Brooks, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craige, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dent, Dowdell, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Goode, Greenwood, Grow, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Hillyer, Houston, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kirtledge, Knox, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, McMullin, McQueen, Maxwell, Milson, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Olds, Orr, Bishop Perkins, Powell, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Thomas Ritchey, Rufin, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Stratton, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Vassant, and Daniel B. Wright—70.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. PRESTON. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted, and to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. LETCHER. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PRESTON. Well, I withdraw the motion.

Twenty-fourth amendment:

To complete the marine hospital at Evansville in the State of Indiana, $2,000.

To complete the marine hospital at San Francisco; to inclose the site and drain the same, and for necessary outbuildings, $44,000: Provided, That none of the moneys appropriated for any buildings mentioned in this act shall be used or applied for the purposes mentioned, until a valid title to the land for the site of such building, in each case, shall be vested in the United States, and until the State in which such building is to be completed shall, in due form, and in a manner that shall bind such State, release and surrender to the United States jurisdiction over the site of such building; and shall also duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax, or in any way assess the said site, or the property of the United States that may be thereon during the time the said United States shall be and remain the owner thereof; and that none of the moneys appropriated for any building in this act, or heretofore appropriated for the purposes mentioned, shall be used or applied for the purposes for which they are appropriated, unless the sum shall be sufficient in each case to complete the building in such cases, and fully and entirely accomplish the object for which the appropriation in this act is made; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby prohibited from using or applying any of the moneys aforesaid, in any one case, until he shall have made a contract, with such security as he shall approve, for the completion of the entire building; and the work, in such case, at a sum not exceeding the sum appropriated and unexpended in such cases; and the said Secretary of the Treasury shall enter into no contract, either conditional or final, for the purposes mentioned in this act, which shall involve in any one case a sum beyond the sums appropriated and remaining unexpended in such cases; and in all cases where such unexpended appropriation shall be insufficient to complete the entire work, in such cases, or until the Secretary of the Treasury shall suspend all action in reference thereto, and shall report to Congress, on the first day of each session, the condition of the work in such cases, and shall, at the same time, lay before Congress such plans and estimates as, in his judgment, shall be proper for the completion of the building and work in such cases.

The question being on agreeing to the foregoing amendment,

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll. Pending the call,

Mr. ORR said: There is a misapprehension, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the amendment which the House is voting on. By mistake, the two hospitals which the Clerk has reported as appropriations having been made for—those at Evansville, in the State of Indiana, and San Francisco—were not included in the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] and they should not have been reported as part of the amendment on which we are now voting. They have come in in a subsequent amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR,] and, therefore, the question before the House is, or should be, on the proviso offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. HAVEN. So I understood it; and I had my eye upon it carefully while we were in committee.

The SPEAKER. In justice to the Clerks, the Chair would like to inquire how the mistake grew up?

Mr. ORR. I think I can explain it.

The SPEAKER, (after consultation with the Clerks.) The Clerks report the amendment as one which on its face is to be voted on in the form in which it is now before the House.

Mr. ORR. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PRESTON] was a portion of a printed amendment when he sent it up; it was on the same page that contained the proviso, which was at the top of the page, with the appropriation for these two marine hospitals; but he marked with his pencil just below the end of the two appropriations for the hospital, the point at which his intention was that the amount should commence; and it was so regarded and treated in the committee.

Mr. LETCHER. Is it not too late to raise a question about the matter now, after having taken half the vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that the House, or any member, would not be unwilling to have an accidental mistake corrected.

Mr. PRESTON. Do I understand the Chair as deciding that it is too late now to correct any misapprehension as to the character of the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so decide. The Chair, however, does decide that, if insisted upon, the vote now being taken will have to be concluded.

Mr. LETCHER. I insist upon it. We may as well take the vote now on the whole matter, as have to take separate votes on it.

Several MEMBERS. How will it be then?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not quite sure that he himself understands correctly the precise condition of this matter. Is it true that the two hospitals, for the appropriations for which the House has just been voting, are provided for in the general amendment in respect to such buildings? The Chair understands that these two hospitals are provided for in the thirty-first amendment to the bill. If that be so, it follows that the House is mistaken in being now engaged in voting upon appropriations for hospitals so provided for in another amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I beg leave to say, that all the amendments proposed or recommended by the Committee of Ways and Means, for appropriations for marine hospitals, were offered by myself as a single amendment, and were so voted upon by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. And whence comes the proviso contained in the amendment which has been reported from the Clerk's table? Where does it come in? And to what does it belong? That proviso evidently belongs to the amendment with regard to the custom-houses.

Mr. PRESTON. Evidently it does. If the House will indulge me for a moment, I will endeavor to explain. The Committee of Ways and Means reported a separate custom-house bill. After it had passed, and when we had the subject of marine hospitals up, I offered an amendment in the shape of the proviso that has been read by the Clerk, to apply to the custom-houses, and every other building included in the bill. It was offered by me immediately after disposing of the custom-houses, and before disposing of the marine hospitals; but it was designed as an independent amendment, or proviso.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I understand that a part of this amendment belongs to the amendment for the custom-houses.

Mr. PRESTON. Yes; and the other portion of it belongs to other amendments.

Mr. JONES. Then it is necessary to take that vote over again.

Mr. CUTTING. Does not the construction of the proviso apply to the custom-houses as well as to the marine hospitals?

The SPEAKER. Yes; but there were distinct amendments for these buildings.

Mr. JONES. But it has been offered so as that it should apply to the marine hospitals as well as to the custom-houses; and it was adopted by the committee as a whole amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the proviso in relation to marine hospitals, contained within the amendment that has been erroneously read at the Clerk's table, is a separate and distinct amendment.

Mr. SEWARD. No, sir; it belongs to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky as a whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky, the Chair understands, offered the proviso as a separate and distinct amendment.

Mr. LETCHER. Is the amendment in reference to marine hospitals a part of the amendment which the gentleman from Kentucky sent to the Chair? If it is, I think we had better go on with the call of the roll.

Mr. PRESTON. The House will bear in mind that the custom-house amendment was adopted in the first place by a vote of 64 to 56, as my memory serves me. There was then an amendment offered in reference to marine hospitals, and some ten or twelve minutes after, I offered this proviso as a separate amendment, designed to apply to the custom-houses.

The SPEAKER. The notes taken at the time by the Clerk show distinctly that the proviso was offered as a separate amendment coming in after the marine hospitals had been voted on, and another amendment added upon the motion of the gentleman from California, [Mr. McDougall.] There can be no doubt that it was a separate and distinct amendment, separated from the marine hospitals even by another amendment. The Chair hopes it will be the unanimous consent of the House that the calling of the roll shall not proceed further, but that the vote may be taken upon the proviso as it was adopted by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

There was no objection; and the proviso was reported as a distinct amendment, and adopted by the House.

Twenty-sixth amendment.

To complete the custom-house at Richmond, Virginia, $150,000: Provided, That none of the residue of the moneys appropriated for this building, in and by this act, or by any former act, and now remaining unexpended, shall be used or applied for the purposes mentioned in this act, by the Secretary of the Treasury, until a valid title to the land for the site of such building shall be vested in the United States, and until the State of Virginia shall, in due form, and in a manner that shall bind said State, release and surrender to the United States jurisdiction over the site of such building; and shall also duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax, or in any way assess said site, or the property of the United States that may be thereon during the time that the said United States shall be or remain the owner thereof: And provided further, That none of said moneys appropriated for said building by this act, or heretofore appropriated for the purposes mentioned, and now remaining unexpended, shall be used or applied for the purpose for which they are appropriated, unless the same shall be sufficient to complete the building fully, and entirely accomplish the object for which the appropriation in this act is made. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby prohibited from using or applying any of the moneys aforesaid, until he shall have made a contract with such security as he shall approve for the completion of the entire building and work, at a sum not exceeding the sum of moneys appropriated and unexpended. And the said Secretary of the Treasury shall enter into no contract, either conditional or final, for the purpose mentioned in this act, which shall involve an expenditure beyond the sums appropriated and remaining unexpended; and should such unexpended appropriations be insufficient to complete the entire work, the said Secretary of the Treasury shall suspend all action in reference thereto, and shall report to Congress on the first day of its session in December, 1854, the condition of the work, and shall, at the same time, lay before Congress such plans and estimates as, in his judgment, shall be proper for the completion of the building and work: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to go on and construct, or cause to be constructed, completed, and finished, the building mentioned and provided for, subject in all things to the limitations and restrictions contained herein.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I demand the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 84, nays 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Appleton, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Ball, Benson, Benton, Boveck, Brooks, Bugg, Carpenter, Caruthers, Caskie, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, Corwin, Cox, Curtis, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Disney, Eddy, Edmunds, Edmundson, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Giddings, Goode, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hill, Houston, Howe, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kerr, Kidwell, Latham, Lilly, Lindsey, Lindsey, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Olds, Parker, Phillips, Pratt, Preston, Reese, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Upham, Wade, Walbridge, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, and Yates—84.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Barksdale, Belcher, Bridges, Chamberlain, Colquitt, Craigie, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dent, Dowdell, Ellison, English, Greenwood, Grow, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Hillyer, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lamb, Letcher, McCulloch, McMullin, McQueen, Macy, Matteson, Millson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Puryear, Ready, Thomas Ritchey, Ruffin, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Walsh, Daniel B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—54.

So the amendment was adopted.

Previous to the announcement of the above vote, Mr. COBB said: Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House I would state that, although I voted against this proposition in the first instance, I now give it my vote because it hangs on its own hook.

Mr. CASKIE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

Mr. LILLY. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the latter motion was agreed to.

Twenty-ninth amendment:

For the purchase of the lots or parcels of land, with the appurtenances and buildings thereon, belonging one thereof to the Bank of Commerce, and the other thereof to the Bank of the State of New York, and particularly referred to and described in two contracts—one with each of said banks—for the leasing and right to purchase the same, bearing date the 19th of August, 1853, $530,000: Provided, That before said purchase is completed, the State of New York shall cede to the United States jurisdiction over said land and property, and shall, by law, exonerate the same, and property of the United States thereon, from all taxes, levies, and assessments thereon, while the same remains the property of the United States.

Mr. HAVEN. Under the 53d rule, which is applicable to this case, I ask a division of the question, first having a vote on all the amendments, down to the last proviso, and then a vote on the last proviso.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not think that can be done, and for two reasons; first, we are now acting under the operation of the previous question; and, secondly, if all the amendments excepting the proviso be stricken out, there will not be left afterwards a substantive proposition for us to vote on.

The SPEAKER. There will be no ground for the proviso to stand upon.

Mr. JONES. None at all; and the call for a division is, of course, not in order.

The SPEAKER. So the Chair decides.

Mr. HAVEN. As to the last suggestion made by the gentleman from Tennessee, the rule is explicit:

"Any member may call for a division of a question, which shall be divided if it comprehend propositions in substance so distinct, that one being taken away, a substantive proposition shall remain for the decision of the House."

I submit that nothing can be more plain than that the first part of this amendment is a substantive and distinct proposition, and that the residue may be voted in or out of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York seems to have forgotten that the previous question cuts off all amendments, and would not allow that object to be attained by a division of the question any more than by an entirely new amendment.

Mr. HAVEN. The language of the rule is:

"That any member may call for a division of a question if it comprehends propositions in substance so distinct, that one being taken away, a substantive proposition shall remain."

The SPEAKER. The uniform practice has been to vote upon each amendment as a whole, under the operation of the previous question. The Chair does not know any variation from that practice.

Mr. HAVEN. Do I understand the Chair as ruling that I cannot have a division?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so rules.

Mr. HAVEN. I think the decision is not in strict accordance with the rule itself. But I do not desire to make any point of order about it.

Mr. MORRISON demanded the yeas and nays upon the amendment; but they were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Thirtieth amendment:

To complete the custom-house at Waldoboro', in the State of Maine, the sum of $13,000, which, in addition to the sum heretofore appropriated, shall constitute the entire cost of the purchase of the site, erection, and completion of the building.

The question was then taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Thirty-first amendment:

To complete the marine hospital at Cleveland, in the State of Ohio, $25,000;

To complete the marine hospital at St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, $10,000;

To complete the marine hospital at Chicago, in the State of Illinois, $8,000;

To complete the marine hospital at Louisville, in the State of Kentucky, $12,500;

To complete the marine hospital at Paducah, in said State, $5,000;

To complete the marine hospital at San Francisco, in the State of California, and to inclose the site and drain the same, and for necessary out-buildings, $44,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays upon that amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Cox and Ashe were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—yeas 77, noes 55.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Thirty-second amendment:

For the construction of a marine hospital at Vicksburg, in the State of Mississippi, $55,000.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the yeas and nays upon that amendment.

The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. ROBBINS. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. LILLY, and WASHBURN of Maine, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—yeas 83, noes 39.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Thirty-eighth amendment:

For books voted to the members of the Thirty-Third Congress by the joint resolution of 24th February, 1854, and the resolution of the House of the 26th June, 1854, $199,510 87.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Thirty-ninth amendment:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to purchase from the publishers, Lippincott, Grambo & Co., two hundred copies each of the second and third volumes of Schoolcraft's History, &c., of the Indian Tribes of the United States, to complete the new sets of the new members of the House of Representatives, at $3 50 per volume, $1,400: Provided, That the said volumes shall be of the same style and quality as those heretofore furnished.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Upon the adoption of that amendment I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was then agreed to—ayes 84, noes 39.

Forty-second amendment:

For the completion of the bridge at the Little Falls, in the District of Columbia, $75,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended except in fulfillment of a contract which the Secretary of the Interior is hereby required to make for the completion of the said bridge for the amount hereby appropriated; and it shall be, and is hereby, declared to be the duty of the said Secretary to require of the contractor or contractors to give bond, with ample security, to fulfill his contract.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I demand the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 64, nays 87; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Appleton, Ball, Bell, Benson, Benton, Boccock, Bridges, Bugg, Caskey, Chandler, Colquitt, Corwin, Craig, Cullom, Cutting, De Witt, Dick, Disney, Edmunds, Edmondson, Everhart, Farley, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hill, Kidwell, Latham, Lilly, McNair, Mace, Maxwell, May, Orr, John Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Reese, Riddle, Rogers, Russell, Seymour, Shannon, Shower, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Upham, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walley, John Wentworth, and Yates—64.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Belcher, Bennett, Brooks, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Churchill, Clark, Clingan, Cobb, Cox, Curtis, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dent, Dowdell, Eastman, Eddy, Ellison, English, Fenton, Flagler, Fuller, Giddings, Greenwood, Grow, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hillyer, Houston, Howe, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lamb, Letcher, Lindsey, Lindley, McMullen, McMullin, McQueen, Mace, Matteson, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Milson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Ruffin, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, George W. Smyth, Stratton, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Vail, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, and Daniel B. Wright—87.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Forty-fifth amendment:

For the mileage and per diem of William Carr Lane, for contesting the seat of Delegate from New Mexico, $2,868 00.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 72; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Ashe, Ball, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Corwin, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Edmunds, Farley, Franklin, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Henn, Hill, Howe, Roland Jones, Knox, Latham, Lindsey, McMullin, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Gerrit Smith, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Vansant, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Yates, and Zollcoffer—65.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Appleton, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Belcher, Bridges, Brooks, Clingan, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dent, Disney, Dowdell, Eastman, Eddy, Edmondson, Ellison, Faulkner, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Grow, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kittredge, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsey, McQueen, Milson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Orr, John Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Robbins, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, John J. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Walbridge, Walley, Walsh, and Daniel B. Wright—72.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Forty-sixth amendment:

For continuing the aqueduct for bringing water into the city of Washington, agreeably to the plan adopted by the President of the United States, according to the provisions of the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1853, $500,000: Provided, That no portion of the foregoing amount shall be applied, unless the corporations of Georgetown and Washington shall appropriate and pay a sum equal to one fifth of the amount required to construct the work upon the dam, aqueduct, reservoirs, and other works necessary to bring the water to the city of Washington: Provided, That none of the money hereby appropriated shall be expended in the construction of said aqueduct until contracts shall be entered into by the President of the United States, with good and responsible persons, with good and sufficient sureties, for such portions of the work to be executed, and materials to be furnished, as will, in his opinion, secure the faithful completion of the work upon the plan above referred to, for the sum of $2,300,000, or less, and within two years from the date of the contracts; and it is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of the act of Congress under which the President adopted said plan for bringing water into the city of Washington, that the sole and exclusive use of the water to be brought by said aqueduct is for the purposes of the Government establishments in said city to the extent they may require it, and the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and the inhabitants thereof, may, upon such terms and conditions, and under such regulations as may hereafter be prescribed by act of Congress, use the surplus water: Provided, That the whole expense of the additional pipes necessary for the distribution of such surplus water through the said cities, shall be borne exclusively by the corporations of said cities respectively: And provided further, That twenty per cent. on the estimate of the work done on each contract shall be retained till the completion of the contract.

Mr. BRIDGES. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 60, nays 91; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Appleton, Ashe, Ball, Bell, Benson, Brooks, Chamberlain, Chandler, Corwin, Craig, Cullom, Curtis, Cutting, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Eddy, Edmunds, Edmondson, Farley, Faulkner, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Goode, Harrison, Hastings, Howe, Roland Jones, Kerr, Latham, Mace, May, Noble, Norton, Parker, John Perkins, Preston, Reese, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Shower, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, Hester L. Stevens, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Upham, Vansant, Walbridge, Walley, John Wentworth, and Westbrook—60.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Belcher, Bennett, Benton, Boccock, Bridges, Carpenter, Caruthers, Caskey, Churchill, Clark, Cobb, Colquitt, Thomas Davis, Dent, Disney, Dowdell, Eastman, Ellison, English, Fenton, Fuller, Giddings, Greenwood, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Haven, Hendricks, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsey, Lindsey, McMullin, McMullen, McNair, McQueen, Macy, Matteson, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Milson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Thomas Ritchey, Ruffin, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Gerrit Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Vail, Wade, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, and Zollcoffer—91.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. FLAGLER. I voted with the majority on the proposition allowing William Carr Lane mileage and per diem while he contested the seat in this Hall of the Delegate from New Mexico; and I now move a reconsideration of the vote by which that amendment was defeated.

Mr. COBB. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. SAPP. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to lay upon the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 75, nays 71; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Appleton, David J. Bailey, Belcher, Boccock, Bridges, Brooks, Caskey, Churchill, Clingan, Cobb, Cox, Craig, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dent, Dowdell, Eastman, Edmondson, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Grow, Hastings, Hendricks, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kittredge, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsey, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Maxwell, Milson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Orr, Parker, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, John J. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, and Daniel B. Wright—75.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Ball, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bugg, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Clark, Corwin, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Disney, Edmunds, Farley, Flagler, Franklin, Giddings, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Henn, Hill, Howe, Kerr, Knox, Latham, Lindsey, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Middleswarth, Morgan, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Bishop Perkins, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Gerrit Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, and Zollcoffer—71.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

Fifty-first amendment:

Insert the following proviso after the provision for the payment of the Auxiliary Guard of Washington:

Provided, That the captain and members of the Auxiliary Guard shall be appointed by the President of the United States, and shall be subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by him.

Mr. BALL. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 64, nays 78; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Barksdale, Belcher, Bell, Boccock, Bridges, Chamberlain, Churchill, Clark, Clingan, Cobb, Craig, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dowdell, Eastman, Edmondson, English, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Greenwood, Wiley P. Miller, Milson, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Gerrit Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, and Zollcoffer—78.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having now been disposed of, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was subsequently read the third time.

The question now being, "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. HOUSTON moved the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. WALSH demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 75, nays 82; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Willis Allen, Appleton, Belcher, Bell, Benson, Benton, Brooks, Bugg, Caruthers, Caskey, Chandler, Cox, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Disney, Edmunds, Edmondson, Everhart, Farley, Faulkner, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Giddings, Goode, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Henn, Houston, Howe, Ingersoll, Johnson, Roland Jones, Kerr, Kidwell, Latham, Lindsey, Lindsey, May, John G. Miller, Milson, Parker, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Preston, Reese, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Sapp, Seymour, Shannon, Shower, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Walley, John Wentworth, and Westbrook—75.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ball, Barksdale, Bennett, Boccock, Bridges, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Churchill, Clark, Clingan, Cobb, Colquitt, Corwin, Craig, Cullom, John G. Davis, Dent, Dowdell, Eastman, Eddy, Ellison, English, Fenton, Flagler, Grow, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Hill, Hillyer, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Maxwell, Middleswarth, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Olds, Orr, Parker, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Powell, Puryear, Ready, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Ruffin, Russell, Sage, Seward, Shaw, William Smith, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Daniel B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcoffer—82.

So the bill was rejected.

Previous to the announcement of the above vote, Mr. ORR said: I intended to vote "aye," but I vote "no," with a view to move a reconsideration, if the bill be rejected.

As soon as the result was announced, Mr. ORR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. I move to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. ORR. I am still on the floor; and move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WALSH. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. MCNAIR demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. MACE and CHURCHWELL were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 95, noes 9.

So the motion was agreed to; and the House thereupon (at four o'clock, p. m.) adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 7, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF SLAVERY.

Mr. ALLEN presented resolutions of the Legislature of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations against the extension of the institution of slavery, and the further acquisition of foreign territory by the General Government; in favor of the right of trial by jury to all persons claimed under the fugitive slave law; and approving the course of the delegation from that State on the bill for the establishment of territorial governments in Nebraska and Kansas; which were read, and ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

THOMAS W. DORR.

Mr. ALLEN presented resolutions of the Legislature of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, accompanied by a copy of the opinion of the Supreme Court upon the act passed by the Legislature of said State June 25, 1844, reversing and annulling the judgment of the supreme court of Rhode Island, of treason against Thomas W. Dorr; which were read, and ordered to lie on the table.

REPORT FROM A STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of John Shaw, praying compensation for his services as interpreter in the trial of certain Winnebago Indians charged with murder, at a special term of the United States circuit court at Prairie du Chien, in the Territory of Michigan, in 1828, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

PATAPSCO RIVER.

Mr. PRATT. I am instructed by the select committee, to whom were referred the memorial of the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, and the petition of the Board of Trade of that city, asking an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of the navigation of the Patapsco river, to submit a report, accompanied by a bill for the improvement of the navigation of the Patapsco river, and to render the port of Baltimore accessible to the war steamers of the United States. I ask that the bill may be read a first time, and that the report may be printed.

The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRODHEAD. As a member of the select committee, I beg to say that I have no objection to the bill reported, but from some of the reasoning contained in the report accompanying it, I dissent.

ST. JOHN'S RIVER, FLORIDA.

Mr. MALLORY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to the Senate what examinations or surveys have been made with reference to the improvement of the bar of the St. John's river, Florida, under the appropriation made by Congress for this purpose on the 30th of August, 1852, together with the results of said examinations or surveys; and whether any further appropriation be necessary to deepen the water on the said bar to meet the ordinary demands of navigation; and what means are proposed to accomplish the same.

CANAL IN FLORIDA.

Mr. MALLORY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to the Senate the action of his Department, under the appropriation of 30th of August, 1852, for the examination and survey of the route for a canal across the peninsula of Florida; and whether any further appropriation be necessary to ascertain and determine a practicable route for said canal.

A. B. ROMAN.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I am instructed by the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill of the House of Representatives for the relief of A. B. Roman, to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to make a report recommending the passage of the bill. The report would have been made earlier, but it was impossible to do it for the last few days, because the morning hour has been occupied by other business. I also ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. It is a claim made by A. B. Roman, asking for the confirmation of his title to his plantation which has been in the possession of his predecessors since a period prior to the cession of the Louisiana Territory to the United States. The confirmation was neglected, under certain acts of Congress, until they expired; and, in consequence, some difficulty has arisen about it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to confirm A. B. Roman, of the parish of St. James, Louisiana, in all the title now held or possessed by the United States to two tracts of land therein described, containing seven thousand four hundred and thirty-eight acres of land; but the act is to be construed only to vest in him title, held by the United States, and not in any way to impair the bona fide rights, acquired by any other person under adverse grants, concessions, or purchases, made prior to the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

NEBRASKA AND WASHINGTON ROADS.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, yesterday several territorial bills were passed, but, by accident, one was omitted. It is a bill relating to Washington and Nebraska Territories. I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to report now, and have considered, a bill making appropriations for the construction of certain roads in the Territories of Nebraska and Washington. If it leads to debate I will consent to let it go over.

The bill was read twice by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $85,000 for the construction of three roads, under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

On motion by Mr. DOUGLAS, the title was amended by inserting the word "military" before "roads."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WADE. I move to pass by the previous orders for the purpose of taking up Senate bill 359, granting bounty land to Elizabeth Summers.

Mr. HUNTER. I desire to make the suggestion whether it would not be better, by general consent, to suspend for this day so much of the rule as forbids debate on private bills. It seems to me it gives an unfair precedence to some bills. We had therefore better take up the Calendar in its order.

Mr. WADE. Let the bill which I propose be considered, then.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no objection to taking up that bill if the method which I propose be adopted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I must object to the proposition of the Senator from Virginia. If the method proposed by him were adopted, and the Calendar proceeded with regularly, bills that have been debated five or six times before would again be debated, and, as the session is now near its close, other bills possessing merit, but lower down on the Calendar, would not be acted upon at all.

Mr. PRATT. Let us take up the Calendar.

Mr. HUNTER. Of course, my suggestion can only be adopted by unanimous consent. I have watched the operation of this rule, and a great many bills pass which would not do so if we had time to examine and debate them, and sometimes others are opposed because there is no opportunity of hearing an explanation. I think it much fairer to allow debate on all the bills.

Mr. CLAY. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that it appears to me that it would be much more satisfactory, as well as more expeditious, to take up the Calendar in its regular order.

Mr. WADE. I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. CLAY. That is what I was going to propose.

ROBERT C. THOMPSON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first bill upon the Private Calendar, in the order of business, is that on which the Senate was engaged at the adjournment yesterday—being the unfinished business of yesterday—the bill for the relief of Robert C. Thompson, only surviving child and legal representative of William Thompson, deceased, formerly a brigadier general in the Army of the revolutionary war. The question at the adjournment was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading; and, on that question, the yeas and nays had been ordered, but were not taken for want of a quorum.

The question being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Gillette, Hamlin, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Stuart, Wade, and Walker—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Bright, Brown, Clay, Dodge of Iowa, Hunter, Norris, Rusk, Sebastian, Slidell, and Williams—12.

The bill was read a third time and passed; and the title was amended by striking out the words "only surviving child."

FRANCISCO LOPE URRIZA.

The next bill on the Calendar was one for the relief of Francisco Lope Urriza.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall have to state my objections to that bill.

The bill was consequently passed over.

BENEDICT J. HEARD.

The next bill on the Calendar was one—reported from the Committee on Claims—for the relief of Benedict J. Heard.

Mr. BAYARD objected, and the bill was passed over.

CAPTAIN PHILIP F. VOORHEES.

The next bill was one—reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs—for the relief of Captain Philip F. Voorhees, United States Navy.

Mr. SLIDELL objected to its consideration, and it was passed over.

OTWAY H. BERRYMAN.

The next was a bill—reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs—for the relief of Otway H. Berryman.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to allow and pay Purser Berryman $2,160 02, being the amount of losses sustained by him while commanding and acting as purser of the United States schooner On-ka-hy-e.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

RICHARD W. MEADE.

The next bill was one—reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations—for settling the claim of the legal representatives of Richard W. Meade, deceased; which was objected to by Mr. EVANS, and passed over.

SUSAN COODY AND OTHERS.

The next was the bill—reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs—for the relief of Susan Coody and others.

Mr. CHASE objected to the consideration of the bill, and it was passed over.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Does the rule permit more than one objection to the same bill? This bill was objected to two months ago. Does the rule operate indefinitely as to it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair supposes that on every Friday, when it is objection day, the objection to a bill can be renewed.

Mr. CHASE said subsequently: Since objecting to the consideration of the bill I have read the report, and am satisfied that it is a meritorious case; I therefore withdraw my objection.

The Senate then proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to pay $1,992 62 to Susan Coody and others, for property destroyed near Fort Gibson, by United States soldiers, on the 12th of March, 1845, in the proportion and sums respectively due them, according to the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, of June 24, 1850.

The reading of the report was called for by Mr. PEARCE, and it was read as has heretofore been published.

Mr. PEARCE. Does the bill disclose that the female in the case is an Indian woman?

Mr. CHASE. Yes, sir, it does.

Mr. PEARCE. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. CHASE. I do not say that the bill does; but the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs told me that that is the case.

Mr. PEARCE. It is very important that it should appear in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not appear in the bill. Does the Senator move an amendment?

Mr. PEARCE. Will the Senator state to me to what tribe the claimants belong?

Mr. CHASE. The Cherokees.

Mr. PEARCE. Then I move to amend the bill by inserting after the words "Susan Coody and others," the words, "of the Cherokee tribe of Indians."

The amendment was agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time and passed.

ANN W. ANGUS.

The bill for the relief of Mrs. Ann W. Angus was announced as the next upon the Calendar.

It proposes to continue to Mrs. Angus, for five years from March 4, 1854, the pension heretofore granted to her, which expired on the 4th of March last, and also to extend to her the benefits of all laws which may hereafter be passed, making general provision for widows or further continuing their half pay, and to give her all the benefits to which she would have been entitled if her husband, Samuel Angus, had died in the service of the United States.

Mr. CASS. There is an expression contained in that bill about extending the benefit of laws which may hereafter be passed. It seems to me to be a new provision. Will the Secretary please to read it again?

The Secretary read as follows:

"And that he [the Secretary of the Interior] be also directed to extend to her the benefits of all laws which may hereafter be passed, making general provisions for widows, or further continuing their half pay, to which said benefits she would have been entitled had her husband, Samuel Angus, died in the service of the United States."

Mr. CASS. I think that had better be omitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator move to amend by striking it out?

Mr. CASS. Certainly I do.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER called for the reading of the report, and it was accordingly read.

It appears that the claimant is the widow of Captain Samuel Angus, formerly of the Navy of the United States; and she asks a pension on account of the services of her husband, whose death was occasioned from wounds received in the service, while fighting the battles of his country. Captain Angus entered the service at the age of fifteen, in the year 1799, and remained in the service until the latter part of Mr. Monroe's administration, when he was dismissed, without a trial by court-martial, for writing a letter to the Secretary of the Navy which was not considered respectful. At the time of writing the letter, he was laboring under temporary insanity, of which President Monroe afterwards became satisfied, and recommended his successor, Mr. Adams, to reinstate him. He was not, however, reinstated, in consequence of his being subject to fits of insanity, but was allowed a pension, which continued to his death, on the 29th May, 1840. During the whole period that he was in service, up to the time of writing the letter, he sustained the character of a brave and meritorious officer. He was wounded in four separate engagements with the enemy, and two of those wounds were upon the head. The evidence is satisfactory to the committee that his fits of insanity were occasioned by those wounds, and that they hastened his death. They were also the occasion of his being a severe sufferer, and of great affliction to his family for many years. During this time he was also unable to make any provision for them, and in consequence left a widow and six children in destitute circumstances.

The committee consider the case embraced within the spirit and principle of the pension laws, and that the widow and children are as much entitled to aid as though he had been killed while fighting the battles of his country.

It has been the custom of Congress, from time to time, to extend for a further term all the pensions granted by existing statutes for five years. This has been done so as to continue, from the date of the allowance of such pensions under general laws, all of them so granted, from year to year since 1819—and the act of February 3, 1853, forms the single exception to this rule, in omitting to mention the widows and orphans of the naval service, while providing for a further five years' pension to those of the Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

AMOS AND JOHN E. KENDALL.

The next was a bill—reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs—for the relief of Amos Kendall and John E. Kendall.

Mr. EVANS. That bill will inevitably lead to discussion. I cannot vote for it unless I hear it debated.

The bill was passed over.

THOMAS C. NYE.

The next was a bill—reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads—for the relief of Thomas C. Nye.

It proposes to direct the Postmaster General to have the accounts of Thomas C. Nye, late United States mail carrier and contractor, investigated, and to pay to him the amount of all losses which he may have actually sustained at the time, by the action of the Postmaster General, under the law of March 3, 1845, repealing the previous law by which new contractors were required to take at valuation all horses, coaches, and so forth, of the old United States mail contractors.

In 1839, Nye was extensively engaged, individually, and in partnership with others, in carrying the United States mails between Utica, Ithaca, Binghamton, De Reuter, Cherry Valley, and also between Albany and Salina, in the State of New York. And, in 1842, he became the sole contractor on these lines, running upwards of two hundred miles of daily mails, employing many hundreds of horses, and many stage coaches, amounting, in value, to about $50,000.

In this heavy investment, in the United States service, Mr. Nye was perfectly safe, because the law required that, upon the reletting of the contracts, the new contractors should take, at valuation, all horses, coaches, &c., thereon, as a part of the contract. But, by the act of March 3, 1845, this law was repealed, and the consequence was, that upon reletting the contracts during that year, upon which Mr. Nye was engaged, he was underbid, losing all his contracts, and having all his horses, coaches, &c., thrown upon his hands unemployed, to his great injury and loss.

It appears that the law of March 3, 1845, did not take effect until the first of July following, and it is shown that the contracts were advertised for reletting, and were relet under the old law, with its provisions requiring the new contractors to purchase all stock, horses, coaches, &c., on the routes; but, notwithstanding this, Mr. Nye had all his left upon his hands, the new contractors failing to purchase any of them.

No amendment being proposed, the bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. From the working propensities exhibited this morning, the indications are that we are to have a long session to-day. For that reason, and as the Senator from North Carolina is in the chair, and therefore precluded from making the motion which I know he would make, if he were on the floor, I move, in his name, that, when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL W. BRADY.

The Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Samuel W. Brady. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place his name on the roll of invalid pensioners, and pay him four dollars per month during his natural life, from the 1st January, 1850.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

THOMAS CROWN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of Thomas Crown, which proposes to direct the Third Auditor of the Treasury to ascertain the damages sustained by Thomas Crown, by reason of the refusal of the War Department to execute a contract entered into by him with Captain George Blaney, on the part of the Government, on the 16th of March, 1826, and to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the damages thus ascertained, to an amount not exceeding $6,000.

Mr. BRIGHT objected to the consideration of the bill; but he afterwards said: I objected to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Thomas Crown; but the Senator who reported it has explained its object to me, and understanding it now, I withdraw my objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

OBED HUSSEY'S PATENT.

The next bill on the Calendar was one—reported from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office—for the relief of Obed Hussey.

It proposes to renew and extend for the term of seven years the letters patent granted to Obed Hussey, December 31, 1833, for "a new and useful improvement, being a machine for reaping or cutting all kinds of small grain and grasses."

On the 31st of December, 1833, the petitioner obtained letters patent for a "new and useful improvement, being a machine for reaping and cutting all kinds of grain." This patent expired December 31, 1847. On the 20th day of December, 1847, he applied to the board of extension for a renewal and extension of his patent under the act of July 4, 1836. The board had established a rule, under the opinion of the Attorney General, that all such applications should be made at least sixty days before the expiration of the patent, in order that the notice required by the act might be given. His application was made but eleven days before the expiration of his patent, and, consequently, he could not give the notice; and the board refused to act on his application. Mr. Hussey alleges his entire ignorance of this rule, and of the decision or opinion of the Attorney General above stated, as his excuse for not applying in due season to the board. The act does not, in terms, require such notice; and the committee doubt not that the petitioner may have been misled by the phraseology of the statute; and they regard it as a satisfactory excuse for his omission. In this case, it is the more satisfactory, as the committee do not entertain the least doubt that Mr. Hussey would have obtained an extension of his patent, if he had applied in time to give the notice.

The petitioner's invention is of great value and public utility. Without any fault of his own, the patentee has not received adequate reward for his invention. Indeed, it appears he is quite a poor man, and has devoted several years to his invention, and that it has but recently attracted any extensive public attention. A contest was recently made before the Patent Office as to his being the true inventor of the machine, but it was decided in his favor, to the full extent that Mr. Hussey claimed.

Mr. NORRIS objected to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PEARCE afterwards said: the Senator from New Hampshire, a short time since, objected to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Obed Hussey. I understand him now to be willing to withdraw his objection to the consideration of that bill. I ask, therefore, that it may be taken up for action by the Senate.

There being no further objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It was reported to the Senate without amendment, and, on the question of ordering it to be engrossed and read a third time, Mr. NORRIS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to state, if it be in order, that Hussey had a patent for fourteen years, which was a very valuable one. He made an application to the Patent Office for an extension of it, under the law, for seven years more; but not being aware of the rule of the Department which required sixty days' notice, although he made the application before the expiration of the patent, he did not make it in season to give the sixty days' notice, and was therefore deprived of the right which he would have had under the law. The report of the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office is unanimously in favor of the bill. It is a very strong case, and one about which the committee have no doubt at all.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading, resulted—yeas 20, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brodhead, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Evans, Fessenden, Geyer, Gillette, Hamlin, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Stuart, Sumner, Wade, Walker, and Weller—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Bright, Butler, Clay, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, Norris, Rusk, Sidel, and Williams—14.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. It was then read a third time, and passed.

ISAAC L. BATTLE.

The bill—reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads—for the relief of the estate of Isaac L. Battle was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to release the estate of Isaac L. Battle, deceased, late of the county of Jackson, Florida, from any liability under a judgment heretofore obtained by the Post Office Department against him as guarantor on behalf of Charles Matthews and William King, late of that county and State, as bidders for a contract to carry the United States mail, three times a week each way, between Bainbridge, Georgia, and Pensacola, in the State (then Territory) of Florida, in the year 1842.

It was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CARRYING THE MAILS.

Mr. RUSK. There is a joint resolution which has been passed over by the Chair, which it seems to me is clearly a private one, though from its title it would not seem to be so. I refer to the joint resolution from the House of Representatives "explanatory of the second section of a resolution to establish certain post routes, approved July 12, 1852." Its object is to pay for the transportation of the mails over a certain route. The original resolution was intended to authorize the payment, but the Postmaster General decided that it did not for a particular time, and this resolution is to overcome that difficulty. It is clearly a private bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does it relate to particular contractors on a particular route?

Mr. RUSK. It does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The only difference then is, that the names are not mentioned.

Mr. RUSK. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then that resolution is now before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to construe the second section of the joint resolution mentioned so as to authorize the Postmaster General to pay a reasonable compensation to the persons carrying the mail from Valonia Springs, by the way of Nineveh and Coventry, to Oxford, and from Oxford, by the way of Coventryville, to South Bainbridge, in the State of New York, from the time the mail was directed to be carried on those routes up to the time the first contracts went into operation thereon, exclusive of what has been paid under the resolution, and at the same rate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

URI EMMONS'S PATENT.

The bill—reported from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office—for the relief of the heirs of the late Uri Emmons, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to revive and extend to December 27, 1856, the letters patent granted for the term of fourteen years, to the late Uri Emmons, a citizen of the United States, dated April 25, 1829, for a new and useful improvement in the mode of planing floor plank, and grooving, tonguing, and straightening the same, planing boards, straightening and planing square timber, &c., by machinery, at one operation, called the cylindrical planing machine, and which patent expired on the 25th of April, 1843, or such portion thereof as may be designated in a new specification by the executor of Uri Emmons; but any persons now engaged in the manufacture of this invention are to be allowed, freely and without charge, to continue to manufacture and vend the same to any persons who may be legally authorized to use the same under this extension.

Mr. NORRIS objected to the consideration of the bill, but subsequently said: At the request of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE,] who reported the bill for the relief of the heirs of the late Uri Emmons, I withdraw my objection to its consideration. All I ask of the Senate is to give me the yeas and nays upon it. I think it involves an important principle.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WALKER. From the reading of this bill I understand that this patent expired in 1843. That was eleven years ago; and it is now proposed to renew it, although it has lapsed for that length of time. I wish simply to get an understanding of whether I am correct or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That portion of the bill will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

"And which said patent expired on the 25th day of April, A. D., 1843."

Mr. EVANS. I beg leave to say that I shall vote in favor of this bill, because the effect of extending this patent will be to bring it into competition with Woodworth's patent, and the bill is so framed that both are to expire at the same time. Therefore, instead of granting a monopoly, this is creating a competition with a monopoly which now exists.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment; and upon the question of ordering it to be engrossed for a third reading, the yeas and nays were taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Bright, Brodhead, Chase, Cooper, Evans, Fessenden, Gillette, Hamlin, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Stuart, Sumner, Wade, and Walker—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Badger, Bayard, Butler, Clay, Douglas, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Norris, Rusk, Sidel, Toucey, Weller, and Williams—15.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and it was read a third time, and passed.

ROBERT WHITE AND OTHERS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill to authorize the payment of invalid pensions in certain cases.

It requires the Secretary of the Interior to pay to various invalid pensioners, officers of the Army of the Revolution, named in the bill, or if dead, to their widows, and if the widows be dead, to the children, the amount of their several invalid pensions, which was deducted or withheld from the officers under the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain surviving officers and soldiers of the Revolution," approved May 15, 1828. The persons named and the amounts are as follows: To Lieutenant Robert White, the amount of his invalid pension from March 3, 1826, to February 9, 1831; to Captain John Crute the amount of his invalid pension from March 3, 1826, to May 31, 1830; to surgeon's mate, Mordecai Hale, from March 3, 1826, to December 9, 1832; to Lieutenant William Wallace, from March 3, 1826, to December 31, 1836; to Lieutenant Philip Stuart, from March 3, 1826, to August 14, 1830; to General William Barton, from March 3, 1826, to October 22, 1831; to Ensign Clement Sewell, from March 3, 1826, to January 7, 1826; to Lieutenant James Gileatworth, from March 3, 1826, to May 31, 1830.

Mr. BRIGHT. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Yes, sir. The bill has passed the Senate two or three times, and I think the Senator from Indiana himself voted for it.

The Secretary read the report; from which it appears, that by the first section of the act of May 15, 1828, each surviving officer of the Continental line of the Army of the Revolution was to receive a pension, "to begin on the 3d day of March, 1826, and to continue during his natural life." The second section provides, "that whenever any of said officers has received money of the United States, as a pensioner, since the 3d day of March, 1826, aforesaid, the sum so received shall be deducted from what said officer would otherwise be entitled to under the first section of this act; and every pension to which said officer is now entitled shall cease after the passage of this act."

Previous to the passage of the act of May 15, 1828, several officers of the Continental line had, in consequence of the wounds they had received in battle, been placed on the pension roll as invalid pensioners; and having availed themselves of the provisions of that act, their pensions, as invalids, were deducted or withheld from the 3d day of March, 1826.

On the 31st of May, 1831, an act was passed to amend that of the 15th of May, 1828, which provides that the latter "shall not be construed to embrace invalid pensions, and that the pension of invalid soldiers shall not be deducted from the amount receivable by them under the said act."

Since the passage of the amendatory act of May 31, 1831, petitions have been presented to Congress from widows and heirs of officers whose invalid pensions had been deducted and withheld under the operation of the act of the 15th of May, 1828, praying for the payment to them of the amount so deducted or withheld; and on the 15th of June, 1836, two acts were approved giving the relief asked; one for the relief of the widow of Samuel Gibbs, and one for the relief of the heirs of Richard Anderson. Another similar act, for the relief of the heirs of Moses White, was approved July 26, 1848, and another on the 8th of January, 1849, for the relief of the heirs of William Evans.

From the legislation in the cases alluded to, it would appear that the Commissioner of Pensions did not place the construction upon the act of May 31, 1831, that was intended, or that the terms of the act were so carelessly drawn that they warranted a construction not intended, and the effects of which it required subsequent legislation to correct. If it were intended by that act that the sums which had been deducted and withheld from invalid pensioners, in consequence of their receiving the benefit of the act of May 15, 1828, should be restored to them by the Commissioner of Pensions, the act was not, perhaps, sufficiently plain and explicit, for he has construed the act to have simply a prospective operation; and hence the subsequent legislation in the individual cases above mentioned.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. MASON. I suggest that the title of the bill should be amended so as to conform to its real provisions. It should read, "a bill to pay invalid pensions to the heirs of Lieutenant Robert White and others."

The amendment was agreed to, and the title, as amended, was adopted.

WILLIAM DARBY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of William Darby.

It proposes to pay him $1,500 in full compensation for his labor and materials furnished in surveying and making a map of the Territory of Louisiana, in the years 1812 and 1813.

Mr. Darby was the first to furnish an accurate map of that portion of the territory of the United States lying west of the Mississippi, and bordering on the line between the United States and Spain, as fixed by the treaty ceding Louisiana to the United States. The materials for a map thus procured by Mr. Darby were those used by Melish, in his map published in 1816; but Darby was never remunerated for his services by Melish. Darby's contributions to our then scanty stock of knowledge, as to the geography of the country referred to, were of great value to the Government of the United States, and the Government has availed itself of his unpaid labors.

Mr. STUART objected to its consideration, but subsequently withdrew the objection, when it was renewed by Mr. HUNTER.

Mr. HUNTER subsequently said: I will not delay the vote upon the Darby case by my single objection. I will content myself with voting against it, but the Senate may decide as a majority see fit.

No amendment being proposed, the bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

SEYMORE AND BOYNTON.

The bill reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, for the relief of Calvin B. Seymore and Willard Boynton, surviving partner of the firm of W. & H. Boynton, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to require the Secretary of the Treasury to take proof of the amount and value of goods, wares, and merchandise, destroyed by the Creek Indians, May 15, 1836, in the town of Roanoke, Georgia, stored in the warehouse of Henry Jernighan, and belonging to the firm of Stafford, Seymore & Co., and W. & H. Boynton, and cause their value to be paid to Calvin Seymore and W. & H. Boynton, according to their respective interests. It appropriates $9,180 23 for payment of the amount.

On the 15th of May, 1836, Calvin B. Seymore and his partners had merchandise of the value of $5,980 stored in the warehouse of Henry W. Jernighan & Co., in the town of Roanoke, Stewart county, Georgia. The warehouse was taken possession of and occupied by certain troops in the service of the United States, and whilst in possession of the troops, they were attacked and defeated by the hostile Creek Indians, the warehouse burnt, and the goods taken or destroyed by the Indians. William Boynton, surviving co-partner of W. & H. Boynton, also, together with his partner, had goods, wares, and merchandise, of the value of $3,201 23, stowed in the same warehouse, which at the same time were taken or destroyed by the Creek Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that a verbal amendment is necessary in the title. It appears from the reading of the report, that Calvin B. Seymore is the person who is entitled, and also that William Boynton is entitled as surviving partner of the firm of W. & H. Boynton. The title should therefore be amended by inserting the words "and of," immediately before "William H. Boynton."

The amendment was agreed to, and the title, as amended, was agreed to.

WILLIAM VAN WART.

The bill reported from the Committee on Pensions, for the relief of the heirs-at-law of William Van Wart, deceased, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to pay to parties mentioned in the title a sum equal to forty dollars per annum, from March 4, 1831, to the date of the death of Van Wart.

William Van Wart, deceased, enlisted and served during the entire war of the Revolution. Among other important services rendered by him was the giving such information to Paulding, Williams, and Isaac Van Wart, his brother, as led to the arrest of Major André by them. He was for twelve months imprisoned in loathsome British prison ships, and upon his release again joined the army, and at the close of the war was honorably discharged. In 1834, he made application to the proper Department for a pension, claiming a service sufficient to entitle him to ninety-six dollars per annum. Owing to some deficiency in the proofs presented with the application, the Commissioner of Pensions decided that he was entitled to but thirty dollars per annum, and accordingly placed his name on the pension roll at that rate, to date from the 3d of March, 1831. For some reason, not fully explained, he never received the bounty land to which he was entitled. The prayer of the petitioners, his heirs-at-law, now is, that a special act of Congress may be passed, giving to them the difference between thirty dollars per annum, the amount received by the deceased, and ninety-six dollars per annum, the amount to which they claim he was entitled; also, that they may be granted the bounty land to which he was entitled, and for which they allege he applied.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JOSEPH NOCK.

The bill for the relief of Joseph Nock was announced as the next in order.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Joseph Nock $7,473 74; and to direct the Commissioner of Patents to renew and extend for fourteen years from the date of the passage of the bill, the patent obtained by Nock, and dated July 16, 1839, for a padlock, known as "Nock's lock."

Mr. WALKER. That seems to be a kind of combined case. I have never heard of it before. I prefer that it should lie over, for I wish to turn my attention to it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. If there be any objection to the second section, the proposition for the extension of the patent, it can be stricken out by unanimous consent. This poor man ought to have his money. The committee at the last session reported in favor of allowing him $20,000. We now report only for a little over $7,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin withdraw his objection?

Mr. WALKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Then I move to strike out the second section, which is the only one objected to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to say that it was my understanding, as one of the members of the committee who reported this bill, that we were not to report on the question of extending the patent, but to refer that question to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, as it was a matter with which we had nothing to do.

Mr. RUSK. I will not trespass on the rule of the Senate, but I will state the fact in this case. Mr. Nock made a contract with the Post Office Department in reference to a lock which he invented; the Department took an assignment of his patent and kept it from him, and did not reassign it. That is the reason why the second section of the bill is necessary.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the bill will go over. It is leading to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

HENRY KING.

The bill—reported from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims—for the relief of the representative of Henry King, deceased, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $1,817 36 to the legal representative for the services of King in the third Maryland regiment, and in the commissary department, during the revolutionary war.

No amendment being proposed, the bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

NANCY BOWEN AND SARAH LARABEE.

The bill—reported from the Committee on Pensions—for the relief of Nancy Bowen and Sarah Larabee, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Nancy Bowen, formerly the widow of Robert Brice, upon the roll of pensioners, and pay her ninety-six dollars per annum, from July 4, 1850, during her natural life; and also to place the name of Sarah Larabee, formerly widow of Barstow Newell, upon the pension rolls, and pay her ninety-six dollars per annum, commencing March 1, 1854, and continuing during her natural life.

Nancy Bowen's first husband, Robert Brice, was a seaman on board of the frigate Constitution, and was killed in the action with the English frigate Guerriere. As his widow, she received for ten years a pension of seventy-two dollars per annum, when she became the wife of Aaron Bowen, and her pension ceased by law. Bowen died in 1848, leaving her in a destitute and helpless situation, aged, infirm, and childless; and she therefore prays for a renewal of the pension allowed to her previous to her second marriage. The committee entertain the opinion that it is just and proper, in cases like this, where the widow has been left in a destitute and helpless condition, to renew the pension.

The case of Sarah Larabee, former widow of Barstow Newell, presents the same general state of facts, with the exception that neither the petitioner, nor her husband, ever drew a pension. On application to the Pension Bureau she was informed that her case was barred by her second marriage, notwithstanding she was a widow at the time of her application. The committee consider both of these cases as meritorious, and as they are deprived of the benefits of existing laws only by a too stringent construction, they deem it proper to report a bill providing for their relief.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

GEORGE DENNETT.

The bill, reported from the Committee on Commerce, for the relief of George Dennett, of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay seventy-five dollars to Dennett, for services performed by him in bringing up the arrearages of business in the naval office at Portsmouth, for a time when there was no naval officer.

Dennett was appointed naval officer for the port of Portsmouth; took the oath prescribed by law; entered upon the discharge of his official duties on the 13th of March, 1839. The office of naval officer was vacant from the 18th of December, 1838, until the 13th of March, 1839, when Dennett was appointed and entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office. It therefore became his duty after he entered upon the duties of his office, to complete and bring up the arrearages of business for the time it was vacant, and for that he has received no compensation. In pursuance of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, and from the fact that, in the opinion of the committee, Dennett is justly and equitably entitled to a compensation for that service, the committee report the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH SUMMERS.

The bill—reported from the Committee on Pensions—granting bounty lands to Elizabeth Summers, widow of Cornelius Summers, a soldier of the late war with Great Britain, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Elizabeth Summers a land warrant for one hundred and sixty acres, as provided by the act of September 28, 1850, for nine months' service of her husband in the late war with Great Britain; but, if any land warrant has been heretofore issued for the services of her husband, the number of acres thereby granted shall be deducted from the number of acres to be allowed under this bill.

Cornelius Summers served in the war of 1812, was paid for eight months twenty-eight and one half days' service, and was honorably discharged. The act of September 28, 1850, provides that any person serving in that war, who enlisted for twelve months, or during the war, and actually served nine months, shall be entitled to one hundred and sixty acres of land.

The application of the widow for land in this case was admitted for eighty acres, the amount allowed for four months' service, but as she failed to prove nine months' service by one day and a half, and also failed to prove that her husband enlisted for twelve months, one hundred and sixty acres could not be allowed her by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. She now prays Congress to pass a special act, granting her one hundred and sixty acres of land for her husband's services, alleging in her petition that he was in captivity after Dudley's defeat for some time, how long she does not remember, and that he served as a substitute for one Gray a term of six months, from the 1st March, 1814, to the 1st September of the same year, making in all over one year. These latter statements, however, are not proved by any papers presented with the petition. The service proved by the certificate of the Third Auditor, being within one and a half days of the term of nine months, taken together with the strong probability of further service, seems to the committee to make this a case justifying the special action of Congress in behalf of the widow.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JOHN McVEY.

The bill—reported from the Committee on Pensions—for the relief of John McVey, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of McVey on the roll of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, from July 4, 1852, during his life.

McVey claims to have served in the Kentucky volunteers, under General Shelby, in the war of 1812-'14. During his tour of service he became disabled, or wounded, in replacing the puncheons on the bridge over the river Thames, which had been removed by the British, by having the flesh torn severely on the inside of his left ankle, and the bone crushed. From this wound he has never recovered. The ankle became stiff and enlarged, and a running sore broke out on his leg, of a very malignant character, affecting his general health. Dr. J. Custer certifies to the present painful and severe character of the sore, and further states, that if a cure of the sore should be effected, McVey will still be a cripple, owing to stiffness of joints, and enlargement of the foot resulting from it.

Of the alleged services of the petitioner, there is no evidence offered, save his own statement and the hearsay proof contained in a petition in his behalf, numerous signed by citizens of Arkansas. No evidence of his enlistment, service, or discharge, can be found on the rolls on file in the Pension Office, nor elsewhere, within the search of the Commissioner or the committee. They are, therefore, compelled to agree with the Commissioner, who has disallowed the claim, on the ground that the proof of service is entirely insufficient. Dr. Custer only testifies as to petitioner's present condition. His reputation and skill as a physician, are certified by the clerk of the court for Hempstead county, Arkansas. It seems, by the indorsement of the Clerk of the Senate upon the petition, that it was before the committee in 1852, and a bill was reported in accordance with its prayer; but as no written report was submitted, the committee are not now aware of the grounds upon which the bill for his relief was based, and suppose it to have been merely reported, without any recommendation, for the consideration of the Senate. The bill, however, passed the Senate, but failed in the House. In view, therefore, of the former action of the committee and the Senate, notwithstanding their clear convictions of the insufficiency of the proofs in the case as presented to them, the committee report the bill for the consideration of the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. GIBSON.

The next was a bill from the House of Representatives—reported from the Committee on Pensions—for the relief of George W. Gibson; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to place his name on the roll of invalid pensioners at the rate of six dollars per month from March 9, 1852, during life.

Gibson enlisted as a private soldier in company B, first regiment United States dragoons, and was with the American troops in the late war with Mexico; he suffered much from exposure, which finally resulted in a liver complaint and chronic diarrhea, which completely disabled him. During the time the Army was in the occupancy of Chihuahua in Mexico, he was in the general hospital six or eight weeks. Since his return home in November, 1848, his health has been bad, and his general debility such as to three fourths disable him from obtaining his subsistence by manual labor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ASA ANDREWS.

The next was a bill—reported from the Committee on Claims—for the relief of Asa Andrews; which was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

By this bill the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are to be authorized and required to settle and adjust the accounts of Andrews, late collector of customs for the district of Ipswich, Massachusetts, for office rent and expenses, including clerk hire, and for the services of a deputy, during the time he performed the duties of that office, and to pay the amount found due, not exceeding the sum of $1,983 80.

Mr. Andrews was appointed collector of the port of Ipswich, Massachusetts, by President Washington, and continued in office until 1829. On making up his accounts at the Treasury, a balance was made against him of $921 92. In 1842 suit was commenced against him and his sureties to recover that sum in the district court for that district, and a judgment recovered. The case was carried by writ of error to the United States circuit court, Judge Story presiding, and the judgment of the court below was reversed on the ground of the refusal of the district judge to instruct the jury that Andrews was entitled to compensation for office rent, fuel, clerk hire, or deputy, &c.

Judge Story decided, that if the Secretary of the Treasury sanctioned the appointment of a deputy for that port, and the business required it, it would seem reasonable that the United States should pay some compensation for his services; and further, that the expenditures for office expenses were properly deemed incidents to the office, and therefore ought to be allowed. Under this ruling a new trial was had, and a verdict rendered that the United States were indebted to Mr. Andrews in the sum of $1,943 80 beyond the sum claimed by them. Application was made to the Treasury Department for the payment of that sum, but the Secretary said there was no appropriation out of which the Department felt justified in paying it, and he was referred to Congress. He accordingly presented his petition to Congress, and various favorable reports were made. The committee, in recommending the passage of the bill, do not intend to recognize the principle that the certificate of a jury is conclusive as to the indebtedness of the Government, but in cases like the present, where a competent court lays down the construction of law applicable to a case judicially before it, their opinion is entitled to respect.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

LEVY AND JARRERO.

The next was a bill for the relief of Jonas P. Levy and José Maria Jarrero.

Mr. CLAY. It does not appear from the Calendar that that bill has ever been referred to a committee.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I reported it in pursuance of the direction of the select committee on Mexican claims. The committee were unanimous in directing the reference of these two claims to the accounting officer. Sixty-three claims were referred to that committee. We report in favor of these two being reviewed by the accounting officer, and paid according to the direction of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. They thought the case of Jarrero particularly a very hard case.

The bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to require the accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the claims of Levy and Jarrero, for indemnity against the Government of Mexico, which were presented to the late Board of Commissioners on the claims against Mexico, and were rejected by the board.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CORNELIUS H. LATHAM.

The next was a bill from the House of Representatives—reported from the Committee on Pensions—for the relief of Cornelius H. Latham; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place his name on the invalid pension roll, at four dollars per month, from January 1, 1850, to continue during life.

Latham prays for a pension in consequence of disability incurred while in the military service of the United States. He enlisted as a private in company B, Captain Sumner, in the regiment of dragoons under Colonel Henry Dodge, on the first day of July, 1833, for three years. He was in hospital, at Jefferson barracks, prostrated by excessive diarrhea, followed by fever; and, on partial recovery, he marched with the troops to Fort Gibson, in which march he was again attacked and very much debilitated; while on guard in January, 1834, he was suddenly attacked with violent illness, and was removed to the hospital, where he was examined by the surgeon, whose certificate of disability he declares to have received. From the time of his discharge he has had frequent recurrence of his disease, and palpitation of the heart, so as to unfit him entirely for any laborious employment; and his constitution is now broken.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JOHN SHLY'S PATENT.

The next was a bill—reported from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office—to extend a patent heretofore granted to John Shly, of the State of Georgia.

Mr. CLAY objected, and the bill was passed over.

CAPTAIN CHARLES G. MERCHANT.

The next was a bill—reported from the Committee on Military Affairs—for the relief of Captain Charles G. Merchant; which was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Government to settle the accounts of Charles G. Merchant, brevet captain of the United States Army, for the second quarter of 1849, on just and equitable principles, without reference to the usual forms, so as to relieve him of the effect of the loss of his quarterly returns for that quarter; but the amount to be allowed him is not to exceed $215 69.

In the month of September, 1849, Captain Merchant was traveling on duty from Leona to San Antonio, Texas, having in his possession his returns in the commissary department, for the second quarter of 1849. In crossing a stream, the public wagon, containing his baggage, was carried off by the rapid current, and his papers were lost. Every exertion was made to recover the trunk containing the accounts, but without success. The amount of the account current, for which he is responsible on that quarter, was $215 69; all of which amount was expended in the purchase of provisions for a detachment of two hundred and seventeen recruits on the march from the coast of Texas to San Antonio.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

GENERAL STEPHEN MOYLAN.

The next was a bill—reported from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims—relative to the accounts of General Stephen Moylan; which was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct that the accounts of General Stephen Moylan, on the books of the Treasury, shall be balanced by the proper accounting officers, and that the fact that they have remained unsettled until this time shall be no bar to the recovery of half pay or bounty land by his heirs.

Mr. PRATT called for the reading of the report.

General Moylan was commissioned a colonel in the revolutionary army in the year 1776, and was immediately afterwards directed by Congress to raise and equip a regiment of light dragoons for the Continental service. Having succeeded in raising a regiment in pursuance of the directions of Congress, he continued to serve without intermission until the close of the war, sometimes commanding his regiment in the field, sometimes acting as quartermaster general, and at others as a volunteer aid to General Washington. Like many of his compatriots and fellow-soldiers, he entered the service of his country rich, and left it poor, when his services were no longer needed. One of the bravest and most intelligent of the officers of the American army, he enjoyed the confidence of Washington in a very high degree.

He was in most of the battles fought during the war, serving with distinction from Trenton to Yorktown, through the whole of the protracted and bloody struggle. In the course of the war, he had been intrusted with considerable sums of money for the purpose of equipping his regiment and paying the men, and probably for other purposes. As early as 1779 he was charged on the books of the Treasurer with $98,038 67; and at the close of the war this charge remained open against him, the sums paid by him never having been entered to his credit by the accounting officers of the Government.

The death of General Moylan, and the subsequent destruction of many of his vouchers, render it impossible to understand the true state of the accounts between him and the Government; but there are several facts and circumstances which make it probable that the Government was in his debt. Shortly after the war, several letters were addressed to him, urging him to make prompt exhibition of his vouchers, with a view to the settlement of his accounts. In pursuance of these letters, as it is presumed, during the year 1790, he filed his account, in which he claimed a credit of £35,899 10s. 9d., filing therewith as vouchers the accounts of several captains of his regiment, to whom he had paid considerable sums of money. Subsequently he filed a second account, in which he claimed £3,478 12s. 1d., the items of which were generally supported by vouchers. These sums united, amount to nearly $120,000, which would leave a considerable balance due to him.

Previously to the filing of these two accounts, the officers had been urgent in demanding a settlement. After they were filed, instead of such urgency on their part, they made excuses to General Moylan for their delay in the adjustment of his accounts, which he had been, from time to time, demanding at their hands. From this fact it may be inferred that both General Moylan and the accounting officers, believed there was a balance due him by the Government. And when it is remembered that he always bore the character of an upright and honorable man, and that he went into the service rich and left it poor, the presumption in favor of this view of the case is greatly strengthened.

The heirs of General Moylan do not ask payment of the balance which they believe was due to him by the Government, but only that the unsettled state of his accounts shall not be permitted to brand one of the most distinguished patriots of the Revolution as a defaulter, nor to stand in the way of the allowance, by Congress, of half pay to themselves. Whatever may be the case now, the man who, during the Revolution, appropriated public money to private use, stood dishonored in the face of the community. Seeing no reason to believe that General Moylan ever did convert to his own use any of the public money intrusted to his care, the committee feel called on to respond favorably to the prayer of the petitioners.

Mr. PRATT. I move to amend the bill by striking out the first clause of it, so that the bill shall read:

"That the fact that the accounts of General Stephen Moylan, on the books of the Treasury, have remained unsettled until the passage of this act, shall be no bar to the recovery of half pay, or bounty land, by his heirs."

The amendment was agreed to. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

FRANCES SMITH.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate adjourn. Mr. HAMLIN. I make an appeal to the Senator from Mississippi. I ask that we may take up the remaining bills on the Calendar which have come from the House, and pass them. Let us dispose of them, and they will be out of our way.

Mr. ADAMS withdrew his motion.

Mr. ATCHISON, (Mr. BADGER in the chair.) I suggest the propriety of taking up and passing all the private bills at once, by unanimous consent, for it comes to that in the end. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMLIN. We have several House bills here; and, if we act upon them, they will be disposed of. There is very little use in sending Senate bills to the House at this session. There is a great use in passing House bills.

Mr. PRATT. The House of Representatives, as far as I am aware, have not passed a single private bill sent to them from the Senate. I am, therefore, opposed to the enactment of all theirs, as far as we have gone on the Calendar; and I am doubly opposed to the selection of those which remain, in order to pass them before Senate bills.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator from Maryland has anticipated in part what I was going to say. I also desired to state that I have objected to the calling up of bills out of their order on the motion of the Senator from Ohio; but it has been suggested to me that there is one here which I think the Senate is bound to consider on many grounds which do not obtain perhaps in other cases. It is the case of Frances Smith, a female soldier of the Revolution. We propose to provide for her, and I am afraid the case will not be reached to-day in its order upon the Calendar. She cannot live to enjoy the bounty of the Government, if we do not soon act upon it, as she is now far advanced in years. If any gentleman wishes to learn anything about Mrs. Smith, I refer him to my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. SLIDELL. I trust the Senate will proceed in the order of the Calendar.

Mr. CLAY. This is for the benefit of a lady, a female soldier of the Revolution.

Mr. SLIDELL. Then I do not object.

The bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to pay to Mrs. Smith ninety-six dollars per annum, commencing January 1, 1848, and continuing during her natural life; but any amount which she may have received as pension since that date is to be deducted from the amount granted.

Mrs. Smith is the widow of William Smith, a soldier of the Revolution, who did good and faithful service during the war, and was clearly entitled, under laws of Congress, to a pension; but, owing to his ignorance of the fact, never applied for or received it, but did receive a pension of sixty dollars per annum from the State of South Carolina, for a few years previous to his death, which occurred in 1848.

After his death, his widow made application to the General Government for a pension; but owing to the great length of time which had elapsed since the war, she was unable to meet the requirements of the bureau respecting proofs of her husband's service, &c. Upon transmitting to the bureau the proceedings of the Legislature of South Carolina respecting her deceased husband's case, a certificate of pension for twenty dollars per annum was issued to her, to commence March 4, 1831.

She is now aged and indigent; and she appeals to Congress for an increase of the pension granted her, to the same rate per annum paid to other widows of revolutionary soldiers.

The act of July 29, 1848, grants pensions for life to all widows of revolutionary soldiers, married prior to 1800, at the same rate their husbands would have been entitled to under existing laws. The act of February 3, 1853, extends this provision to all married since 1800. From the papers presented to the South Carolina Legislature, it appears highly probable that the petitioner's husband served from 1779 to the close of the war, and was entitled, under the act of June 7, 1832, to a full pay pension, or ninety-six dollars per annum; and, therefore, his widow is entitled to that amount, admitting the case to be proved as required by law; and the committee find the papers to afford the strongest probability that the representations of the petition, and the original declaration of the husband, are true. Regarding her claim, in her right as widow of William Smith, as a just and meritorious one, the committee also find much in the further statements of the petitioner to commend her case to the gratitude and liberality of the Government. Mrs. Smith herself performed services of the most important and hazardous character, entitling her to be ranked among the heroines of that eventful period. In company with Mrs. Butler, (maternal ancestor of the present Senator from South Carolina,) she conveyed information to the American camp of the approach of the Tories under Cunningham, encountering the greatest peril to themselves in the act, paddling a canoe for four miles up a dangerous part of the Saluda river, exposed to detection and death at the hands of the partisan enemy. At various times she conveyed information to the American Army of the movements of the British and Tories; also protected and nursed wounded and sick soldiers. At one time she was pursued and captured while returning from giving information to the Americans, and only released after being ordered to the British camp.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

Mr. STUART. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate concurred in the report of the committee of conference, on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the resolution in relation to the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the question will be taken on it now.

Mr. SUMNER. I would inquire of the Chair whether that motion is in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When was the vote taken?

Mr. GWIN. Last Saturday.

Mr. WELLER. Then how can the motion to reconsider be submitted to-day?

Mr. SUMNER. I submit to the Chair whether it is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not in order. The vote was taken on Saturday last. According to the rules of the Senate, a motion to reconsider can only be made on the day on which the vote is taken, or on the next two successive legislative days. Saturday was one day; on Wednesday the Senate met and adjourned; on Thursday the Senate met and adjourned, so that the three days are up—Saturday, and the two succeeding days—and the motion cannot now be received.

Mr. STUART. I shall take an appeal from the decision of the Chair. My recollection of the rule is, that the motion can be submitted within three days after the vote is taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is entirely mistaken. The rule is, that the motion must be made on the day on which the vote is taken, or on either of the two succeeding legislative days.

Mr. ADAMS. Let the question be taken on the appeal; we will sustain the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan take an appeal?

Mr. STUART. I desire to let it lie over until Monday; then we can have a quorum, and perhaps I may not want to press it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule will dispose of the question to the Senator's own satisfaction.

The Secretary read the rule, as follows:

"Nor shall any motion for reconsideration be in order, unless made on the same day on which the vote was taken, or within the two next days of actual session of the Senate thereafter."

Mr. STUART. It is too late, then.

G. W. TORRENCE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill to provide a pension for Sergeant G. W. Torrence, in which they asked the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. WELLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up that bill for consideration now, and have it put upon its passage. It has been under discussion in the military committee here.

The bill was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct that Sergeant G. W. Torrence, of Captain Fairchild's company of Louisiana mounted volunteers, be placed upon the pension roll at twenty dollars per month, to commence April 4, 1854.

Mr. WELLER. I have already stated that this subject has been before the Committee on Military Affairs. This man performed extraordinary services at the National Bridge during the Mexican war. If any Senator will take the trouble to look into the statement of the facts made in the House, in the shape of a report, he will see that his services were of a very gallant and distinguished character. The committee, however, in the House of Representatives, simply placed him on the pension roll at the highest rate of pensions. The Committee on Military Affairs of this body felt disposed to recommend that a still larger compensation be allowed; but we are now disposed to take the bill as it comes to us from the House.

Mr. PEARCE. I would like to know whether the rate of pension proposed is that which is generally allowed a sergeant?

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. No, sir; it is that of a captain.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think I can satisfy the Senator from Maryland in a moment that this is just such a case as ought to be provided for. This gentleman rendered extraordinary services, and displayed extraordinary gallantry, at that bridge, and suffered more than any man I ever heard of. As appears from the proof submitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, he was utterly disabled, and is now a cripple for life. He spent $12,000 in securing his life; that is, in having his wounds properly attended to, and from other necessary expenses growing out of his sufferings in the war. He came before the committee, and asked them to reimburse his expenses. His gallant conduct, and the sufferings he had undergone, appealed strongly to our feelings, and we felt that it would be right to reimburse him, if we could do so without establishing a dangerous precedent. We could not do it, although every member of the committee felt it was a case appealing strongly to the benevolence and charity of the country. The best thing we could do was to recommend the payment of the largest amount possible; and I know the heart of the Senator from Maryland will respond to the feelings which actuated us.

Mr. PEARCE. My objection is merely this: that if we give this man a higher rate of pension than is allowed to others of the same grade in the service, we shall make an exception to the general law, and it may be looked upon as an invidious discrimination. I suppose the man is disabled for life; but it matters not whether his conduct was peculiarly gallant or ordinarily gallant. Gentlemen deeply interested in him claim an amount more than double that which the law allows others who suffer equally. I do not know of any principle upon which we can rely to justify ourselves in giving one man double the pension which another of the same grade in the service receives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator submit any amendment.

Mr. PEARCE. The ordinary rate, I believe, is eight dollars a month. This bill proposes to give twenty dollars; I move to amend it by reducing it to eight dollars.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President—

Mr. ATCHISON. I must call the Senator to order. This is not a day for debating private bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Discussion is out of order.

Mr. DIXON. Is the question upon the motion made by the Senator from Maryland to amend the bill by inserting eight dollars instead of twenty dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question.

Mr. DIXON. I understand the Senator from Maryland to say that eight dollars is the sum agreed upon by the Government to be paid for the loss of a limb and for the loss of all a man's limbs, or—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would apprise the Senator from Kentucky that except by unanimous consent, no debate is in order. The Senator from Missouri objects to the discussion of this question.

Mr. DIXON. I understand the Senator to say that for all the damage a man may sustain, he is only to be paid eight dollars a month. That is to cover the loss of everything, and embraces his leg, arm, or any other member. I will not say a word on this subject if any member objects.

Mr. ATCHISON. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. DIXON. I understand the suggestion of the Senator applies to every limb a man has. He may lose all his limbs. He may be rendered perfectly impotent, and eight dollars is the sum that compensates him for it; and that is the price the Government is to pay to old soldiers who render all these services to the country, and become totally disabled in doing so. All I have to say is that if that is the sum, it is too little. If in this case an extraordinary damage has been sustained, as we are informed by the Senator from Tennessee, why, sir, it is an exception to the general rule, and ought to be liberally provided for. I am for giving the largest sum possible, and I shall vote against the amendment which is offered by the Senator from Maryland, to reduce the amount.

Mr. PEARCE. I must ask leave of the Senate to say a few words in reply to the Senator from Kentucky. The Senator has either misunderstood me, or perverted my meaning.

Mr. DIXON. I certainly did not mean to do so.

Mr. PEARCE. I did not say that we were not to pay a man for the loss of all his limbs. What I have said is this, that we have a general system of pension laws, and according to that system, it is our custom, and the law requires, that we should pay a man so much for a total disability. We do not look at the character of the disability any further than to ascertain whether it is total. The general law requires that we shall give to a man in the rank occupied by this man, who incurs a total disability, a pension of eight dollars a month; and then what I said was, that it is altogether wrong, unjust, and partial to give to one man who has incurred a total disability a pension two and a half times as great as we give to another in the same rank. Whether it is right for Congress to restrict the pensions in the case of total disability to eight dollars a month, for those in this branch of the military service, is a question I do not undertake to meddle with; but we have adopted a general system, and if there is any propriety in adopting such a general system there is obviously a strong propriety in adhering to it. If you do not adhere to it invariably, you make "fish of one and flesh of another;" and it depends upon the weight of the influences brought to bear upon Congress, whether a party is to get a pension under the general system, or to receive that which the bounty of Congress, and the patriotic impulses of the moment may induce them to give. You know, sir, how those impulses vary; and it is precisely to guard against that evil that our pension laws are adopted; and I think the system should be equal and adhered to. I see no cause for altering these pensions. I do not know what this man's disability is. I do not know whether he has lost one limb, or all. If he has lost a single limb, I should vote against this mode of proceeding. If you undertake to pay all the members of the Army for the loss of each limb, you would soon beggar the Treasury. What I do say is, you have a general system, and I think it ought to be adhered to until it is altered by a general law.

Mr. DIXON. I have not misunderstood the Senator very materially. He stated that if a man is totally disabled, his pension is eight dollars per month. I then said that it embraced the loss of a limb, and the loss of every limb.

Mr. PEARCE. That is the consequence of the system.

Mr. DIXON. That is the consequence of the system. Then, sir, I mean to say, and I do say, that eight dollars per month for the loss of all a man's limbs, is not enough; it is too little. And I mean, also, to say that because the general system allows those who have been subjected to a total disability in the service of their country, but eight dollars per month, is no reason why the Senate should not do justice when a case comes before it, and when it has power and jurisdiction over the case. That is what I mean to say.

For my part, I have never considered myself bound by any general system. If the law, as it already exists, binds me as a Senator, there is no use in legislating upon any private bill. If I am to be bound in the votes I give, because you have established a general system which is wrong, there is no use in our attempting to legislate on any claim which comes before us. I am governed by no such principle as that. I mean here to act upon every case as it presents itself to me, according to what I think is right; and if the general system embraces it, I will take it out of the general system. Why, sir, when a peculiar case comes before the Senate, appealing to us in behalf of one who is totally disabled, in behalf of one who has rendered important service to the country, in behalf of one who has made such sacrifices, as that he never can be compensated for them, it is strange, indeed, that a Senator should rise up and say, because you have established a general system which limits the allowance to be paid to a man who has become totally disabled, therefore you are not to allow something to alleviate the wretched and unfortunate condition of him who is totally disabled in the service of his country.

I act upon no principle of that sort. Impelled by every feeling of my heart, I will vote for every cent that may be proposed by the committee, for a man who sacrifices so much for his country. Not to do so is at war with the principle on which every Government exists. Why, Mr. President, look to other nations, and see what their policy has been in regard to those who have made sacrifices for their country. What is the policy of England? What is that of France? Why, sir, are not monuments starting up in every portion of those great Kingdoms to perpetuate to the latest posterity the noble deeds of those who have made sacrifices for their country? And yet, sir, when we are appealed to, in a case of this kind, for a man who has lost his limbs in the service of his country, who has been broken down in fighting its battles, in order to enable him to make a subsistence, and to keep his family from perishing, Senators cry out that it is wrong, that it will be making "fish of one and flesh of another." Sir, I am for making flesh of all. I am willing to change the general system. The amount which it allows is too little. The Government has plenty of money; and it is time that it should act with some character of liberality at least towards its own citizens.

Mr. WELLER. I only desire to say one word, to assign the reason why I ask for the passage of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WELLER. I claim that I have the floor.

Mr. PRATT. If any gentleman can stand up all the time and claim the floor, that may prevent my motion.

Mr. WELLER. I have been recognized by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the Senate will, by unanimous consent, permit me to move to reconsider the vote on the passage of a bill.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The bill was then reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ISAAC L. BATTLE.

Mr. RUSK. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill for the relief of the estate of Isaac L. Battle, was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. I move that the bill lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 7, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. JOHN J. TAYLOR, of New York, a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in the place of Mr. GILBERT DEAN, resigned.

The SPEAKER. The question first in order is upon the motion submitted by the gentleman from South Carolina, on yesterday, to reconsider the vote by which the civil and diplomatic bill was rejected.

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman from South Carolina give way for a moment to allow me to report a bill and accompanying papers, for the purpose of having them recommitted to the Committee on Commerce and printed?

Mr. LETCHER. What is the bill?

Mr. FULLER. It is a bill for the erection of certain custom-houses.

Mr. LETCHER. I object.

Mr. FULLER. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw his objection.

Mr. LETCHER. The custom-houses have sunk one bill already, and I do not want them to sink another.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to yield me the floor for a moment, that I may introduce a resolution which I ask to have read for the information of the House.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

SATURDAY, JULY 8, 1854.

NEW SERIES.....No. 103.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That on and after the 10th of July instant, the House of Representatives will assemble for the transaction of business at eleven o'clock, a. m.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask the consent of the House to consider the resolution now, as the time for the final adjournment is near at hand.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I object, as I think a better arrangement can be made than that presented by the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I have no objection to making the time of meeting ten o'clock instead of eleven o'clock, if the gentleman would prefer it.

Mr. JONES. I object to the resolution in the form in which it is now presented.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will the gentleman from New York suggest the amendment which he would prefer?

Mr. JONES. I am willing to state to the House the reasons for my objection to the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama. If we commence our sessions at eleven o'clock, I am satisfied that the physical strength of the members who compose this House would not enable them, at this time of the year, to go through with a session of five or six hours with safety to themselves, nor do I think the exigencies of the case demand it. I think a better arrangement would be to meet at nine o'clock in the morning, take our dinner at two o'clock, and then come together in the evening at six or seven o'clock, and spend three or four hours more. I am as able to endure a continued session of six or eight hours as any other individual here; but I know I cannot do it with safety to myself, and therefore I shall give a vote against it.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The House then proceeded to consider Mr. ORR's motion to reconsider the vote by which the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill was rejected yesterday.

Mr. ORR. The action of the House yesterday in rejecting the civil and diplomatic bill, and which I have made a motion to reconsider, did not excite any great surprise in my mind.

I suppose there can be no question on the minds of the members of this House as to the reason for what would seem to be an extraordinary vote, namely, the rejection of the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. I have no doubt in my own mind that that result was produced by incorporating in that bill appropriations amounting in the whole to some five, or six, or seven hundred thousand dollars for certain custom-houses. I was opposed to these custom-house appropriations myself, and nothing but the pressing necessity and urgency of passing the bill would have induced me to have supported it with these custom-house appropriations incorporated in it.

I do not propose now to enter into any general debate. I think the time has come when we should go to voting and stop speaking. The plan which I have in view, after consultation with some friends, for the purpose of relieving the House from the embarrassing condition in which it finds itself, is this: I propose, if the motion to reconsider the vote rejecting the bill prevails, to move then to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. If this latter motion prevails, then some gentleman on the floor, who voted in favor of incorporating the custom-house appropriations into this bill, will be prevailed upon, I trust, to move to reconsider that vote.

[Laughter, and a cry of "Are you sure of that?"]

I cannot give any especial guarantee to that effect. But I can say to the House that I have no doubt in my own mind, if the two motions which I have indicated prevail, that a motion will be made by some gentleman on the floor to reconsider the vote by which the custom-house amendments were put upon the bill.

Mr. PRESTON, (interrupting.) If the gentleman from South Carolina will allow me, I will inquire of him whether there is any certainty that any gentleman can get the floor who will move to reconsider the vote by which the custom-house amendments were adopted?

Mr. ORR. Yes; that is a privileged question, to be made, as the gentleman from Kentucky knows, at any time.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I would inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina whether it would not be more advisable, if this vote rejecting the bill be reconsidered, then to move—should such motion be in order—to recommit the bill to the Committee of Ways and Means? There would not be any necessity, I take it, to go through the course indicated by the gentleman from South Carolina. If the Committee of Ways and Means take the bill back, I presume they will be able to put it in whatever shape they may think best calculated to meet the views of the majority of the House, and to advance the public interests. By reconsidering the vote rejecting it, this course can be adopted.

Mr. ORR. I am satisfied that there is a majority of the House willing to vote for the passage of the bill, were the custom-house appropriations not incorporated in it; and I think that the plan which I have indicated is the shortest plan that the House can pursue to attain the desired result.

This is an important bill. If you do not pass it, you stop the wheels of Government. Every civil officer of the Government, from the President down to the lowest subordinate, is depending for his salary this year on the passage of the bill.

Mr. PRESTON. If the gentleman from South Carolina will allow me, I will make a suggestion, inasmuch as I am as desirous to pass this bill as he is. If the plan he suggests be adopted, we will have to go back again to where we commenced. If we turn and support the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected yesterday, the object can be attained in a simpler manner. The bill lacked but three votes yesterday to be carried, and I hold that the bill can be passed as it stands; because it was not on the subject of the custom-house amendments that it was defeated. But if we go beyond that simple means of reconsidering the vote, we will get the bill involved in all the difficulties in which it has been involved from the beginning of the session. These custom-houses, I contend, are the only things which have given the bill the strong support it has received.

Mr. ORR, (interrupting.) If my friend from Kentucky would allow me, I would suggest that the custom-house appropriations did not seem to give much strength to the deficiency bill.

Mr. PRESTON. I believe the second deficiency bill was more odious than the first. I hope the friends of the custom-houses—for I will be perfectly frank with the gentleman—will vote to give the gentleman the first reconsideration he desires. But we want the bill to pass as it is now, or let a new bill come up. We do not desire to go beyond the first motion to reconsider. The Government officers have recommended these custom-houses; the Senate have recommended them; this House has recommended them, and we have discussed them all, article by article, and clause by clause, twice; and we have voted upon them, by yeas and nays; and the bill finally came within three votes of passing. Now, if the gentleman will obtain but three votes upon that side of the House, among the friends of the Administration, the bill will pass. But if that cannot be done, we shall be placed back where we were two months ago.

Mr. ORR resumed the floor.

Mr. McMULLIN, (interrupting.) I would like, with the permission of the gentleman from South Carolina, to inquire of him whether there is any gentleman in the House who will move the consideration indicated by him, provided the gentleman's first two motions to reconsider prevail?

Mr. MATTESON. Is the gentleman in order?

The SPEAKER. Debate is in order, if the gentleman from South Carolina has yielded only for an explanation. The question of order will depend upon the limit of debate in which the gentleman proposes to indulge.

Mr. McMULLIN. It is not my purpose to trespass either upon the courtesy of the gentleman from South Carolina, or upon that of this House. It is necessary that this House should pass a proper and legitimate appropriation bill; but I tell the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] as also the gentleman from South Carolina, that if they will attempt to clog this bill with amendments, as they did the deficiency bill at the earlier period of this session, I trust, for one, that there will be firmness and independence enough in the members of this House to defeat it again. If all our friends had been here—in other words, if the House had been full at the time the vote was taken, we would have killed the bill by a much larger majority than we did yesterday. And I trust we will do so again.

Mr. ORR, (resuming.) I hope I shall now be allowed to conclude the remarks I desired to make without further interruption.

With reference to the view thrown out by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] that the bill was strengthened by the custom-house appropriation, I have only to point him and the House to the action of the House upon the deficiency bill. Those custom-house amendments were voted into the deficiency bill, and when it came into the House from the Committee of the Whole, what was the result? Only fifty three votes were found in favor of it.

I say, however, to my honorable friend from Kentucky, that if all those who voted in the House to put the custom-houses into the civil and diplomatic bill had stood firm to the last, and had voted for the bill, there would have been no difficulty in passing it. The whole difficulty grew out of the fact that a portion of the House was voting into the bill amendments which were odious to a large portion here, and when they came to the test, they refused to vote for the final passage of the bill.

I desire to appeal to gentlemen upon this side of the House, and to gentlemen upon the other side, who do not desire to embarrass the operation of the Government: I say, I desire to appeal to them—in case we do get back to the custom-houses—to vote against putting them in the bill. Let us have a clean bill, one that is legitimate and fair. I have no cause of quarrel with any gentleman who voted against the bill on account of the custom-houses. But to put in such amendments is no legitimate mode of legislating. The civil and diplomatic bill should only include items provided for by general law, and such as are necessary to meet the wants of the Government. But the defeat of this bill must inevitably result in stopping the wheels of Government; and it may result in our having to rescind the resolution by which the two Houses have agreed to adjourn on the 4th of August.

In my judgment, if the bill is now defeated; if we commence a reorganization of the civil and diplomatic bill; if we are to send it again to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; if amendments are there to be offered to it, and debated again, you will not be able to get back to the point at which you now are in ten days or more to come.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. If the gentleman from South Carolina will allow me, I wish to know how it is that he can maintain that amendments have been put upon this bill which are odious to a majority of the House, when these amendments have every one of them been sustained by a majority of this House upon the yeas and nays?

Mr. ORR. I did not design to say that they are odious to a majority of this House. I intended to say that amendments had been put upon this bill which were odious to a large number of gentlemen in this House, without whose votes it cannot be passed.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have now made myself understood; and if the view I have expressed meets the approbation of the House, they will sus-tain me in the motion I have made. I move the previous question upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island. When the deficiency bill passed this House—

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remind the gentleman that the previous question has been demanded.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, sir, I hope the gentleman will withdraw the motion for the previous question, and allow me to make a remark.

Mr. ORR. I cannot.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I desire to ask a question, which I think will forward the business of the House. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his demand for the previous question for that purpose.

Mr. ORR. I cannot.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I move that there be a call of the House.

The motion was not agreed to.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question now being upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected, it was taken; and the vote was reconsidered.

Mr. ORR. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. PRESTON. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to yield me the floor for five minutes?

Several MEMBERS. Do not withdraw the demand.

Mr. ORR. I decline to withdraw the demand.

Mr. PRESTON. Very well; I am willing to go to the vote.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. PRESTON. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 85, nays 63; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Ashe, Baiksedale, Belcher, Bocoock, Boyce, Bridges, Brooks, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Curtis, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dent, Eddy, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Greenwood, Grow, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kerr, Kittredge, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Maxwell, Mayall, Milson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Olds, Orr, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Ready, Richardson, Thomas Ritchey, Rudin, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Vail, Vansant, Walker, Daniel B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Banks, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Buzz, Carpenter, Caruthers, Caskie, Corwin, Culom, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Disney, Eastman, Edmunds, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Giddings, Green, Aaron Harlan, Haven, Hill, Howe, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Latham, Lindley, Mace, Macy, Matteson, May, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Phillips, Preston, Puryear, Reese, Riddle, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Gerrit Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walbridge, Walley, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—63.

So the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I move to reconsider the vote by which the twenty-second amendment was adopted. It is the amendment which appropriates for the completion of the several custom-houses. I voted to ingraft that amendment upon the bill; and I am still in favor of the appropriations for the construction of these custom-houses; but, on examination, I find that of those who voted with me for the amendment there were seventeen, enough to have saved the bill, who voted against the final passage of the bill. Now I think that if anything is to be sacrificed, it is best that it should be the custom-houses for the present, rather than all the great interests involved in the measure. I call for the previous question on my motion for reconsideration.

At the request of Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, the amendment was reported by the Clerk, as follows:

Twenty-second amendment:

For completing the custom-house at St. Louis, Missouri $100,000;

For completing the custom-house at Mobile, Alabama, $65,000;

For completing the custom-house at Cincinnati, Ohio, $40,000;

For completing the custom-house at Louisville, Kentucky, $40,000;

For completing the custom-house at Bangor, Maine, $20,000;

For completing the custom-house at Bath, Maine, $20,000;

For completing the custom-house at Wilmington, Delaware, $12,000; and

For purchasing a site for a custom-house at Providence, Rhode Island, $24,000.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Does not the twenty-second amendment also embrace the appropriations for the custom-houses at Richmond and New Orleans?

The SPEAKER. It does not. These custom-houses are provided for by separate amendments.

Mr. LILLY. Does the amendment embrace appropriations for the marine hospitals?

The SPEAKER. It does not. Appropriations for the marine hospitals are also provided for by separate amendment.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. Motions were made to reconsider the votes by which the amendments appropriating for the custom-houses referred to by the gentleman from Alabama were adopted, and these motions to reconsider were laid upon the table; therefore, it is not now in order to again reconsider.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I call to order. I insist that the call for the previous question is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. Interrogatory is in the nature of debate, and objection being made, the Chair must restrain gentlemen from further questioning.

Mr. WENTWORTH. The record of the House will show whether the motions to reconsider the amendments for the Richmond and New Orleans custom-houses were laid upon the table or not.

The SPEAKER. Then it is for gentlemen who wish the information to look to the record.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. PRESTON. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 84, nays 68; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Baiksedale, Bell, Bocoock, Boyce, Bridges, Brooks, Chastain, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Curtis, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dent, Eddy, Edmundson, English, Faulkner, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grow, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kittredge, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Maxwell, Milson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Orr, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Richardson, Thomas Ritchey, Rudin, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Walker, Walsh, Westbrook, Wheeler, and Daniel B. Wright—84.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Banks, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Buzz, Carpenter, Caruthers, Caskie, Chandler, Clark, Corwin, Culom, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Disney, Eastman, Edmunds, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Giddings, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Henn, Hill, Howe, Johnson, Kidwell, Knox, Latham, Lindley, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Phillips, Preston, Riddle, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Gerrit Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Upham, Wade, Walbridge, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Yates, and Zollicoffer—68.

So the motion to reconsider the vote by which the twenty-second amendment was adopted was agreed to.

The question recurred on the adoption of the twenty-second amendment.

Mr. ORR. I demand the previous question.

Mr. SEWARD. Is it in order to move to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order to make that motion, provided the demand for the previous question be not sustained; in other words, the bill is in a condition to be recommitted.

Mr. SEWARD. Does not the motion to recommit take precedence of the demand for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. WALSH. Will the demand for the previous question cut off other motions to reconsider?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is sustained, it will extend to the third reading of the bill, and cut off other amendments.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to ask the gentleman from South Carolina to withdraw his demand for the previous question, so that I may be enabled to make a very few remarks; and I promise not to exceed three minutes. I should like to put the House in possession of the reasons why I desire—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is not in order, as the demand for the previous question is not withdrawn. The Chair will state for the information of the House, that if the previous question be seconded, and the main question ordered to be put, the vote will be first taken on the adoption of the amendment, the reconsideration of the vote by which it was adopted having been this moment ordered; and then on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Then can other amendments be reconsidered?

The SPEAKER. They cannot.

Mr. SMITH. Can other distinct propositions be considered?

The SPEAKER. They cannot.

Mr. WALSH. What will be the condition of the appropriations for marine hospitals?

The SPEAKER. The Chair again states that the previous question will cover the amendment now pending, and also the ordering of the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island. I desire to ask a question of the Chair. Are there any appropriations for custom-houses in this bill now, or are they all stricken out?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that there are appropriations for one or two custom-houses still in the bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I must confess that I do not yet distinctly understand the Chair.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. SMITH. I understand that the proposition is—

The SPEAKER. It is the duty of the Chair to explain to the body the information asked by the gentleman from Virginia. If the main question be ordered, the House will be brought to vote, first on the pending amendment, and then on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and it will completely cut off any other amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Then I will vote against ordering the main question.

The SPEAKER. It has been the practice of the House to reconsider votes taken under the operation of the previous question. But that has already been done. It was done during yesterday. The House has reconsidered the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading. Again, it has reconsidered the vote on which one of the amendments of yesterday was adopted. Now, if the demand for the previous question be sustained, it brings the House to vote on the pending amendment, and then upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and it will, under the circumstances, in the opinion of the Chair, cut off all amendments in the nature of a reconsideration.

Mr. BOCOOCK. I would like to make a suggestion, if the gentleman choose to take it.

[Interruption, and cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. BOCOOCK. In view of the condition of things, I wish to make a suggestion which gentlemen may consider. If we cannot call for the previous question now, we cannot call for it at all; and therefore this subject would be left open to debate as long as gentlemen might choose to debate it.

Mr. PRESTON. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Bocoock] be heard?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The question now being on seconding the demand for the previous question,

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. DENT. I simply desire to ask a question for the purpose of getting information. If the call for the previous question be sustained, will the bill have to be voted upon as it now stands?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. DENT. And if the previous question be not sustained—

The SPEAKER. The bill will then be open for amendments or recommitment.

Messrs. PRATT and RICHARDSON were then appointed tellers.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 69, noes 73.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Speaker, if the House will give me their attention for a short time, I will repay them by being very brief in what I am about to say. I intend my remarks shall be directed upon the subject of the custom-houses provided for in this bill. I will not turn aside to notice anything else; for my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] in his motion and remarks, seems to be reaching after them alone. I have been somewhat intimately connected, too, with these houses from the commencement of the session; and I desire, incidentally, to speak of that connection, and of some of the reasons which have influenced my votes in reference to them.

These custom-houses were reported in the deficiency bill early in the session, in sundry very brief clauses, each commencing "to complete," or, "to enable the Secretary to complete," them, and then enumerating them, and setting down the amount for each.

The House will do me the justice to remember that I opposed the appropriations in that form; and have ever since opposed them in that form; and I can assure gentlemen I ever will oppose them when they come in that form, because it leaves the whole subject under the unlimited control of individuals who have the expenditure of the moneys. I do not wish to speak harshly, but it leaves in the hands of Secretaries, and their agents and employees, the whole unlimited subject, without check or control on our part. It is incautious, improper, wild, and unregulated legislation, in my opinion, and has not yet, and never shall, receive my sanction. This House has uniformly been misled and deceived under that kind of legislation; and I told it so when this subject was first up this session. But, sir, I then declared my readiness to vote sufficient sums to complete these Houses, if the Secretary could be properly restricted, and the public interests sufficiently guarded by proper, discreet, and stringent limitations and restrictions, to be enacted with the appropriations.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman is mistaken as to matter of fact. These custom-houses were not reported in the deficiency bill. They were left out of that bill by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Speaker, I accept the correction of my friend from Alabama, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means; but these custom-houses have been up in so many shapes, and the subject turned over in such a variety of ways, that he will excuse me if I do not state the precise form in which these appropriations first made their appearance in this Hall. It is true, as the gentleman states, that the Committee of Ways and Means did report against placing these appropriations in the deficiency bill. I voted against inserting them in that bill in the language I have described, because, in that loose form, I thought in the hands of whoever might, for the time being, be Secretary of the Treasury, it would give him that wild, unregulated, and improper discretion that I have mentioned, by which the money might be expended without limitation or restriction, and whether it accomplished or completed the object intended or not.

But by way of justifying my course, then, before the House and the country, and reconciling it with my course on this bill, if any justification or reconciliation be needed, I ask leave to say, that as soon as the deficiency bill was defeated—and as alleged, on account of custom-house appropriations being in it—with my own hands, and exercising my own judgment only, I drew up a bill, which was adopted and reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, containing what I believed to be wise, salutary, and proper restrictions upon the expenditure of these moneys by the Secretary of the Treasury. I thought they were wise, salutary, and proper restrictions then. I think so now, and I have voted for these appropriations in this bill, because they are accompanied by, and made subject to, all the restrictions and limitations I have referred to; the discretion of the Secretary is properly and cautiously confined; and because, further, with these restrictions and limitations, they have had the double sanction of this House, once in Committee of the Whole, after very full debate, and again by yeas and nays yesterday. So, Mr. Speaker, it will be observed I have refused to let the Secretary control us in this behalf; and I have voted against these appropriations, without careful and salutary guards, plainly expressed, being thrown around the expenditure; and I have since voted, and shall probably vote again, for them, carefully guarded, and withdrawn from an unregulated discretion, and kept within the reach and control of this House, whose duty it is to look with great caution into all expenditures of the public moneys.

Now, Mr. Speaker, so much at present for my own position in reference to this matter; and let me stop here and say, that I desire to make no war upon this bill, or upon the Administration members of this House in reference to it. I think it is a liberal bill; perhaps it goes up to the verge of liberality. But, sir, in my judgment, it is not an extravagant bill. It contains many items that I should much prefer were not in it; but I voted for it yesterday when on its third reading, with these custom-house appropriations, accompanied by the limitations and restrictions I have mentioned, in it. And I shall vote for it again, without those appropriations in it, if the good sense and discretion of the House shall decide to withhold them. Sir, I am but one among a large number of honorable gentlemen here, all of whose discretions and judgments are, at least, entitled to equal weight with mine in this regard. It is not for me to attempt to embarrass or clog the operations of the Government, unless I find it engaged in what I regard as a violation of its proper or constitutional duty. It neither suits my taste, nor does it comport with what I regard as the fair discharge of my duties here. Nor will I attempt any child's play, Mr. Speaker, in reference to this bill, by voting one way upon it to-day and another way to-morrow. I will not give a vote upon it to-day totally inconsistent with the one I gave yesterday. I leave that, sir, for other gentlemen who see fit to engage in it, premising only, that if they feel they have voted wrong, it is never unwise to correct it when an opportunity offers.

Now, sir, to another thing. The only objection I have heard to-day to these custom-house appropriations, accompanied as they are by my limitations and restrictions, is, that they are not now in the right bill—they do not come in in the right place. This is the point to the objection of my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] Sir, let me ask the gentleman, and others here of his way of thinking, to look back through our statutes, and over our appropriation bills, since the first custom-house was ever built by this Government, and point me to a solitary case of an appropriation for such a purpose that was not contained in a general appropriation bill of this kind? Sir, they would not find one—not one—at least, in my searches after truth in that direction, I have failed to hit upon such a case. It makes no difference, in point of principle, in what bill they are placed; the question is, ought the appropriations to be made? and if they ought to be, place them in what bill you please, so that you limit, restrict, and control them in a proper, discreet, and wise manner. I voted against them in the deficiency bill for want of such limitation, restraint, and control; and I then advised the House that, under the circumstances of the case, I would vote for them if so limited, restricted, and controlled. It is quite immaterial to me in what bill they are placed, so be that the public good require them to be in any bill at all. I think it very well, and quite discreet, to keep them in a separate bill, but I do not regard it as indispensable, more especially as a separate bill could not now be passed this session; and they must be placed here, or not passed at all.

Now, sir, I cannot avoid saying to my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] who, in his remarks this morning, stated that this bill was an improper one in which to make these appropriations, and who, rather by implication, censured me, and those gentlemen who voted with me, for placing them in it, that when he undertakes to censure us for that, he censures every Congress who has provided means for a custom-house from the commencement of this Government down. Nay, sir, he censures himself, if he has ever voted for a civil and diplomatic bill since he has been here. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I say this in no offensive sense.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to another part of this subject, I beg the House to bear with me while I speak of that. As an original proposition—as a new question—I should, by no means, vote for all of these custom houses. I should, as a new and original question, deem it unwise, indiscreet, improper, and ill advised. Some of them, in my opinion, are not very much needed, and ought never to have been commenced. Some of them are in the wrong localities, and could very well be dispensed with. But, Mr. Speaker, whilst that is my opinion in reference to some of these structures, I can but remember, and I ask the House to remember, that this is not a case of inception of legislation; this is not an original, a first action of Congress on the subject; it is only following up—completing the business that has been begun by previous Congresses, and under previous legislation. The only question for us now is, whether, inasmuch as these works have been entered upon and been mostly completed under previous legislation, we shall, like a prudent proprietor, and a thorough business man, complete them properly; or, like a good for nothing, slack, lazy, shiftless, and inefficient individual, whose business is always down at the heel, and something like a ravelled-out old stocking, let these edifices go into dilapidation and decay? Whether we shall let the results of former appropriations for these subjects go into dilapidation and decay, waste away under the slow but sure operations of the weather, and what we have already done become useless, or shall we make these additional appropriations and finish them up in a thorough, workmanlike, and business manner?

Mr. COBB. With the gentleman's permission I would make a single remark. On the Calendar I find as the thirtieth bill, one embracing appropriations for the construction and completion of all these custom-houses. Now, while voting against these appropriations en masse as an amendment to this bill, and intending to do so hereafter, yet I am willing to vote for them when they properly come up, and are presented to us, each on its own merits. I have voted against these appropriations combined, and I shall continue to do so. Combined in an amendment to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, I shall vote against them. Here on the Calendar, thirty down, stands a general bill for the completion and construction of custom-houses and marine hospitals; and why not wait until we reach it?

Mr. HAVEN. The suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama shows him in a hopeful condition. He has got half right already; he is now on the right road, and I am not without hope that, before we reach a vote on this question, he will right up altogether. I see he goes for the bill with my limitations and restrictions in it. He, like myself, is opposed to placing these moneys under a kind of wild and unregulated discretion. Yet he is in favor of finishing up these works, and saving them from dilapidation and decay, like a prudent proprietor. So far so good. He knows, as we all know, that unless this is done now, and in this bill, it cannot be done this session. His great experience and good sense tells him all of that. And now that his discriminating mind is at work upon this subject, I have great hope—founded on his uniform propriety and appreciation of the fitness of things—that he will vote for closing at once, and forever, this vexed and uncomfortable question, and for keeping this Government from becoming a by-word and a reproach on account of its unfinished edifices, and its fickle and childish course of legislation.

I come back, sir, to the true point. Whilst I frankly confess I believe, as an original question, these appropriations would be, in some cases, unwise and indiscreet, still, that is not the question; that is not the point that presses upon us most closely now. The true question is, having entered upon the work, shall we finish it? I ask this question here again, wholly irrespective of the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. One question.

Mr. HAVEN. Will my friend wait a moment? I am coming to the point of his inquiry presently. He is shrewd enough to see what is to follow, from the premises I am laying down.

I was saying, sir, that, without regard to the opinions of the Secretary of the Treasury; without respect to any ulterior consideration, having entered on this business, had we not better close it up at once, and put the subject forever at rest?

Mr. JONES. I would ask the gentleman a single question.

Mr. HAVEN. I think I know what the gentleman from Tennessee is intending to ask me. He intends to ask whether I do not know that some of these appropriations are for buildings not yet commenced?

Mr. JONES. I was going to ask you no such question. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAVEN. Very well, then, I yield to my friend to state what it is he is intending to ask me; for I own, now, I cannot guess.

Mr. JONES. I was going to ask the gentleman whether he was not satisfied that there had been a sufficient amount of money appropriated to construct these buildings and to finish them? Have we not already appropriated enough to make them substantial and fire-proof, under the plans adopted by the last Administration? It was enough to make plain, substantial, fire-proof structures; and these additional appropriations are not for finishing and making them fire-proof, but for making them ornamental and magnificent.

Mr. HAVEN. I hardly know how to answer my friend from Tennessee, now I have found out what inquiry he intended to make. The most correct and proper answer I can give him is, that I cannot be satisfied in the way his question implies, because I have no knowledge—no evidence on the subject, except what I find in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury; and everything in that report is very direct and positive, precisely the other way from what the gentleman's interrogatory seems to imply.

Sir, all I know in reference to any of these custom-houses is what I find in our statutes, and in the Executive documents that come to us from the Treasury Department; and these documents assure me that the former appropriations, under whatever assurances they may have been voted by Congress, turn out to be wholly insufficient. What more can I say in reply to the question of my friend from Tennessee. I am not wise, sir, above or beyond what is written in these documents. What am I to know, what can I know, about these matters from any other source? I have never traveled up and down the Mississippi, along the coast of Maine, or around the Gulf of Mexico, to learn whether the Secretary of the Treasury has told us the truth in this behalf in his report. This is a matter that I am willing to leave to the Secretary of the Treasury, when there are no reasonable suspicions raised against him. In matters of this kind, which affect the internal interests of our country, and our domestic affairs, I will take the word of the Secretary of the Treasury when he sends us information, unless I know, or some gentleman here will suggest, he is a false or a dishonorable man, and untrue to his public duties. I hope the House will not deem me indiscreet or singular in this, although I was a little unwilling the other day, on the Mexican treaty bill, to take the Administration at its word, and vote $10,000,000 without a word of explanation, and under very grave and suspicious circumstances, on the face of the treaty, and resting in the almost universal belief of intelligent gentlemen here, to impeach the transaction, for the purpose of buying territory; where, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] told us, Kit Carson said a wolf could not get a decent living. Sir, under the circumstances of this case I differ from the pretended friends of the Administration on this floor; for inasmuch as nothing appears to impeach or question the integrity and fair dealing of the Secretary of the Treasury, I am quite willing to take his official word upon this point; for it is his business to communicate information to us upon this and kindred subjects. Whatever may be my political relations towards him, or other men, I thank my innate sense of propriety that I have not descended to that level where I am unwilling to trust the constituted authorities of the country in the ordinary commercial business of the country, within our own territory, as connected with dollars and cents.

Mr. Speaker, I fear that some of my friends near me are growing a little uneasy, from a desire to get the floor. [Cries of "No!" "No!" "Go on!"] But I know that the majority of the House are willing to listen a little further; for they would not vote for the previous question, when they knew I wanted the floor, a short time since.

I would like to direct the attention of gentlemen who are so irreconcilably opposed to these appropriations, and who, of a sudden, seem to have an erection of conscience on the subject of custom-houses, especially when provided for in a general appropriation bill, to page thirty of this very bill now under consideration. My friend from South Carolina says vehemently, that this House must vote down these appropriations, for it is not fit to place them in this bill.

Now, I will read an item in this bill, on page thirty, and ask the gentleman if he has gone back far enough in his motions to reconsider to quiet that awakened conscience of his:

"For continuing operations on the custom house at New Orleans, $395,000."

This, Mr. Speaker, is found in this general appropriation bill, and yet it is wholly overlooked, or blankly winked at, by my honorable friend from South Carolina.

On the same page, and only one line below, I find another nice and classic piece of composition, which is, perhaps, still more interesting to my friend from South Carolina. It is as follows:

"For continuing operations on the custom house at Charleston, South Carolina, $273,000."

Sir, in these two items that I have just read from this very bill, more money is appropriated for the two designated localities than is asked for to complete—not to continue—operations upon all the custom-houses and marine hospitals in this bill—more, sir, than is necessary to put on the mastic, or clapboards, and the slate or shingles, so as to keep out the bad weather, and make them all safe places for the keeping and deposit of the records and papers pertaining to the business of the Government, and the interests of citizens who live under it.

But to go a step further back, Mr. Speaker. I find in the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill of last year an appropriation of $100,000 for continuing the construction of the custom-house at Charleston; and the very next clause therein that same bill is an item of $324,000 for continuing the construction of the custom-house at New Orleans.

But, sir, I will pursue this unpleasant line of remark no further. It is a very different case from the one now under consideration; but the only difference, I believe, is, that the sums uniformly go up to hundreds of thousands, and the appropriations are for South Carolina and Louisiana, and not for Maine, or the northern or northwestern lakes, or western rivers. I will make no more invidious comparisons.

Mr. ORR. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. HAVEN. Certainly.

Mr. ORR. My friend from New York [Mr. HAVEN] ought to have more fairness than to make the argument which he has just been making to the House. How do these appropriations for New Orleans and Charleston get into the civil and diplomatic bill? It was by the action of that gentleman and the Committee of Ways and Means, of which he is a member, reporting these two appropriations in the original bill. That same Committee of Ways and Means, after examining the reasons which have been assigned by the Secretary of the Treasury in his estimates for the other appropriations to which I have objected, rejected them, believing the reasons assigned insufficient. Did my friend from New York move to reject in the Committee of the Whole the Charleston and New Orleans custom-houses? He knows I could not have made the motion, for I was occupying the Chair when the bill was considered. How do these objectionable items get into the bill? Not by the recommendation, but against the wishes, of the committee of which the gentleman is an influential member; and they were placed on the bill on the motion of an individual member not a member of the Ways and Means, and against their decision. His own committee sustained Charleston and New Orleans, and rejected all the others. I can understand why custom-houses are more necessary upon the coast than in the interior. Every gentleman familiar with the business transacted in custom-houses knows this statement to be true; and the Committee of Ways and Means perhaps acted wisely in making an appropriation for Charleston and New Orleans, and in rejecting the estimates for St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Louisville; for there is infinitely a greater necessity for custom-houses on the coast than in the interior. Every gentleman familiar with our revenue system, and its operations must know that the labor and responsibility is upon the offices on the coast, even where the importation is to be delivered in the interior; for the goods must be transhipped on reaching the rivers or railroads, and bonds for the payment of duties taken by the coast collector, which makes the officers in the interior mere agents to collect the duties assessed and secured on the coast.

Mr. PHILLIPS. May I ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question?

Mr. HAVEN. I am very desirous, Mr. Speaker, of hearing any brief explanation which the gentleman from South Carolina may wish to make. But as to my friend from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS,] I must ask him to be still for the present; he, being a friend to the custom-houses, has no right to speak here. I want to hear gentlemen who are opposed to them; that is the only way to find out and remove the difficulties in the way of these appropriations. My friend from Alabama, I insist, must, therefore, not interfere.

Mr. ORR. The Committee of Ways and Means reported this in the original bill. It was not reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union as an amendment at all. The House has taken no separate vote upon it. If it had taken a separate vote upon it, I say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] that I should have registered precisely the same vote with reference to the custom-houses at Charleston and New Orleans as I did with reference to the others; not that I do not believe the appropriations necessary for both these cities, but because I believe that the plan on which they have been projected is entirely too magnificent. I believe that they cost the Government entirely too much money. And I desire the gentleman from New York to understand that I am actuated by principle in voting against these amendments appropriating large sums to erect splendid edifices to beautify and adorn cities, and which the necessities of the service do not demand. Why, sir, there is not a member of the House who is more familiar than is the gentleman from New York himself, with the fact that since 1850 we have "completed" most of these custom-houses every year, the law declaring, in such bills as provides the appropriations, that "no part be used unless it will complete the building," and "to complete the house," &c. Every year there has been an appropriation made to "complete" these custom-houses. In 1850 they say: "Give us a particular sum; that is all that we require." In 1851 the statement is: "Give us a certain amount, and we will certainly 'complete it.'" The same song is sung in 1853; and now, in 1854, the same song is again sung, and we are asked to "complete them" again; and with all the guards put upon these appropriations in my friend's proviso, I fear we shall next year hear the same stentorian cry for more money to "complete" these same buildings.

Now, I have said to the gentleman from New York, as I said yesterday to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] that if he would make a motion in Committee of the Whole to take up the custom-house bill which he reported, and which contains these very sums, I would vote for its consideration; and if the custom-houses have sufficient merit to warrant appropriations being made for them, let them pass. But I say, do not load down the civil and diplomatic bill with these amendments, the effect of which is to embarrass it, and place many gentlemen here in a false position.

Now, one thing more—

Mr. HAVEN. Oh no! no!

Mr. ORR. I desire the gentleman to hear me on another point.

THE SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his right to the floor?

Mr. HAVEN. My friend from South Carolina [Mr. ORR.] would not withdraw his call for the previous question at my request a few moments ago—

The SPEAKER, (to Mr. ORR.) The gentleman from New York insists on his right to the floor.

Mr. HAVEN. Well, let the gentleman from South Carolina go on a little longer. I always am pleased to hear him.

Mr. ORR. I desire my honorable friend from New York to answer in candor whether it is just and proper for gentlemen here to vote these custom-house items in the bill, making it obnoxious to many gentlemen here, and, when they have thus crammed the bill, desert their own bantling in its last struggle, and vote against it on its passage? Is not such a policy disingenuous? If gentlemen will put in these items, they should feel bound to vote for the bill, and not against it, as many of them did on yesterday. Many of the gentleman's political friends yesterday voted for the custom-houses, and then refused to sustain the bill, attempting thereby to make the bill odious by their votes on amendments, and then throwing the responsibility on the Democrats of sustaining the bill made thus odious by their votes, or of rejecting it, and stopping the wheels of Government. My friend from New York, however, is, I am happy to say, not within that number—first voting on the amendments, and for the bill on its final passage.

Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Speaker, certainly, when I yield the floor to my friend from South Carolina, who has just taken his seat, I do so to the serious injury of my own interest. I have always listened to him with great pleasure, even when I know he is turning my positions; and I desire him to understand that when I hesitate to yield him the floor to speak against me, and for his section of the country, I do so only because of the fact that what he thus puts into my remarks makes such an unfavorable contrast for me, and what I say each side of him, that it always makes me regret my want of ability. He makes my speech nothing but a rough box, in which he incloses his jewels. But, sir, enough of this.

My friend from South Carolina now tells us that the great difference between the necessity and propriety of custom-houses at New Orleans and at Charleston, and those for Cincinnati and St. Louis, is, that the former are on the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic coast.

Ay, Mr. Speaker, that is the reason why. It has come out at last; for, "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." I feared some such disclosure. I should, perhaps, better say I expected it. Sir, my State is washed by the Atlantic, too; but that fact, I hope, makes no difference with me.

Mr. ORR, (interrupting.) If the gentleman from New York will allow me, I will explain, in justice to myself. The gentleman knows that every vessel from a foreign country, bringing goods for consumption to St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Louisville, must break bulk and be reshipped; for vessels from foreign ports do not ascend the Mississippi as high up as either of these places. He knows that nearly all the trouble and labor grows up out of the importation, examining the invoices, assessing duties, the taking of bonds for payment of duty, in delivering of goods in the interior, all which has to be attended to at the custom-house upon the sea-coast. All of them, I admit, are upon too magnificent a scale; more so than they ought to be.

Mr. HAVEN. The statement as to the mode of doing business at the river ports is familiar to me and to the House, and the only embarrassment I feel in commenting on my friend's statements, is, that, in doing so, I touch upon an old and trite subject, which the House knows all about, and with which I know I shall weary them.

The gentleman's remarks are quite true in reference to some of those places along the Mississippi. I do not institute any comparison; I did not intend to do so; but if my friend forces it upon me, he will excuse me for an inference unfavorable to his argument. I believe the gentleman will find that the money collected for duties at St. Louis, after vessels have passed by all the custom-houses upon the Mississippi below, swells up to an amount, each year, in the aggregate nearly as large, if not larger, than that collected at Charleston, where, for simply "continuing the construction of the custom-house"—for that is the language of this bill in reference to it—simply "continuing the construction of this custom-house," we have here an appropriation of $273,000 for this year alone.

Why, sir, there are some places besides those upon the Atlantic coast which have some connection with foreign countries! The little port of Buffalo, where I live, which is obliged to do its custom-house business, I had almost said, in a shed, has more arrivals of vessels directly from a foreign country in one year than the port of Charleston has in two, and more foreign tonnage also. And let me tell my friend, that the commerce of that little port alone is more than equal to one half the amount of the entire foreign commerce of this entire country. Sir, I speak advisedly, and not at random, I believe; and yet we are "whistled down the wind" when we of the North and Northwest ask some of these petty accommodations to do the business of this Government in; and we are told our business is to collect the money for this Government in the best way we can, and to keep our papers, documents, and important records safe and dry in a slab shed, or else let them perish; but let the Atlantic coast and the Gulf have custom-houses, safe, roomy, elegant—magnificent, is my friend's word to describe it—though it be at the cost of these immense sums a year which I have read from this bill. Sir, I do not complain at these appropriations; on the contrary, I have given them my vote.

Mr. ORR. Were there any appropriations in the bill for lake custom-houses?

Mr. HAVEN. My friend puts a very pertinent question. There are not, that I am aware of; but there ought to be.

Mr. ORR. Where, then, is the necessity of the comparison which the gentleman has made between Buffalo and other places?

Mr. HAVEN. The gentleman shall see the pertinency, if not the necessity, of the comparison.

Mr. ORR. The gentleman will perceive a very great difference between places inland, and places at which vessels arrive from foreign ports, without breaking bulk.

Mr. HAVEN. I suppose, sir, that the Committee on Commerce, or whatever committee approved originally of these custom-house grants and appropriations of which we are speaking, in this bill, selected the places for them that, in their judgment, had the greatest need of such accommodations; and if acting correctly on that rule, Buffalo has been so far neglected, with her pressing wants, as I have described them, what can my friend say of the necessity of these accommodations in places selected by reason of their great and more pressing necessities?

But, sir, my friend is always so very seductive in his arguments that I follow him wherever he leads. I would like, however, to have him square his last suggestion with the case of the custom-house of our mutual friend from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS.] His is a custom-house upon the Atlantic coast, or upon the Gulf at Mobile, and which does more business, I fancy, than the custom-house at Charleston. Why is my friend from South Carolina down upon that? I can speak for the Atlantic coast, I trust, as well as for the northern lakes and western rivers. And I plead as readily for this house for the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] as I do for the great Northwest.

By some kind of machinery—I leave it for this House to determine what—we voted into this very bill yesterday a large appropriation for completing the custom-house at Richmond. I voted for that, too, because it has been commenced, and must be finished or abandoned. I ask my friend from South Carolina how he can tolerate that measure in this bill? Is it because that is upon the Atlantic coast?

Mr. ORR. Vessels unload at Richmond without breaking bulk or opening their hatches.

Mr. HAVEN. How far is it from the sea?

Mr. ORR. I do not know; perhaps fifty miles. Vessels arrive there without breaking bulk, and without taking up their hatches; and the question of distance is, therefore, unimportant.

Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Speaker, I defer to my friend's superior knowledge of geography, as well as of custom-houses on the Atlantic coast; but I am of the opinion the gentleman may follow the water down from Richmond over one hundred miles, and still not reach the Atlantic ocean. But, no matter, Mr. Speaker; the point I started upon originally, and the one which was then at issue between myself and my friend from South Carolina, was not whether these appropriations were or were not necessary, as an original question. But the point he made, and on which I took issue, was whether these appropriations—conceding them, for the sake of the argument, to be proper—are admissible in this bill, or whether they shall be turned over to await the slow progress of another bill, in this sultry weather. My friend has led me off very artfully from this point, the true one he made originally, and I have allowed myself to follow him to other and different issues entirely. It has been his practice, this morning, when he found the point taken by himself to be indefensible, to lead me astray upon something else that offered him a better ground of defense.

But now I come back to the point at which I started. The question is: Is this a proper place, or rather an admissible place, to insert these appropriations?

It is not for me to say, under all the circumstances which surround these appropriations, whether they are necessary to complete these houses or not. I will not argue that question this morning. I will, for the present, at least, leave that to the honor and the word of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall, for my purposes, rely upon that until it is impeached, or I can perceive some ground to suspect him of being false to his great public trust. His statement that they are necessary is quite competent evidence for me, and quite sufficient, unless some gentleman here or elsewhere will gainsay it, or at least breathe an imputation against it. I repeat, the question between us, and the only one I will argue now, is, whether it is allowable, customary, or proper, to make these appropriations in this bill. The Committee of Ways and Means have found a place here in this bill for the Atlantic and Gulf custom-houses; and this House, without a word of objection or opposition, have allowed them to remain there. And this House has voted in the appropriations for Richmond. Why, sir, is not this bill as fitting a place for these custom-houses, for which I speak, as it is for the salt water ones? And I repeat, that, if you will go back, you will find that every appropriation that has ever been made for a similar object has been made in a general appropriation bill, and not in a specific bill. It is true, a bill providing specifically for these houses, and their completion, has been drawn by me, and reported, as I have already stated, during the present session; but any one, who knows anything about the machinery of this House, knows that it is impossible to get separate action this year upon that separate bill. It was not for any reason such as that which induced me to oppose these custom-house appropriations in the deficiency bill. It was for want of these restrictions to accompany them. But no such objection rests upon them in this bill. I myself drew these restrictions, limitations, conditions, and guards, and drew them so that the Secretary of the Treasury could not overstep their limits and boundaries in the exercise of any claimed or assumed prerogative of his, without having the law staring him directly and squarely in the face, and so that, if he should overstep them, he could not have the plea of ignorance or uncertainty in the line of his duty in this regard, should he be brought to trial on an impeachment for violating its plain and obvious provisions. That is the proper ground on which, in my judgment, to place these matters; and with it I was willing then, and am willing now, to have them placed in this appropriation bill. I would not have voted for some of these as original propositions; but having been commenced, I do not think we should abandon them; it seems to me very bad husbandry. Sir, I do not understand how it is that economical gentlemen can blindly, and on a verdant faith, vote for millions to acquire foreign territory, barren rocks, and impassable deserts from Mexico, outside of this Republic, and yet find such unconquerable and stubborn scruples against voting this poor pittance for the benefit of the commercial and domestic interests of these United States. How can these things be, and not excite our special wonder?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I want to make a suggestion to the gentleman from New York; and to the other members of the committee. I have taken no part in this controversy which is going on, and which has been so ably conducted by other gentlemen. It will be recollected that early in the present session, the House, on my motion, called upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to all those custom-houses whose expenditures exceeded the receipts. That document has been furnished to the House; and if gentlemen will look at it, they will find that there are fifty, and probably one hundred custom-houses, in the country, which annually cost us more than all the revenue which is collected at them. It seems to me that this is an evil which should be remedied. I intended to move, and if the gentleman from New York will allow me, I will now move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee of Ways and Means, with instructions for them to report a provision abolishing all those custom-houses which, during a period of say five years—for it would be unjust to take a shorter period—had caused an expenditure for the collection of customs greater than the receipts at such custom-houses. You will find upon examination that there are custom-houses where the expenditure exceeds the receipts by more than ten to one. This is doing a pretty business. If a business man found he was losing a thousand dollars where he was making ten by an operation, would not he be likely to abandon it? I propose therefore, that the Secretary of the Treasury shall ascertain, and report at the next session of Congress, what custom-houses do not pay the cost of keeping them up. Let us abolish them, and we shall then have more money to spend for those which it is necessary for us to maintain.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. If the gentleman will allow me, I will suggest to him that in many of these places all the custom-house machinery is necessary to prevent smuggling.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have heard that objection again and again. On inquiry, I have come to the conclusion that there is not the slightest force in it. There is no reason on earth for keeping up a custom-house on that account. I admit that there is necessity for revenue officers at some of these points, to prevent smuggling.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. Will the gentleman yield me the floor for a moment to make a suggestion?

Mr. CLINGMAN. In a little while, when I have got through with the point on which I now am.

Mr. McMULLIN. I object. If the gentleman yields, let him yield altogether; but in my recollection he only holds the floor by the indulgence of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It may be that custom-house officers may be necessary at some points to prevent smuggling. They are not necessary at all these places. If they are, however, the Secretary of the Treasury can report that fact to the next Congress, which may determine whether or not it will keep up these offices there for that purpose alone.

The SPEAKER. With the permission of the gentleman occupying the floor, the Chair will inquire whether a motion has been made to recommit the bill?

Mr. HAVEN. It has not been made. I do not intend to allow it to be made while I am in the possession of the floor.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I only suggested that, if permitted, I would move to recommit the bill, so that the committee might have an opportunity to reexamine its provisions.

Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Speaker, it happens to be my fortune to be drawn out much longer in my remarks than I expected, by other gentlemen "pitching in," as the phrase is, as I go along. I do not intend, while I have the floor, to allow a motion to be made to recommit this bill. I intend to ask the House, with whatever feeble influence I have—and I know that it does not extend beyond the length of my own arms—to vote on this amendment immediately, and then to go to a vote upon the bill itself, and have the matter disposed of before the hour hand reaches three on the face of the clock. There is no use in delay. Sir, this voting and reconsidering, and voting again, in my judgment, betrays great infirmity of purpose on the part of honorable gentlemen here. Is it not a kind of child's play? I hope it will be abandoned.

But I only rose for the purpose of putting myself right before the House and the country, and allowing those gentlemen who have been rather closely crowded on the subject of these custom-houses, a slight hearing, though under most unpromising and discouraging circumstances.

Now, I am not entirely willing to yield my assent to the proposition made by the gentlemen who claim to be so exclusively economical in reference to this subject, although I claim to be as economical a voter as any man may well be in prudence, and ought to be in justice on this floor. Why should you, in all cases, and under all circumstances, abolish or refuse custom-houses, where less revenue is collected than is paid out, any more than you should abolish post offices under like circumstances, any more than you should abolish your courts and court-houses, (where you have any,) or any more than you should get rid of any other institution necessary in the proper management of the business of the country, and which costs money to keep it up? Why, sir, this is not a dollar and cent Government entirely. I would be frugal, and not prodigal, but I would not try and hide all the great interests, sympathies, and destiny of this country under a coined dollar.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The only object for a custom-house, that I know of, is to get revenue. Post offices are to enable everybody to avail themselves of the facilities of easy and rapid correspondence through the mails, &c. As I have already said, that, if there be any special reason for a custom-house at any one point, the Secretary of the Treasury can report that fact to Congress at its next session. But gentlemen will find, on inquiry, that there are a number of little custom-houses all along the coast very close to large ones; that they do no business at all, and that it would be no great hardship to oblige ships to go to the main houses.

Mr. HAVEN. I hear these explanations with great pleasure. Yet I shall not get through with what I wish to say, if I permit further interruptions; and I now give notice that I shall not yield the floor again to any gentleman until I have finished.

The suggestion which has been just made, it seems to me, will hardly "stand fire." I would ask the gentleman [Mr. CLINGMAN] whether he would have these officers removed from places which do not amply pay? Those places would be the very ones, after such removals, where goods would be smuggled, and the country cheated of its revenues. If you keep men at such places you must also have conveniences for them, headquarters, offices, &c. Now, sir, what I was going to add, when interrupted, and it will finish up what I have to say in reference to this matter, was, to ask the gentlemen of this House to come to a vote on these propositions. Let there be no more delay or indecision about it. All have made up their minds on it undoubtedly. I have made up my own mind days ago; and, while I claim to be, and think I am, prudent in reference to things of this class, yet these custom-houses, having been entered upon and partially completed, as I have already said, I am willing to vote these appropriations, less in amount than those in this bill for New Orleans, Charleston, and Richmond. I am willing to vote, and, for one, I will vote, to make a finality of it, to close up this matter, and finish these custom-houses according to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, and not leave them to be patched and propped up against the storm, and the important papers and records of the country to be protected and kept dry by the shiftless interposition of old hats and bundles of rags in the windows of these neglected and friendless custom-houses. Why this sensitiveness upon this subject on the part of honorable gentlemen here, who vote money without stint and without limit, "without a why or a wherefore," in other cases, where the western and northern commercial and domestic interests of the country are not concerned? Can it be because gentlemen who pretend to be friends of the Administration are, in fact, opposed to it, that they are unwilling to sustain the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury?

I have sometimes fancied that it really might be hostility to the Administration which created this unaccountable hostility to the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon that hypothesis I can explain the action of gentlemen.

It would seem to be quite certain that this opposition to the bill must be founded either upon something that we have put into the bill unpalatable to gentlemen upon the other side, or upon something we have failed to put in which they desire to see there. I cannot discover anything that we have put into the bill to make it unacceptable, unless it be these custom-house appropriations, which a majority here have voted for, at least, on four different occasions, separately; in fact, we have all shown an unusual attachment to these houses. It would seem, then, that this great repugnance and aversion to the bill must rest upon something we have failed to put in. Nothing of that class occurs to me, except that we refused to allow the President to appoint the Auxiliary Guard—the petty police officers of the city of Washington. Sir, I am a very liberal man, but I could hardly go to that extreme. I am quite content that the worthy Mayor, however elected, should appoint his own police officers; any other course would smack too strong in favor of the doctrine of intervention even for me.

In conclusion, however, Mr. Speaker, allow me to add that I hope the House, whatever vote they may give upon these custom-houses and this bill, will, at least, do me the justice to remember that the stand I have taken on these custom-house appropriations from the beginning, and which I occupy now, is, that I will not vote this money, and trust it to a loose, shiftless, and unregulated discretion, without guard, check, limitation, or restriction; but with these guards, checks, limitations, and restrictions, I will vote money to complete what the wisdom of prior Congresses have induced them to commence and prosecute nearly to a completion. I am ready now to vote.

Mr. PRESTON. We who are in favor of this amendment have received but little toleration from the gentlemen opposed to its passage. I would not again offer any remarks relative to the matter, if the five minutes I asked in vain from the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] who took the initiative this morning in reviving the bill, had been granted to me; but, contrary to his usual courtesy, the favor I demanded was denied. If this amendment be reconsidered and rejected, and the custom-houses again expunged from the bill, this House will, for a second time, stultify itself by retracing its course, and revoking grants for necessary public works, after each item in the amendment has been separately discussed, and separately adopted.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] attributes the failure of the bill, yesterday, to the insertion of the amendment in relation to custom-houses. After the action of this House he has no grounds for the assertion, and I reiterate, in no spirit of banter, that it was one of the elements of vitality that the bill possessed, and yet possesses. It has been the fashion in this discussion, for some gentlemen to leave the true issue presented for the consideration of the body, which is simply whether we will grant these additional sums to render fire-proof, and properly complete, these buildings, and denounce the original appropriations made for the custom-houses in the West. I dissent entirely from this opinion. None of these fall within that class of custom-houses alluded to by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] who stated that some of them do not pay the expenses of their maintenance and administration. There are some falling within this description upon the Atlantic coast, but none in the valley of the Mississippi.

The custom-house at St. Louis, which has been sneered at, pays into the Federal Treasury more than $300,000 a year, and is increasing every hour in its contributions to the revenue, and yet gentlemen decry it as a western custom-house, while they are willing to vote liberal appropriations for those on the Atlantic coast which do not yield a tenth of the sum. The original object of the appropriations made for their construction was to afford to the cities of the West the facilities for a direct trade with foreign countries, and diffuse its benefits. Many of the most eminent citizens of South Carolina, not many years since, sought to decentralize the vast direct trade that New York possesses, and by opening railroads from Charleston to Louisville and Cincinnati, to divert southward the vast trade of the valley of the Ohio. The endeavor was legitimate and commendable; and why should the cities of the West be censured, if from similar motives, they seek to establish a direct trade with Europe and foreign countries, and ask for the requisite commercial facilities?

To illustrate the advantages of this direct trade, I would remark that the present condition of the trade of St. Louis affords us an example. If we take the duties at an average of twenty per cent., and estimate the profits received by the importing merchants in the great Eastern cities at only ten per cent., then, if St. Louis pays in round numbers $300,000 a year in tariff duties on $1,500,000 of imports, then that city escapes factories and the profits of importers to the amount of $150,000 per annum, and so on in proportion, as the profits of the importer on the Atlantic are above ten per cent. The same remarks will apply to the trade of Pittsburg, Cincinnati, and Louisville, and the consequence is, that a large direct foreign trade has already been established by these cities, and hundreds of thousands are now paid by them annually into the Treasury of the United States, when, five years since, they had no foreign trade, nor did they pay any revenue to the Government.

I am happy to say, in this connection, that unless my memory deceives me, the Representatives from New York and the eastern commercial cities, have, with great generosity and liberality, heretofore assisted the southwest in these endeavors, while the most strenuous opposition we have encountered, has come from the gentlemen of the southern Atlantic States. The most vigorous and unrelenting adversary we have had, is my friend from the Rockbridge district of Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] who represents a constituency in the mountains, who know little of ships or steamboats, and for aught I know, imagine a custom-house to be some sort of commercial monster, and yet he lectures us in the West upon our commercial interests, and opposes appropriations necessary to our wants.

For my own part, I concur in the view of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENTON,] and think if we do construct these custom-houses, we should not build them so that they may burn down, but so that they may not burn down. I do not wish that they shall remain the perishable monuments of an unwise parsimony, but solid, useful, and enduring testimonials of the wisdom and power of the Republic. The gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] who seems governed by an indiscriminate economy, says that if these appropriations were needed to build good, sound, substantial buildings, he would vote for them, but that he understands they were all for ornamental work. I do not so understand the matter; as we are informed by the Secretary of the Treasury that the money is necessary for the solidity and safety of the buildings. But even if the money is needed for appropriate architectural ornaments, I am not opposed to giving it. Would the gentleman have us absolutely reject the ornamental and the beautiful in our public buildings? Are we to have all the walls of our public buildings destitute of all architectural embellishment, and as plain as those of a powder magazine?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky, if the custom-house at Louisville is not on the corner of a square, two sides of it fronting two streets, and the other two sides fronting narrow alleys? I ask him if the appropriations heretofore made for it, are not sufficient to finish that building in a fire-proof manner, with granite and marble fronts on the streets, and with brick on the walls facing the alleys? And I ask him, whether this additional appropriation is not to put the same material on the walls facing those alleys as on the walls facing the streets?

Mr. PRESTON. In reply to the questions of the gentleman from Tennessee, I will say, that, as to the custom-house at Louisville, the Secretary of the Treasury had money enough a year ago, in all probability, to complete the building. The preceding Secretary [Mr. Corwin] would not close the contracts at the last hours of his official term, because it might have been thought that he exhibited an undue anxiety in doing so. This I considered in him a commendable delicacy. He did not act upon these contracts, although the bids for the Louisville custom-house were in, and covered by the appropriations, because, as I have said, it might be considered that he had shown an improper eagerness if he had accepted them at the last hour, before retiring from office.

The contracts not having been accepted and closed by Mr. Corwin, Mr. Guthrie, after he entered office, published new advertisements for other proposals. The old bids were somewhere between $162,000 and $179,000. In the interim, the rise in the price of labor and materials, and some additional work which was necessary to complete the building, made the new contracts some $40,000; and this is the sum the Secretary now asks. I cannot certainly answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] but I think he may be right. He describes the locality of the custom-house at Louisville correctly. It stands at the corner of two streets; but the other two sides are exposed to view; and if the fact stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] is correct, that this money is needed by the architect for the stone facing of the wall, it undoubtedly should be granted. If only two sides of the building are faced with stone, it would be as absurd a botch as a linen shirt with a cotton bosom. I have had no correspondence with the architect, and therefore cannot answer definitely his inquiry.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, (interrupting.) If I mistake not, it was one of the remarks of the present Secretary, that it looked like botch-work.

Mr. PRESTON. The idea may be the Secretary's, but I claim a patent for the illustration. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES. The gentleman may wear shirts all of one piece; but if he will examine the members of this House, he will find that most of them wear cotton shirts with linen bosoms; and he will find, also, that ninety-nine out of a hundred of his constituents do the same thing. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. PRESTON. The gentleman exactly mistakes. I said a linen shirt with a cotton bosom. My illustration, my idea is, that to put such a mean front to such a good building would be like putting a cotton bosom to a linen shirt.

But, sir, I must be on my guard, or I will be led off as the gentleman from New York was by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] by the blandishments of the gentleman from Tennessee; and I must confine myself to matters relevant to the amendment. I stated that the growing foreign trade of the valley of the Mississippi required the extension of this machinery of commerce to that region, and that none of the custom-houses in it fell within the animadversion of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] that they were not able to pay the cost of their maintenance.

Mr. CLINGMAN. As my friend alludes to this subject again, I would like to make a suggestion in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN.]

Mr. PRESTON. I would cheerfully give way to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] but I know he will excuse me until I can offer some remarks in addition before I resume my seat. I find it very difficult, under this style of debate, to adhere to the subject; for no sooner is one topic presented than some gentleman broaches another; and no sooner do I advance a proposition that might possibly benefit my cause, or trouble its adversaries, than some one of them rises and opens some irrelevant matter to decoy me from the place, as a partridge flutters from one copse to another to allure the hunter from the neighborhood of her nest.

The gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] in reply to the inquiries as to the motive for retaining in the bill the Richmond custom-house appropriation, while the sums given to Mobile and the western custom-houses are objected to, says that Richmond is on the Atlantic coast, and the others are inland; and says that Richmond is thirty or forty miles from the sea. This is a singular geographical mistake. Richmond is more than a hundred miles from the mouth of James river. I am not opposed to the Richmond house, nor do I make this allusion in any unfriendly spirit. I have voted for the appropriation to her custom-house, and would do so again.

Mr. ORR. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that I did not vote for the Richmond custom-house appropriation. I only apologized for it.

Mr. PRESTON. Very well. The gentleman did not vote for the appropriation for the custom-house at Richmond, but he admits it to the benefits of the bill from which he desires to exclude us, and to assist the parliamentary tactics by which he proposes to revive this bill, and make this House to-day reject the very appropriations they deliberately granted yesterday, and we are again to reverse our whole action to conform to the opinion of a part of the Committee of Ways and Means. I shall not vote for any such course, and I trust the House will not, unless some better reason is assigned than we have heard.

Now, what is the fact in regard to Mobile? Is Mobile further from the Atlantic than Richmond; for distance from the Atlantic seems to be made the touchstone by which these appropriations are to be regulated?

Mr. ORR. When I spoke of the Atlantic I included the Gulf. Of course the same reasoning will apply to one that applies to the other. Vessels come directly from foreign countries to ports on both.

Mr. PRESTON. I ask the gentleman whether he considers the commerce upon our inland seas, as Mr. Calhoun styled the western lakes and rivers, of sufficient importance to entitle them to these facilities?

Mr. ORR. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." When a question comes up which shall make it necessary to determine whether the Mississippi river is an inland sea, I shall take great pleasure in answering the gentleman's question.

Mr. PRESTON. Well, sir, it comes simply to this, that the Atlantic custom-houses are to be put in, and the western custom-houses are to be put out. Notwithstanding the Administration have recommended these appropriations, notwithstanding the Senate have approved them by inserting them in the deficiency bill, notwithstanding we have twice inserted them, once in the deficiency bill, and once in this, by votes in the committee and in the House upon yeas and nays, and notwithstanding the Committee of Ways and Means have themselves approved and recommended these appropriations in a separate bill, yet we are still told that it is improper to provide for these appropriations here, but that they should be rejected. This, sir, has been the very bill upon which all appropriations for these custom-houses, and all that have ever been erected on the Atlantic coast, were ingrafted. There never was, in all the legislation of the past sixty-five years, any other vehicle for such grants. The Committee of Ways and Means, for the first time it has ever been done, have reported a separate bill, and we are ordered to wait for that. We know, sir, we never will reach that bill. To use the forcible illustration of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENTON,] when we desire to provide for the completion of the western custom-houses, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means gravely informs us that the seats are occupied, and shuffles us from place to place like the landlord of a crowded hotel, and in the end we find all of the Atlantic custom-houses comfortably provided for, and our western appropriations left in the lurch.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman surely would not put me in a false position. If he will reflect for one moment, he will recollect that, in every instance, during the present session of Congress, I have opposed those appropriations alone upon the ground that I did not believe them to be necessary. That is the ground upon which I oppose them now. I do not believe they are necessary; but if they are to be made, I do not care what bill they are attached to. I do not care whether they are made on this or any other bill.

Mr. PRESTON. I admit that the gentleman has been constantly opposed to these appropriations, and upon the grounds assigned by him; and am glad to learn that he is indifferent which bill contains the amendment, if it is determined to insert it. Now I come to this point: Nobody can doubt that there has been a feeling of dissatisfaction against the Secretary of the Treasury, and his estimates. Now, when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] got up this morning, he surprised me by reproaching the seventeen Whigs who voted for the custom-house amendment; and then refused to vote for the bill on its final passage; and assigning it as a reason for the alteration of his vote. I would ask him what did the remainder of the friends of the custom-houses do? They and I voted for the bill.

I have not made the calculation; but were there not as many of the friends of the custom-houses in proportion who voted for the bill, as there were Democrats who voted for it, and were the seventeen Whigs who, as he says, voted against the bill, a larger number in proportion to our strength than of Democrats who voted to amend the bill, and afterwards voted against it? As a matter of course, a bill like this, in its transit through the House, must always add friends and create enemies, and any perfect consolidation of vote is not to be anticipated.

There are some other considerations warranting these appropriations, as the buildings will not only serve as custom-houses, but will afford the requisite court rooms for the United States courts, post offices, surveyors' offices, &c. But I will premit any allusion to these topics as in some former remarks I mentioned them; but, sir, I will say that the sums which will be saved in the shape of exemption from rents to the United States Government will, almost in themselves, justify these appropriations, apart from the use of the buildings to which I have before alluded.

Mr. PRESTON demanded the previous question.

Mr. BENTON. With the gentleman's permission, I would say a few words.

Mr. PRESTON. I yield the gentleman the floor, as I promised so to do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can yield for explanation, but not for a speech.

Mr. PRESTON. I yield the floor temporarily, still retaining my right to it.

Mr. BENTON. This seems to be the case of Jonah. Jonah, we all have heard, was thrown overboard to save the ship; but there was a whale hard by, which received him, and took him to land. Now, whether there is any whale here to save these custom-houses, is more than I am able to say. But certain it is, sir, that we are in the condition of Jonah and the ship. Throw him overboard to save the ship, was the cry. So, throw these custom-houses overboard, to save the general appropriation bill. It was said that it was the last ounce that broke the camel's back; but what is this ounce for the river custom-houses compared with the amount in the bill, and compared with the appropriations carried through here to bolster up Santa Anna? It is an ounce compared to tons, with what is in the bill, and what is carried through here like a flash.

Mr. McMULLIN. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PRESTON] being entitled to the floor, has no right to transfer it to the gentleman from Missouri except for explanation.

The SPEAKER. That is the rule of the House; and, being called on to execute it, the Chair must decide the course of remark indulged in by the gentleman from Missouri out of order.

Mr. PRESTON. I am a little surprised at the call to order. I yielded the floor to the gentleman from Missouri because I had made statements in relation to a matter in which he and his constituents are deeply interested; and I desired to afford him an opportunity to make an explanation of the matter. It is a privilege which has been accorded to every gentleman upon this floor.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. PRESTON. No, sir; I intend to proceed with my remarks. If the gentleman from Missouri desires the floor for explanation, my time is again at his service; and if he transgresses the rules of order, I shall again claim my time.

Mr. BENTON. If it is objected that I shall speak of the custom-house in my own city, I am willing to give up the floor. I shall make no false pretenses. I do not desire to make any personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is very well satisfied that the gentleman from Missouri will not attach blame to the Speaker for the execution of the rule.

Mr. BENTON. I was not making a personal explanation, and I shall tell no lie about it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to know if the gentleman from Missouri objects to the ruling of the Chair?

Mr. BENTON. I have not made any personal explanation, and I am not going to do it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri, then, is evidently out of order.

Mr. PRESTON. I have said all I desire to say upon this subject. It strikes me that about an equal number of gentlemen have been heard upon both sides. After the gentleman from Missouri has been denied a right which has been accorded this morning, and for years, in this Hall, I feel inclined to terminate this debate, and, therefore, I demand the previous question.

Mr. McMULLIN. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. ORR. I do not rise to make any remarks in reference to the question under consideration; but I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to withdraw the demand for the previous question, that I may say a single word of explanation.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to appeal to the gentleman from Kentucky to give me an opportunity for a single word of reply.

Mr. PRESTON. I do not feel inclined to withdraw it.

Mr. McMULLIN. If gentlemen think they can dispose of this bill to-day, I will withdraw my motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The motion was accordingly withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to correct himself in respect to a point of order in this immediate connection. It has been the custom—as gentlemen here know—under the operation of the previous question, to reconsider the votes upon amendments to bills before the body. The Chair intimated, and repeated to-day, that, under the circumstances connected with this bill, such motions to reconsider amendments could not be in order, except as to the amendment then pending before the body; and that if the previous question were sustained, the House would be bound to vote first upon the adoption of the pending amendment, and then upon the engrossment of the bill. The Chair decides, that, according to the practice of the House, it is competent, notwithstanding that the previous question may have been ordered, to reconsider other amendments that have been adopted by the House to this bill.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put, being "Shall the pending amendment be adopted?"

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SEWARD. I should like to know what amendment it is that is now pending?

The SPEAKER. It is in relation to the St. Louis, Louisville, and other custom-houses; and the question is, "Shall that amendment be adopted?"

Mr. COBB. I desire to know whether the Speaker adheres to his former decision, that the question is not divisible? Does he still stick to that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt at all about it. It is not divisible. That is the rule.

Mr. COBB. I had hoped that the Chair would change his opinion in that respect.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 77, nays 74; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Ashe, Banks, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bliss, Carpenter, Caruthers, Caskie, Chandler, Clark, Corwin, Curtis, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dick, Disney, Eastman, Edmonds, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Green, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hemen, Hill, Howe, Johnson, Kerr, Kidwell, Knox, Latham, Lindsey, Lindsey, Mace, Matteson, Mayall, Middewarther, John G. Miller, Morgan, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Phillips, Preston, Reese, Riddle, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Shannon, Gerrit Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Upham, Wade, Walbridge, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Isreal Washburn, John Wentworth, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollicoffer—77.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Barksdale, Bocock, Boyce, Bridges, Brooks, Chamberlain, Chas. Cain, Churchill, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dent, Dowdell, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Goode, Greenwood, Grow, Hastings, Hendricks, Hillyer, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kirtledge, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Maxwell, Milroy, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Orr, Packer, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Rufin, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, John J. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Walsh, and Daniel B. Wright—74.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. DENT. I rise to a privileged question. I voted against the appropriation for the Little Falls bridge over the Potomac. I learn from the friends of that measure that its merits were not properly considered, or that it should—

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) The gentleman must know that debate is not in order.

Mr. DENT. Very well; I will say nothing more about it. But I move to reconsider the vote by which the appropriation of $75,000 for the Little Falls bridge was rejected.

Having made that motion, I desire to ask a question of the Chair.

Have I a right, with the view of saving the time of the House, to call for the previous question on my proposition?

The SPEAKER. The previous question is already operating, and no debate is in order. The vote must be taken without debate.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. DENT's motion; and it was disagreed to.

The question then recurred upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HENN. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether, on a motion to reconsider a vote, there is any chance to amend or debate?

The SPEAKER. None whatever.

Mr. HENN. I understood the Chair had reversed his former decision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it is in order to move to reconsider any vote taken yesterday under the operation of the previous question; but it must be done without debate.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I wish to move to reconsider the appropriation of $4,800 for the London consuls.

The SPEAKER. Was that acted upon yesterday?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It was in the original bill, and was not an amendment at all.

The SPEAKER. That being so, it cannot be reconsidered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to reconsider the vote by which the thirty-eighth amendment was agreed to; and upon my motion I ask the yeas and nays.

The thirty-eighth amendment was as follows:

For yeas voted to the members of the Thirty-third Congress by the joint resolution of 24th February, 1854, and the resolution of the House of the 26th June, 1854, $199,510 87.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to reconsider was then put; and disagreed to.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I move to reconsider all the other amendments which were adopted yesterday. I voted for them all; and I also move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table, so that we may get at the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the proposition. A motion to reconsider all at the same time is not in order.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was subsequently read the third time.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be now put.

Mr. BRIDGES. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 92—nays 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Appleton, Ashe, Banks, Belcher, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bliss, Brooks, Bugg, Carpenter, Caruthers, Caskie, Chandler, Clark, Curtis, Cutting, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Disney, Edmonds, Edmundson, Everhart, Farley, Faulkner, Fenton, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Giddings, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hemen, Houston, Howe, Ingersoll, Johnson, Roland Jones, Kerr, Kidwell, Kirtledge, Latham, Lindsey, Lindsey, May, Mayall, John G. Miller, Milton, Noble, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Packer, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Preston, Reese, Riddle, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Sabin, Sapp, Seymour,

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Burksdale, Bocoock, Boyce, Bridges, Chamberlain, Chastain, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Corwin, John G. Davis, Dent, Dowdell, Eastman, Eddy, English, Flagler, Grow, Hastings, Hendricks, Hill, Hillyer, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Knox, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Maxwell, Middleswarth, Morgan, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Olds, Parker, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Powell, Puryear, Ready, Ruffin, Russell, Seward, Shaw, Singleton, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Daniel B. Wright, Yates, and Zolltcoffer—67.

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKENS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. No. 164. An act making further appropriations for continuing the construction of roads in the Territory of Minnesota, in accordance with the estimates made by the War Department, with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House;

H. R. No. 119. An act to provide for the continuation of the military road from Myrtle Creek to Scottsburg, in Oregon;

H. R. No. 291. An act for the construction of certain military roads and wells in the Territory of New Mexico;

H. R. No. 294. An act for the payment of the civil officers employed in the Territory of New Mexico, while under military government;

H. R. No. 339. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to settle and adjust the expenses of the Rogue River Indian war;

H. R. No. 340. An act to provide for the construction of a military road in the Territory of Utah; and

H. R. No. 341. An act to refund to the Territory of Utah the expenses incurred by said Territory in suppressing Indian hostilities.

Also, that the Senate had passed bills and a resolution of the following titles:

S. No. 129. An act to authorize the sale of reserved lands, and for other purposes;

S. No. 341. An act to revive, for a limited time, an act in relation to donations of land to certain persons in the State of Arkansas; and

S. R. 18. A resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Territory of New Mexico to adjust and pay to Juan C. Armijo, José L. Perea, and James L. Collins, the amount by them loaned to the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, under authority of a joint resolution of that body, approved the 17th of June, 1851, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled bills of the following titles; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

An act for the relief of the Utica Steam Woolen Company; and

An act to establish the office of surveyor general of New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska, and to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes.

RICHARD W. MEADE.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion to lay upon the table the bill "for settling the claims of the legal representatives of Richard W. Meade, deceased." The Committee of the Whole House reported it on Saturday last with a recommendation that it do not pass, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] moved that the bill lie upon the table.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was laid upon the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid upon the table; and that that motion be laid upon the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon the House (at three o'clock, p. m.) adjourned till tomorrow, at twelve o'clock, m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 8, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SAN FRANCISCO CUSTOM-HOUSE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in reference to the protection of the title to the site for a custom-house at San Francisco, and the appropriations necessary to secure the construction of said building; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. I wish to suggest that, as yesterday was objection day, and as that day was lost to the consideration of unobjectionable bills, we now, by unanimous consent, proceed to the consideration of cases to which there are no objections. I will state, also, that we nearly went through the Calendar, I believe, upon the last objection day; and after finishing the bills still remaining which are not objected to, we can then turn to the cases to which objections are made.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I agree to it, with the understanding that we commence at the beginning of the Calendar; for there may be many cases where the objections have been withdrawn by the gentlemen who made them. If the gentleman from Indiana will agree to that course, I will make no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The rules of the House require that we should commence where we left off last objection day.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object, unless we commence at the beginning and go through the Calendar regularly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If objection is made to the consideration of that class of private claims to which no objections are made, I withdraw the motion; for we can do no good by going into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar and taking up disputed cases.

Mr. McMULLIN. I call for the regular order of business.

DAVID MYERLE.

As the first business in order, Senate bill "for the relief of David Myerle" was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

CLAIM IN THE BASTROP GRANT.

The bill next in order, entitled "An act to confirm the claim of William H. Henderson and the heirs of Robert Henderson, to five hundred acres of land in the Bastrop grant," was also taken from the table, and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I should like to put that bill upon its passage; and I will state the reasons for it, if the House will indulge me for a moment.

Mr. McMULLIN. To save time, I will inform my friend that I object to its consideration.

Mr. JONES. I am sure that the gentleman from Virginia will have no objection to the consideration of the bill, if he will hear my reasons.

Mr. McMULLIN. I cannot withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia seems not to have noticed the fact that the bill is regularly before the House.

Mr. JONES. The statement I wish to make is this: It will be recollected that a few days ago, the House indulged me by passing a bill to confirm the title to certain lands in the Bastrop claim. The effect of the passage of that law will be to put into market all the balance of the lands which were not confirmed by it. The claim now before the House was considered by the commissioners, who made a report in regard to the other claims. They recommend that Congress shall pass a law for the benefit of this claimant. They were unable, however, to report favorably upon the claim, for the reason that it did not come within the provisions of the law of 1841. In other words, the claimants were not able to do what the law requires, namely: to furnish proof here before the commissioners, of occupation and cultivation, for twenty years. They were only able to prove it for eighteen years. But evidence has been furnished since that time to show occupation and cultivation for twenty years.

Now, if the claimants do not get relief at this session of Congress; if the bill be not passed at this session, the effect of its failure will be, that the lands in question will be surveyed and put into the market, and the claimants will be forced to purchase them at perhaps a very large price. That is the reason why this bill ought to be passed now. I may further state to the House, that this bill has passed the Senate; and, also, that it was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims of the House, and that committee have also reported a bill to the same effect as the Senate bill.

Mr. MATTESON. Is there a written report?

Mr. JONES. There is. The House will perceive, from what I have just said, that the Senate has acted favorably on this claim, and that the Committee on Private Land Claims has also acted favorably upon it.

Mr. LETCHER took the floor.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. JONES. Certainly, sir; and I may here take occasion to say, that that gentleman has investigated this claim, and he is satisfied with the justice of it.

Mr. LETCHER. Some time ago my friend from Louisiana called my attention to these claims on the Bastrop grant, and I examined this one among others. I have no hesitation in saying, from that examination, that if ever there has been a claim which ought to be allowed by this body, this claim seems to be one of them. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HENDRICKS asked for tellers on the passage of the bill.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. KERR, and JONES of Louisiana, were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 120, noes 6.

So the bill was passed.

ALEXANDER G. MORGAN.

Mr. HOWE. As it is necessary that I should be absent from this city, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to make a report from the Committee on Military Affairs, for the purpose of reference, and that the report may be printed.

There was no objection, and Senate bill for the relief of the heirs and representatives of Colonel Alexander G. Morgan, was reported back from the Committee on Military Affairs, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT ALEXANDRIA, VA.

On motion by Mr. APPLETON, it was Ordered, That the Committee of Ways and Means be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of citizens of Alexandria, Virginia, for the erection of a custom-house in said city, and that said petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The following Senate bills were then taken up from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

An act for the relief of Frederick Vincent, administrator of James Le Caze, survivor of Le Caze & Mallet. Referred to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 369) for the relief of the legal heirs and representatives of Colonel John Anderson. Referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

An act (No. 415) for the relief of Phineas M. Nightingale, administrator of the estate of General Nathaniel Greene, deceased. Referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

An act (No. 381) for the relief of William Brown. Referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. FAULKNER. I now move, with the consent of the House, that the Speaker call the committees for reports upon private bills.

Mr. THURSTON. I object, and move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

MILITARY RESERVATIONS.

Mr. MAXWELL. I ask the gentleman from Rhode Island to withdraw that motion, to enable me to ask the consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table another bill—a general bill, but one to which I presume there will be no objection in the House upon a very slight explanation, or with no explanation at all. The bill is to bring into market lands reserved for military purposes, where the military stations for which they were reserved have been abandoned by the Government. The bill is general in its provisions, applicable to other States as well as Florida. The lands were reserved for the benefit of military stations then occupied as such. But where these stations have been abandoned, it is proposed to bring them into market.

Mr. THURSTON. I will withdraw my motion for a time.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time by its title, as follows:

An act to authorize the sale of reserved lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAXWELL. I now ask that the bill may be read through; and if there be any objection to it, I will not press its consideration now.

The bill was read in extenso.

Mr. EASTMAN. What is the pending question?

The SPEAKER. It is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. EASTMAN. I object to the introduction of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection comes too late at this time.

Mr. EASTMAN. Well, then, I have a few words to submit on the subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MAXWELL. As objection is made, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF NAME.

Mr. AIKEN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to report from the Committee on Commerce a bill "to change the name of the American-built brig Hallowell to that of James Rose, and to grant her a new register." Its consideration and passage will not occupy more than five minutes, at most.

There being no objection, the bill was read a first and second time by its title, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read a third time, and passed.

NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT.

Mr. FULLER. I now ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to take up Senate bill authorizing the establishment of a collection district in New Mexico, in order that it may be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MACE. I object, and shall object to everything not strictly in order. I insist on the motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. THURSTON renewed his motion, that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. Agreed to, (Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, in the Chair.)

SAMUEL COLT.

The bill first in order on the Calendar was House bill (No. 59) "for the relief of Samuel Colt."

Mr. LETCHER. Is it in order to move to pass by the consideration of that bill now?

The CHAIRMAN. It can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. LETCHER. We passed by the consideration of a multitude of bills to reach the Nebraska bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee have since decided that such motions are not in order, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAVEN. If the Chair will allow me, I think the Chair is under a slight error in reference to this matter. The committee have decided that it is not in order to pass by the consideration of a bill on which the debate has been closed by resolution.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. In reply to what the gentleman from New York has stated, I think the Chair will recollect, because the motion was made by himself to pass by a particular case, that the gentleman who was occupying the chair at that time decided that motion out of order, upon the express ground that the rule in reference to passing over bills applied to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and not to a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. You appealed from that decision, and the committee sustained the decision of the Chair at that time. I thought the decision was wrong, but the committee decided that the Chair was right in his ruling, and, of course, that decision should be adhered to.

Mr. LETCHER. The Chair then decides that it is not in order to pass over the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so decides.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I think that the same rule which governs in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, governs here, and that it is unquestionably competent for a majority to decline considering a particular bill. It is well to have this matter settled now; but I will not occupy the time of the committee in discussing it. I think the majority have a right to decline considering a particular bill just as in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or just as in the House the majority may postpone a bill from day to day. I take it that the same rules govern the Committee of the Whole House as govern the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I therefore respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair, in order that we may settle the question, as it is different from the case already referred to.

The question now being on the appeal, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. CLINGMAN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ASH and Cox were appointed.

Mr. HENN. I ask for the reading of the 135th rule.

The 135th rule was read, as follows:

"In the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the bills shall be taken up and disposed of in their order on the Calendar, but when objection is made to the consideration of a bill, a majority of the committee shall decide without debate, whether it shall be taken up and disposed of, or laid aside; provided, that general appropriation bills, and, in time of war, bills for raising men of money, and bills concerning a treaty of peace, shall be preferred to all other bills, at the discretion of the committee; and, when demanded by any member, the question shall first be put in regard to them."

Mr. HENN. I called for the reading of that rule merely to show that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union can lay aside a bill, and pass to another.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would ask the Chair now to have the 29th rule read.

The rule was read, as follows:

"Friday and Saturday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private bills and private business in preference to any other, unless otherwise determined by a majority of the House."

Mr. JONES. By this rule Friday and Saturday of every week are set apart for the consideration of private business, unless the House shall otherwise order. Now, the House can determine not to go into the consideration of the Private Calendar at all; and if it can determine this, it surely can determine whether it may pass over bills on the Calendar. The lesser is certainly contained in the greater in this regard.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. It appears that the 135th rule is entirely silent in respect to the order of business in Committee of the Whole House. I suppose, then, that we must look to the general parliamentary law for our guidance. I would simply suggest to the Chair whether, under that parliamentary law, it is not competent to lay aside one bill for another.

Mr. HENN. I would suggest to the Chair to have the 134th rule read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the precedent for his decision has been established by the Committee of the Whole House, when it was last in session. To that precedent the Chair now adheres, although he was opposed to it at the time.

Mr. WASHBURN. I would inquire, respectfully, of the Chair, whether in that case debate had not been closed by order of the House?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg leave to read to the committee the 134th rule:

"The rules of proceedings in the House shall be observed in a Committee of the Whole House, so far as they may be applicable, except the rule limiting the time of speaking; but no member shall speak twice to any question until every member choosing to speak shall have spoken."

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 60.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the committee rise, and report the bill to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I would inquire of the Chair, if the bill and report have been read to the House?

The CHAIRMAN. They have not.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The report was read last Saturday.

Mr. TAYLOR. I hope they will be read, so that the House may know what they are to act upon.

The bill and report were then read, the substance of which has heretofore been published.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to one circumstance merely. I desire when the vote is taken on this bill, in the House, that if there is not a full House, that there may be a call of the House. I think it due to members, owing to the reports industriously circulated, of extraordinary means resorted to for the purpose of getting this case through, that there should be a call of the House. I have no doubt that very large sums of money are said to be depending on the passage of the bill, and that gentlemen have been told by their friends that they would receive large sums if it could pass, and, in some instances, even if particular members would decline voting at all. I have no reason to suppose that any gentleman would be influenced by these considerations.

Mr. PRATT. The gentleman says that he has no doubt very large sums of money have been offered to gentlemen to vote for this bill, or to stay away. I do not know whether he means by gentlemen, members of this House, or persons outside of this Hall.

Mr. WALSH. Outsiders cannot vote.

Mr. PRATT. Of course not. The gentleman must mean members of the House. He says that money has been offered to members to vote for the bill, or to stay away. I should like to know what reason the gentleman has to make this statement.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have no objection to my friend asking the question. I tell him now that if the House shall at any time raise a committee to investigate this matter, and call upon me, I shall be ready to give an answer. I will say, that no sum was offered to me; but I have no doubt of sums of money having been offered to induce persons to cause members by solicitation to vote for this bill, or remain away. I am satisfied of that fact from several circumstances, and on the testimony of persons on whom I fully rely. I do not say that it has been offered to members themselves. I do not know that such is the fact. But sums of money have been offered to very particular and dear friends of members; to induce them so to act. Therefore, as the streets are rife with these things, and as they have got into the papers—and I have no doubt that these reports are well-founded to a considerable extent—I have said thus much. I think it due to members, when the vote is taken, it should be with a full House. I presume, sir, from what I know of gentlemen around the Hall, that there is no one of them who will not show by his conduct, by voting either aye or no, that he has not been approached in this way.

It is well known, Mr. Chairman, that Congress has suffered in the country from allegations of this sort, which have gone out in the newspapers. I think, therefore, that it will be well for us to have a call of the House when we come to vote upon this bill. I wish to call the attention of the committee to two or three of the reasons given in the report, to which I have already alluded, why this bill should pass. The principal reason urged why this House should grant the extension asked for is, that Mr. Colt has set up a large establishment in England for the manufacture of arms, but that he has met with losses, owing to the competition prevailing there.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a question of order, whether this bill is before the committee, and is open for discussion?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is before the committee, and is open for discussion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If it is agreed by general consent to put the bill over until doomsday, I will have no objection.

Mr. HUGHES. There was a question raised in the committee whether the bill was before us for discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now before us for discussion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I do not know how the gentleman from New York stands with regard to this bill. If he intends to vote for it, I hope he has some better reason than that given in the report. From the great desire manifested to get through this bill, and the extraordinary means to secure its passage, I was in hopes that the Committee on Patents would have given us better reasons than they have done in this report. They have not given us the slightest reason, or the pretext for a reason, for the extension of the patent in this case, except that Mr. Colt is subjected to the great expense of an establishment in England for the manufacture of his arms; and that he has lost so much in competition with other manufacturers there, that he wants a monopoly of the manufacture in this country in order to sustain him there. You and I, Mr. Chairman, have heard it said that it is wise policy, by means of a tariff, to impose a tax upon our own citizens to support manufacturing establishments in the United States; but nobody ever discovered that it was sound policy to tax our people in order to enable Mr. Colt to keep up an establishment in a foreign country. This is a new idea of the Committee on Patents.

We are told that if Mr. Colt is not to have a monopoly, that individuals will manufacture cast iron arms, and that you must therefore give him the exclusive privilege of their manufacture. Is not this the reverse of experience? My friend from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] remarked the other day, that the public houses here were not as good as he would like. Suppose some one, with a view to their improvement, should have a law passed that there should be but one public house. Do you suppose that we should fare any better in the way of lodgings and dinners?

But if this be a good doctrine, why do they not bring in a bill giving a monopoly of making axes, lest some one should deceive the public by making cast iron axes, or cast iron scythes, or razors, or something else, instead of making them of iron or steel? Why, sir, the whole experience of the world goes to show that when an individual or a company obtains a monopoly the public are likely to be imposed upon. The only way to produce good articles of any kind is to allow competition to the widest extent. By the immense numbers of bootmakers, tailors, and tradesmen of all kinds in the community, we are more likely to get good articles than if there was no competition in such trades. This is another of the novel ideas of the committee; and I ask you whether they are not entitled to a patent for that too?

Now, just let anybody look at the report, and he will find that these are the two reasons contained in the report. It is on these grounds that we are asked to grant this monopoly. I take it for granted that it is a fact that some gentlemen will be in favor of this bill. I do not know how many will be found in its favor, for some one reason or another. If, Mr. Chairman, there are any good reasons for its support, I have not been able to see them. I have received a long letter from one of his counsel, which I read with care, as coming from a gentleman for whom I have great respect, but have not been convinced at all by it. I do not blame any gentleman for making the best argument that he can in support of his client's claim. But still, I did not find a particle of evidence to sustain the case. As I said before, though these reports may not be worth discussing, still I think that the House would show its good sense, in view of the rumors that are afloat, and in some cases well founded, doubtless, to take a vote upon this question by yeas and nays.

Mr. SEWARD. I think it due to the House, in view of the announcement made by the gentleman from North Carolina, that he should give the names of persons, and the facts to which he has alluded. He cannot escape the responsibility of doing so. And if it shall appear that any member of this House has been offered money for the purpose of controlling his vote or his action on this subject, and that that member suppressed the fact, he should be expelled ignominiously from this body.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My friend from Georgia has misunderstood me. I stated distinctly that the money may have been offered, not directly to members, but to persons friendly to members, who might be able to influence them. But if the gentleman from Georgia desires to have my evidence in this respect, let him move for a committee of the House to investigate the matter, and I shall very readily give him all the information I possess on the subject. My attention was called to the fact from statements appearing in the newspapers in the first instance. Besides, two gentlemen, members of this House, mentioned these things to me. And I had heard, from other sources, that offers of money—large and liberal offers—had been made to particular persons to influence members, if they could do so.

Mr. SEWARD. Well, I want to understand the gentleman from North Carolina. I hold that a member on this floor who has had offers of the sort made, and who has failed to expose them to the body, stands condemned before Congress and the country. I do not think it necessary to have a committee of investigation raised. I understood the gentleman from North Carolina to say that large sums of money had been offered to members of this House either to control their votes or to induce them to abandon their position as Representatives on this floor.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The gentleman still misunderstands me. I did not state that any offer had been made to a member; but that offers were made to individuals who were supposed to have influence over members. And I tell the gentleman again, that if a committee of inquiry be raised, I am ready to lay before it all the knowledge which I possess in the matter, and also to refer to some other persons.

Mr. SEWARD. The gentleman from North Carolina knows very well that it is not necessary to raise a committee.

Mr. LETCHER. As soon as the committee shall rise and come into the House, I intend to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of—members be appointed to inquire whether money, or other illegal and improper means, have been used to secure the passage of the bill to extend Colt's patent for seven years from 1857; and also whether money, or other illegal and improper means, have been used or employed to secure the passage of any bill by this Congress.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will modify his resolution so as to make it express whether money has been offered to members of Congress. It is not improper, I believe, to offer to pay a claims agent or counsel to procure the passage of a bill. But, as I understood the gentleman from North Carolina, his statement was, that money had been offered to members of this House, either directly or indirectly. I hope the resolution will be modified as I have suggested.

Mr. STEVENS, of Michigan, here obtained the floor, and said: I am just informed, since I took the floor, that the gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. THURSTON], who reported this bill, is desirous of presenting his views to the House. That being so, I shall be most happy to yield the floor to him, and submit the few remarks I desire to present afterwards.

Mr. THURSTON. The principal question to be considered, in deciding upon an application for the renewal of a patent, should be: Does the public interest call for such renewal, and will the public weal be thereby subverted?

The other question, which regards the profit or loss to the inventor, is incidental and secondary. It is this first consideration, exclusively, which has governed the committee in the case of Colt's arms; and a careful consideration of the matter, aided by information derived from numerous sources, has induced the committee to report the bill now under consideration.

It is a fact universally conceded in this country, and in all others, that these arms have become indispensable weapons of war. There is no army without them, while, at the same time, it is a fact well authenticated, that they are worse than none, being dangerous as well as inefficient, when not constructed of the best material, and in the most exact and perfect manner.

Those facts have had a paramount influence with the committee in reporting this bill.

If, in conflict with an enemy, our army should find that their arms were inefficient by getting out of order, or any other cause, the most disastrous consequences must ensue.

In the manufacture of Colt's arms, the greatest deception may be practised without the possibility of detection, and, undoubtedly, would be, were they allowed to be made by any but the inventor. Instead of the best cast steel, they might be made of cast iron, and finished and polished in such a manner as to make it impossible to distinguish the one from the other.

If, then, the door were opened to all to manufacture them, and a field of competition presented to the whole world of mechanics, the inevitable consequence would be, that pistols, guns, and rifles, upon the principle of this patent, would be thrown upon the market, which would be worse than worthless.

The people of this country, the farmers and mechanics, have no interest in having this patent expire. These arms are not such as are used by them, and not one in a hundred thousand have them. It is the Government which has the principal concern in having these arms manufactured as they have hitherto been.

It has been urged that Mr. Colt has amassed a large fortune out of his patent, while the facts prove that his entire profits, thus far, have been principally expended in extending, improving, and perfecting his machinery, with a view to increased operations in the manufacture of his arms. Thus, security from infringement is more important to him than ever. The high character accorded to his fire-arms has induced extensive impositions on the part of those who manufacture a spurious, or, at least, a greatly inferior article. Mr. Colt has richly earned, and is fairly entitled to, the protection of Government for an additional period. The invention was made in 1831; and, after five years of incessant labor in perfecting it, a patent was granted to him in 1836. On the 9th of March, in the same year, this patent was conveyed to the Patent Arms Company of New Jersey. The capital stock of said company was $230,000, of which Colt owned $50,000. This company (Colt being the agent) worked for six years, and were then sold out, by a decree of the court of chancery, on the 10th of October, 1842; losing all the capital, and leaving a large amount of the debts of the company unpaid. The patent, at that time, was considered of so little value that no purchaser could be found for it. In 1850, Colt filed a bill to wind up the Patent Arms Company, and to sell the patent, and on the 8th day of July, 1850, the patent was sold by a receiver in chancery, at public sale, under an order of court, for one dollar, and bought by Samuel Colt. In 1848, Colt, by the assistance of some friends, who advanced $10,000, commenced the manufacture of pistols at Hartford, for the Government, beginning with some eight men, and working on a small scale; and it was not until 1856, when he obtained his extension, that he was enabled to procure the means of establishing an armory.

Colt began to manufacture in Hartford, under the extension, in 1850; but up to that date a cash capital of $230,000, together with nineteen years of his time, had been wasted, and he was, moreover, involved in liabilities to the amount of $30,000.

Since 1847, and under the extension, down to the present time, all the capital and earnings have been invested in land, buildings, tools, machinery, and the necessary apparatus for the successful manufacture of the arm; and the plans are not more than one third carried out for the manufacture in the most economical manner.

The struggles of Colt to establish an armory suitable for the manufacture of his arms, on an enlarged scale, are well known, and justify his friends in endeavoring to obtain such protection as will insure to him a suitable reward for his invention, and for the years of toil and anxiety he has devoted to it.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to ask the gentleman from Rhode Island a single question. Is it not a fact that Mr. Colt now has a large manufactory in London, on the Thames?

Mr. THURSTON. It is.
Mr. SMITH. And is it not true that this establishment is the admiration of all England, resorted to by visitors as a show shop, for its rare perfection and beauty?

Mr. THURSTON. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. STEVENS, of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if I understand this bill correctly, it is one which simply proposes the extension of a patent granted to Mr. Colt, in 1836. I have to say, in the first place, that there seems to be some confusion among members of this committee in regard to that particular matter. Application was made to the Commissioner of Patents by Mr. Colt, for an extension of the patent granted to him in 1839, but that extension was refused. The pending proposition is for the extension of the patent of 1836. Not long since it was urged by a gentleman from Tennessee upon this floor, that the decision of the Commissioner of Patents, in reference to the extension of the patent of 1839, was sufficient evidence that Mr. Colt was entitled to no favorable consideration from this body. I allude to this that members may be correct in their understanding of the matter, and to show that there has been no decision of the Commissioner on the patent now asked to be extended.

There has been no evidence taken to show that Mr. Colt has made a fortune, or that he is not yet a poor man. The following is a letter on the subject, and I ask the earnest attention of members to its reading:

UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE, June 24, 1854.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you, in reply to your letter of the 21st instant, that two applications have been presented to this office for the extension of patents granted to Samuel Colt, dated, respectively, 25th February, 1836, and 29th August, 1839. The former was extended by the Hon. Edmund Burke, Commissioner of Patents, seven years from the 25th February, 1850. The application for the extension of the latter was rejected by me for reasons on file in this office.

It is understood that the application now pending before Congress, is for the further extension of the patent of 1836, from the 25th February, 1857.

If so, it would seem that no evidence or testimony is pertinent thereto, except such as relates to that particular patent.

What testimony and proceedings were brought forward by certain members of the House, in opposition to the present application, I am not informed; but I infer from your letter that they related to the application for the extension of the patent of 1839.

I would state, in conclusion, that the evidence in both cases is open to the free inspection of all who may feel interested in the matter.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. MASON, Commissioner.

Hon. B. B. THURSTON, Chairman House Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, House of Representatives.

Mr. CUTTING. I did not distinctly hear the letter. Will the gentleman be good enough to state whether I have correctly understood its purport. I understood the Commissioner's letter thus: That the original patent of 1836 was extended in 1850, but that the patent of 1839 was not extended; that the original patent of 1836 was extended in 1850, and runs until 1857; and that it is that patent which does not expire until 1857, which we are now asked to extend for seven years further.

In reply to Mr. CUTTING, the letter was again read by the Clerk at Mr. STEVENS's request.

Mr. STEVENS. This, then, is an application simply for the extension of a patent, for the purpose of securing to the inventor of a certain instrument the exclusive right of manufacturing it for a certain length of time. In other words it is to secure to him who has the intellect and genius to conceive and invent, and perseverance to carry out and perfect his plans, the benefits of his invention. I ask gentlemen, in all candor, who seem to be so wonderfully and tenaciously opposed to the extension in this case, why all this excitement? What is the reason for it, and why do we hear the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] making such extraordinary charges upon the honesty and integrity of members of this House? Why does that gentleman make the charge, if not directly at least indirectly, that large sums of money have been used to purchase members of the House? Let me ask why does the gentleman take this extraordinary course? Is he entirely disinterested? Have no efforts been made to tempt his public virtue? I know that he is a very honest and upright gentleman, and God forbid that I should express the least doubt of his honesty or uprightness. I know very well there are persons who are disposed to manufacture arms which are not worth a farthing, in comparison with the genuine arms manufactured by Mr. Colt, and who are anxious that this patent should not be extended so that they may flood the world with bogus arms, which cost but very little. These men can afford to come here and fee honorable gentlemen largely for the purpose of preventing the passage of this bill. I will not say that the gentleman from North Carolina has had his virtue tempted in this way! I will not say that approaches have been made to him, a learned, eloquent, and distinguished counselor, to come here and oppose this bill to-day, but surely other gentlemen have as good reason to suspect that the gentleman from North Carolina has had his virtue tempted as he has to suspect other gentlemen of this House of the same thing.

What are the facts in regard to this claim? Reports have been made by a committee in this House, and in the Senate by a committee of that body, in favor of this bill. They have had this matter before them. They have examined the evidence in the case cautiously and carefully, and they have come to the conclusion that Mr. Colt is entitled to an extension of his patent. The charge is made that bribes have been offered to gentlemen to vote for this bill. But where is the evidence? Lay your hand upon the man who has been bribed. Point out the man who offers these bribes to members of the House, either directly or indirectly, for the purpose of influencing members of the House. If there is no evidence of this, I appeal to gentlemen of the House to give no weight to these charges. They should not allow this spargere voces ambiguas—the ambiguous language in which these charges are conveyed, to make them doubt and hesitate upon this subject. If we cannot believe all the members of this committee; if we cannot believe the Senate, I ask, in the name of God, whom can we believe? Must we go along here looking suspiciously at everything, and denying every report made?

Mr. CLINGMAN. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STEVENS] permit me to make a remark?

Mr. STEVENS. Certainly.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My objection to this bill was grounded on the fact that the committee did not give any reason for the passage of it in their report. If it had given any reason, I would have heard it with very great pleasure and given it due weight. I did not, in my remarks, mean that the imputation of corruption should exercise any influence in voting on the bill. My objection to it merely is, that the committee have given no reason whatever in their report why the House should pass this bill. I gave the first simply as a reason why there should be a full vote taken on the passage of the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I want a full vote too; and I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina in his desire to have a full vote taken on the passage of this bill. I wish to spring no game on this House. I do not want to have it voted upon by a thin House. Let us have it brimful of members; and then let this matter stand on its own merits.

But, again, the gentleman from North Carolina complains that, in the reports on this matter, both in the House and in the Senate, the reasons have not been given why this bill should be passed, and why the committees have recommended so and so; and he says that they should have given the reasons for such recommendation, based upon the testimony before them. If I understand the report aright, the committee have stated all of this; and I take it, that the reports of committees are entitled to all confidence on the part of the House. When I, as a member of a committee of this House, come in and make a report, I pledge myself to this body and to the country, and in the presence of God, that I believe the report is correct, and that the reasons on which it is founded, are good. And if the time should ever come when I am found playing false to this House, may I be expelled—driven from it as corrupt and dishonorable!

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is charged that Mr. Colt is not entitled to an extension of his patent, because he is a wealthy man. Is it because he has now got a manufacturing establishment on the banks of the Thames that this is inferred? Is this sufficient evidence that he has become a wealthy man? I ask, then, Mr. Chairman, where, upon the broad face of this habitable globe, where thrift and enterprise prevails, is not American enterprise to be found? And is it unnatural that Mr. Colt should be found establishing himself and making money upon the banks of the Thames, and especially at this time, when the whole of Europe is involved in an extensive war, which creates an extensive market for his arms? Is it remarkable? Not at all. Supposing he is a poor man, supposing he has become bankrupt in the efforts he has made to perfect this weapon, yet is it unnatural that he should be found upon the banks of the Thames in efforts to retrieve his broken fortunes? Not at all. Does it follow, because he is prosecuting his business upon the banks of the Thames, that he is wealthy?

It is true that, upon the application of Mr. Colt for a renewal of his patent of 1839, evidence was taken before the Commissioner of Patents which satisfied him that so much money had been made by Mr. Colt that the patent ought not to be extended. Now you, Mr. Chairman, know what I mean when I talk of ex parte evidence. Gentlemen who hear me, and many of them are lawyers, know well what ex parte evidence means. It must be a very lame case indeed, which cannot make out a good prima facie case, when they have it all their own way, and in their own hands. It is in proof before this House, that when the evidence was taken in this case, before the Commissioner, the counsel of Mr. Colt did not appear to contest the evidence which was presented before him. The evidence was taken by the counsel opposed to Mr. Colt, and they had it all their own way.

It is said by a gentleman near me, that that evidence does not apply to this case. But I remark that the patent of 1836 is one patent, and that of 1839 refers only to a simple improvement upon the mode of charging the pistol. The two are taken together, and evidence which is pertinent to one, would be pertinent and relevant to the other.

Mr. CLINGMAN, (interrupting.) The gentleman will allow me a single word in explanation. I was upon the other side of the House when the gentleman referred to my remarks. I beg leave to say that I expressly said, in my remarks, that I had too favorable an opinion of the members of this House to believe that they had been operated upon by these approaches which had been made, and as some of my remarks might seem to imply it, I also beg leave to say that I never intimated, and never intended to intimate that the members of the committee or the members of the House were in the slightest degree influenced by them. But this thing of lobbying was so boldly done, and so extraordinary in this case, and some other cases, that I deemed it my duty to call the attention of the House to it, and I believed that to get a full vote, a call of the House was necessary.

Mr. STEVENS. Does the gentleman mean to say that this lobbying has had any influence with the committee?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I stated that I believed members would not be influenced by it, but that I thought it best to call attention to the facts.

Mr. STEVENS. Now, sir, whatever may have taken place out of this House, whatever streams of corruption may have been let loose outside, if they have not reached the members upon this floor, what of it? What is the effect? Sir, I ask that if this application is otherwise meritorious and fair, why, sir, let us not be guided by these outside influences. Let us not be frightened by being told that there is a lion in the lobby—that there is an ass laden with gold attempting to force its way into this House! Let us treat Mr. Colt as an honorable gentleman. Let us treat him as an honorable citizen, who comes here in a fair and honorable manner, and asks to have his patent extended, and consider the case upon its merits.

I say now to you, Mr. Chairman, and to this committee, if the merits of this case are with us, let this bill pass. But if they are not with us; if the statements of the committees of the two Houses are contradicted, and proved to be false, why let the bill fall to the ground. But, let gentlemen consider the application as honorable gentlemen, and give it an impartial and fair consideration, and that is all we ask. I send two letters to the Clerk's desk, and ask that they may be read.

The letters were read, as follows:

UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE, January 9, 1854.

SIR: Yours of the 7th was received this morning. I immediately inclosed it to Mr. Gifford, with a request that he would reply to the interrogatories therein suggested, and I herewith forward you his reply.

The statement made in my decision of the application for an extension of Colonel Colt's patent, was fully warranted by the testimony before me—the magistrate having certified that the applicant's counsel was present at the examination of the witnesses, and declined asking any cross-interrogatories.

I will state further, that the counsel of Colonel Colt seemed to rest his case on the points of law alluded to in my decision. If these had been decided in his favor, it will readily be seen that the testimony would have been immaterial. He took no testimony on the point of profits, and apparently paid no regard to that subject.

I remain yours, very truly,
CHARLES MASON.
Hon. B. B. THURSTON.

NATIONAL HOTEL, WASHINGTON, January, 1854.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 7th instant, I have to say that it will give me great pleasure to make any statement of facts which will prevent injustice to any one, and especially in regard to any proceeding in which I have been engaged as counsel. In relation to the matter on which you desire information, the facts are—that the testimony which was taken in that case, to prove the profits of Mr. Colt, was taken in the absence of Mr. Dickerson, Mr. Colt's counsel, and, therefore, without cross examination. The proper and legal notice had been given to Mr. Dickerson to attend, but he was engaged in the argument of a cause out of town, and the time for taking testimony had so nearly expired as to not admit of postponement. A clerk from Mr. Dickerson's office attended the examination, and stated the fact of Mr. Dickerson's absence, and declined to cross-examine, as he said he knew nothing of the subject, and had no authority to do so.

In regard to the second question propounded, I have only to say, that I was informed that the witnesses which were examined on the cost of manufacture had been engaged in the manufacture of arms which were adjudged by the courts to be an infringement on Mr. Colt's patent, and in consequence of which I considered them the better qualified to speak of the cost of production. Whether the arms which were made by them were as good or as expensive as those made by Mr. Colt, I do not know. My questions to these witnesses were based upon the assumption that they had all the proper machinery with which to operate, and on that assumption I inquired what, in their judgment, it would cost to make the arms. Very respectfully yours,

GEORGE GIFFORD.

Hon. CHARLES MASON, Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. STEVENS, continued: Here, then, I will say briefly, in evidence, that the testimony which was taken was all upon one side. What other evidence may have been produced before the Commissioner of Patents we do not know. It is not here. The Commissioner undoubtedly was justified in the decision to which he came; but I say to the members before me that that decision should not be regarded as a finality in this matter. I ask again, is there any evidence that Mr. Colt has made a fortune out of his invention? Sir, I do not propose to take up the time of the committee by reading the evidence which I have before me upon this subject. But, sir, I have in my possession affidavits from men in Mr. Colt's employ, stating positively, that up to this time all the funds received by Mr. Colt have been reinvested for the purpose of carrying on the business; not for the purpose of making a fortune, but for the purpose of perfecting the machinery, and to make more complete the instrument we are now talking about; and this will be readily understood by the committee when I say—and I pledge my word for it—that the instruments used in the manufacture of Colt's pistols are almost innumerable, each having a fixed and particular purpose. This fire-arm is composed of a vast number of pieces, any one of which, when lost, can easily be supplied again. Whatever part is injured or lost on the field of battle or elsewhere, can instantly be supplied in consequence of the extreme accuracy with which each and every component part of the instrument is constructed. To accomplish this result a great variety of tools and instruments are necessary; and these, I assure gentlemen of the committee, from most satisfactory and conclusive evidence, can be used for the purposes for which they are designed, and none other. Therefore, if Mr. Colt's establishment be broken up, all these instruments and tools are lost to him; for they can be used, I repeat, for no other purpose. And I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that if his establishment be broken up, that there will spring up all over the country similar ones for the construction of similar but inferior weapons out of cast-iron. The weapons manufactured by Mr. Colt are almost all made of cast-steel, and thus the danger of bursting, or easily breaking, is prevented. There is less danger to the carrier. Those weapons manufactured of cast-iron, it is well known, are always liable to burst, and are indeed more dangerous at the breech than at the muzzle; more liable to hurt the holder than the enemy pointed at.

We ask that Mr. Colt may have his patent extended, so that he may further perfect and improve his instrument. He is improving each day in the manufacture. New and improved tools in instruments are made each day for the greater perfection in the manufacture of the instrument.

Another point: I say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to this committee, that I am satisfied Mr. Colt is not the wealthy man he is supposed to be. I have here sworn evidence from men in his employ that he has not yet made a fortune. Now I know that I shall be told, in reply, that the contrary is the truth; that it is not true that Mr. Colt is not a wealthy man, and that he flourishes, displays the possession of large means, and spends his money freely. I have no doubt that he spends his money liberally; and were this the proper place and time, I might state how Mr. Colt, with a free and liberal hand, poured out his money for public purposes and the public benefit.

But I only ask for the bill a fair and full consideration. Let gentlemen examine the testimony in the case, and not be governed by mere hearsay. If the committee come to the conclusion, after such just and deserved consideration, that the proposition is a fraud and an imposture, let it be voted down; but, on the other hand, if the extension is right and proper, let it be granted.

Mr. BLISS. Mr. Chairman, I should not have felt it incumbent on me to make any remarks upon this bill, but I had endeavored to obtain all the light the sources of light would furnish us on the subject. I had supposed that the proceedings—the application on the part of the patentee had been conducted with fairness and honorable manliness. It was my conclusion, from what I knew myself, and from the expressions I had heard from the mouths of different gentlemen upon this floor, that the application, in this case, was distinguished from other applications, on account of the honorable and manly bearing of the patentee.

I was somewhat startled at the extraordinary announcement made upon the floor by the honorable gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] that the corrupting influence of money and bribery had been resorted to by this applicant, whether to affect, directly or indirectly, the minds of members of this House, I do not know, nor is it material, but to procure the consummation of his object—the passage of this bill. I thought when the gentleman from North Carolina was called upon for the authority upon which that statement was based, that it was due to the members of this body that he should give it promptly, and without any hesitation. In a proceeding of this kind, where we propose to administer equity and justice under discretion, and not by fixed rules of law, in determining the vote I would give, I would not tolerate an individual under such circumstances in approaching this body, as the applicant is charged with approaching it; and I must be permitted to say to the gentleman from North Carolina, inasmuch as he denies the possession of positive information upon the subject, but relies upon rumor for the truth of his statement, that I disbelieve that rumor. It does not comport with my own knowledge or experience, or with that of other gentlemen who have expressed their views upon this subject. So much for that branch of the question.

My own views of the policy and theory of the patent system do not seem to comport with the views of the gentleman from North Carolina. I hold, and it is the doctrine of the law, and it is enforced by statute, that where an individual, by virtue of his skill, his acquirements, or his native ingenuity, has been able to produce an invention or improvement in the arts or sciences, that it is his own property; it is the child of his own intellect; and if the Government will secure to him the exclusive benefit of his own invention, it is not a monopoly in the ordinary sense of that term, although I know the British Parliament saw fit to entitle its patent laws statutes of monopoly. I know the word monopoly is used in France, and I know it has been used to some extent as applicable in the definition of our patent laws in this country; but, nevertheless, a patent is not a monopoly. It is to secure to the discoverer and inventor a right to what he has himself produced, and it infringes upon no other man's right of production; it infringes upon no other man's right to the use of his property and the results of his intellect. It is not, therefore, a monopoly.

The policy in enlightened countries upon this subject has been liberal to the inventor, because liberality to the inventor secures the public benefit. No man knows, or can conceive the infinite variety there is in the combinations of machinery. No man can judge that, because many useful inventions have been made, others may not also be made equally useful, and more so. And hence it is the policy of the law and of reason to stimulate the inventive genius of the country; for thereby progress and improvement are secured. Hence, the law sets men's minds to work, under the stimulus of motive to prosecute studies, and discoveries, and inventions, by securing to individuals who shall make a useful discovery, or a useful invention, the right to the benefits resulting from it for a limited period of time. A restriction on the public from imitating a useful invention should not be perpetual. It is limited to a brief space of time. It is also in keeping with the doctrines of the patent laws of this country, that if an individual should by accident be unable to reduce his invention to practice, or should by any other state of circumstances be prevented from availing himself of the fair and appropriate profits which, under ordinary circumstances, would result from the employment of this invention, there shall be, in view of such circumstances, a further chance to reap his reward by extending his patent.

Now, suppose it to be true, that Mr. Colt has made some money—some half a million of dollars, or, if you please, even a million—out of his invention—I say to you that a sufficient answer to that argument is, that this is a great invention; that its value is not to be measured by the profits he has received, or by anything like that; but its value is to be estimated by millions untold to this nation, and by millions to the world. Everybody will concede that. No man undertakes to impugn the usefulness of Colt's pistol or revolving arms. But gentlemen say that, in consideration of having bestowed this great and almost inestimable advantage on the world, after having suffered years of penury and toil, after having had his patent sold out, and after having succeeded, in the lapse of many years, in some manner, by reinvesting himself with the title to the patent by a sale in chancery, through a receiver, he has had of late better success. They argue that since the extension of the patent for seven years, subsequently to the first grant, he has begun to accumulate an immense fortune. Nobody pretends to know how large the fortune is; some say it is half a million of dollars, and some say it is a million; and some would limit it to a much smaller sum than the first; while, still again, some doubt whether he has derived any profit from it at all. But the best evidence that we have on the subject to-day is, that Mr. Colt is not worth a dollar in the world beyond his investment in these manufactures. Now, I say it is a narrow and illiberal view of the subject to say that the discoverer and producer of an invention so valuable to mankind should be denied the reasonable request which he asks, for carrying out an equivalent to his first fourteen years patented term, because he is not in the gutter, and too poor to rise therefrom.

But again: the provisions of this bill are such as to guard the interests of the Government carefully. While Mr. Colt is allowed what they call a monopoly of his invention, so far as the world at large is concerned, this Government has secured to itself, by a provision in this bill—if it passes—the right to manufacture Colt's arms, and to use his invention, and treat it, in all respects, as though it had not been patented by law at all.

Well, now, it is manifest to the House that his principal prospect of sale is to the Government of the United States, so far as those sales can be made in this country. The Government is the great user of arms. The Government is the power which is called upon to use them. They are an appropriate arm to be used in our Army, and appropriate to be kept in our armories and arsenals. The Government, then, would be the principal purchaser. But the Government is relieved from the operation of Colt's patent; and, so far as they are concerned, there is no monopoly, and he is, therefore, compelled to rely upon that patent, so far as it promotes his dealings with the community generally. Now, it seems to me that Mr. Colt's request is a reasonable one. If it be untrue—as I believe it to be, and founded upon a simple mistake—that corrupting and improper influences have been resorted to by Mr. Colt, to operate upon the minds of the members of this House, I think the report which has been made in the Senate upon this subject, and the report which has emanated from the House committee, should satisfy every one that it is fair to give Mr. Colt the benefit of the extension which he asks.

It is upon these grounds, and this view of the subject, that I have determined to give my vote for the bill. But I will not do it, if any evidence or argument can be adduced by the other side to overcome those convictions. Otherwise I shall vote for it; and I shall do it in the generous spirit of the patent system, as it prevails in our country, and in all enlightened countries in the world, where the mechanic arts have been carried to so great a degree of perfection, and more through the instrumentality of the laws, the extension of which we propose here, than from any other single cause.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. It has been with much regret and surprise that I have listened to the statements made by honorable gentlemen, insinuating corruption against the members of this body. Such statements have been made both by a friend and by an opponent of this bill. There is not, then, a member of this House but has his reputation involved in such an imputation. I feel that when such statements are made it is due to the House of Representatives, it is due to the American people, that we should make an investigation into the charges. I have sometimes seen such insinuations floating through the newspapers of the country, and I have felt humiliated whenever I have met with such paragraphs. But now the imputations are made upon this floor—at least insinuations that attempts have been made to corrupt members of this House, or that approaches have been made to them through their friends. I feel, sir, that it is due to the American Congress that an investigation should be made when such statements are presented here.

But, inasmuch as a decision was made in the committee this morning, which will not permit us to pass over this bill and take up another bill upon the Calendar, I respectfully suggest, in order that we may give to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] an opportunity to introduce the resolution which he has read to the House, and that we may take action upon it before we dispose of this bill, that the committee rise and report favorably to postponing any action upon this bill to some future day.

Mr. CUTTING. Will the gentleman from Tennessee withdraw that motion for a few moments, to enable me to make a few remarks in reference to an observation which reached my ear, very imperfectly, from the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STEVENS] but which he repeated in a way that makes it a matter personal to myself that I should say a word in reference to it? I hope the gentleman will withdraw the motion.

Mr. LETCHER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion. I want to discuss this bill.

Mr. WALSH. So do I.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. I will withdraw the motion. But before I sit down I have a single additional remark to make. I have no means of determining whether these insinuations are founded in fact or not. I have no reason to believe they are. But if the impression exists upon the mind of a single member of this body that approaches have been made to members, with a view to tamper with the honesty and integrity of the House, I think it is due to us that we should make an investigation into the facts. I withdraw the motion to rise.

Mr. LETCHER obtained the floor.

Mr. CUTTING. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment. I rise to make an explanation somewhat personal to myself. I rarely trouble the House or the committee with remarks upon pending measures. I find that I have much more to learn than it is possible for me to teach to others; and I would not have deviated, in the present instance, from the course which I have generally pursued, if it had not been for a remark that dropped from the gentleman from Michigan, to which I desire to call the attention of the committee; because, in the estimation of some gentlemen, it might, perhaps, be supposed to furnish the key to the motive that will influence my vote.

The gentleman from Michigan remarked that he expected to be opposed in reference to this bill, by members of this House, who have been employed as counsel in the controversies relating to the Colt patent. Some years ago there was a controversy of this description, when Mr. Colt filed his bill, or commenced his action—I do not recollect which—against manufacturers in New York, Messrs. Young & Leavitt, for an alleged infringement of his patent. On that occasion, I was employed as one of the counsel for the defendants. I participated very little either in the argument or the trial, but nevertheless I stand here answering precisely to the description of that class of gentlemen who we are told will be opposed to this claim from such an influence. I was employed as counsel in that case, and I do not know that there is another gentleman in this House who has occupied the position of counsel in any of the controversies in connection with this patent.

Sir, to those of this committee who know me, it would be unnecessary for me to say anything upon this subject; but to a great many who do not know me, I will say that I have been requested—I might say solicited—by these clients, to withdraw all opposition to this extension. They represented to me that, for reasons which they do not explain to me, but left open for me to conjecture, they preferred that the bill should be passed. I told them that I should vote upon this measure, as upon all others, upon the information which I should receive in this House; and that if the reasons for the passage of this bill commended themselves to my judgment, I should vote for it; and, on the other hand, quite as freely vote against it, notwithstanding the request of those gentlemen, who had been my clients, that I would withdraw all opposition to it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is my intention to vote against this extension. I beg to state to the committee briefly the reasons which are sufficient to direct my own judgment and my own course upon this matter. As I understand, the patent laws were passed granting to the inventor of a meritorious matter the exclusive right for a period of fourteen years to the enjoyment of the fruits of his ingenuity. It was considered on the one hand, that the reward which he would reap during that period of fourteen years would be a consideration for yielding up to the community at large for general enjoyment at the expiration of the fourteen years, that which he had invented. It was found, however, that men of small means very frequently could not get their inventions into active notice until the period of fourteen years had nearly expired, and instead of being a source of profit to them, as the Government intended, it sometimes and frequently was the source of loss, and almost always of disappointment and regret. In order to avoid those evils to inventors, it was agreed by Congress that the Commissioner of Patents should have the right to extend the patent at any period before the expiration of the fourteen years, for a further term of seven years. It fixed these two characteristics, which were to govern the Commissioner in all such applications. In the first place, he was bound to ascertain whether the extension of the patent would be compatible with the public weal; and secondly, he was to ascertain whether or not the inventor had, during the fourteen years, made, and if so, how much from the fruits of this grant.

In order to guide the Commissioner of Patents, if I remember correctly, the act of 1836 required, as a condition precedent, that the inventor should file a statement, under oath, giving the details of expenditures and receipts, for the purpose of ascertaining how the balance stood. Now, I ask the chairman of the Committee on Patents, whether that prerequisite has been complied with in this case? Because, though Congress may dispense with it, yet that which was deemed a vital and material part of the rule, which was to govern the Commissioner, should always be the guide of this committee. They say that they have ascertained that he has made certain profits, and has invested them in buildings. I call on the members of the Committee on Patents to give us the information which I now ask. Has Mr. Colt ever filed a statement under his oath, of the amount he has expended, and the amount he has received? If so, I desire its production, that we may at once have that first preliminary piece of evidence. If I am to have it, I should like to have it now, that I may make some remarks on it. If the chairman of the Committee on Patents [Mr. THURSTON] is absent, at this time, from the Hall, let some other gentleman of that committee tell us whether the document which the law requires as preliminary, has any existence, and if so, where it is? While waiting for an answer, I shall proceed to a few more reasons which shall govern me, and they are these: The committee say that this patent ought to be extended a second time because the good of the United States will thereby be promoted. The committee will bear in mind that the patent has still three years to run, and that they want to splice on at the end of the three years this additional term of seven years, so as to make it ten years from February last. And then they say that the good of this country, for which we are legislating, requires that to be done; and how is that made out? Why, if we do not give him the exclusive right to manufacture these weapons in the United States, there will be rival establishments started here that will compete with him and make inferior articles, and that thereby the community will be injured.

Let me grant, for the purpose of the argument, that to extend the exclusive right to Mr. Colt for seven years more will prohibit every man in this country from engaging in the manufacture of these articles. I ask if these patent laws extend to Germany, England, Scotland and Ireland, and all the rest of the civilized world? This Congress, then, would fetter the people of the United States for a further time of seven years, rendering them the only people upon the face of the civilized globe that cannot engage in this branch of manufacture, and leaving it to the whole of Europe, and every part of the world, to engage in the undertaking. Cannot they make spurious articles? Are the German manufactures of scythes, knives, and forks comparable to the productions of England and this country? Can they not make spurious articles in England? What do they want of patent laws, if they cannot make spurious articles? Would not this country be flooded with cheap and inferior arms from abroad, even though you were to extend this patent? The only effect would be to give full latitude and liberty to all the world, except the citizens of the country you represent, to engage in this branch of manufactures; and that, they say, is to advance the public interests of the United States. Why, carry it out a little further, and prohibit the people of the United States from manufacturing any articles useful to the community, and leave the rest of the world at liberty to do as they choose, and I ask you what the productive interest of the country would be in a little while under such legislation as that?

Again, are we at this period of the world to say that competition in the manufacture of fire-arms will not tend, like competition in the manufacture of everything else, to bring out the best article that the wit, ingenuity, and capital of man can possibly devise. Again, it is said that we must, at the end of three years, extend the patent for seven years more, for the purpose of enabling Mr. Colt to do—what? Why, to make so much money during that interval, and perfect his building, tools, and instruments, as to defy competition. In other words, you are to give to him substantially the power to put down any rival manufacturers for all time to come. If the manufacture of spurious articles is to be avoided by the extension of this patent, as gentlemen contend, the argument which would allow Colt to continue his patent for seven years, would also allow him to continue it perpetually.

In regard to this matter of profit, I wish to know where is the evidence as to the amount of money that has been made by Mr. Colt. I observe upon my table a letter from the chairman of the Committee on Patents to the Commissioner of Patents, dated in January last, in which he complains that those who deal largely, I suppose, in gossip, and who have little else to do than to amuse themselves with tittle-tattle about applicants to Congress, and members, and everything else that does not exactly concern themselves, credited or believed the rumor that Mr. Colt had made millions of dollars by the manufacture of his arms. The Committee on Patents deny the truth of the rumor; but in their denial they seem to make a concession that at least advances a very little way in ascertaining how much has been made. The chairman of the Committee on Patents uses the following language:

"Since the committee reported to Congress, my attention has been called to a decision made by you, on the application of Colonel Colt, for the extension of another patent for some improvements to his original invention last summer, in which you state, in substance, that Mr. Colt had realized a million of dollars out of his invention; and that this fact had been proved by witnesses in the presence of Mr. Colt's counsel, who virtually conceded the point."

I do not know who has seen that decision. I never did. The letter goes on:

"As this statement differs entirely from what Colonel Colt has now laid before Congress, and shows a profit of more than twice as much as now appears."

Now, a million of dollars was said to be the money that he had realized out of the invention; and when it is stated, on authority, that that sum is twice as much as he actually made, it seems to be conceded that, in point of fact, he made $500,000 profit. When it was very properly observed by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] that that money was realized out of a different patent, No. said the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STEVENS,] this patent is blended with the one which Congress is now asked to extend, and may be considered part and parcel of it. And so, if the gentleman from Michigan is right, Mr. Colt has secured profit of half a million of dollars on the patent which we are now to extend.

But, independently of that, the committee say that the moneys which he has earned have been invested in manufactories, and in the means of carrying out this great enterprise to perfection. Now, I ask, what are these manufactories worth? There is one, and I believe an extensive one, in Hartford, Connecticut; and can any gentleman say how much money has been invested there? There is another of them in London; and can anybody tell me how much money has been expended on it? Yet that grand establishment in Hartford, and its splendid competitor in London, together with the machinery, tools, and implements necessary to carry on the manufacture, have all been realized and earned within the last two years of the existence of this patent. Now, what is the value of these manufactories? How much are the buildings, lands, and machinery in Hartford and London worth? For whatever may be the aggregate value of them, that value has been amassed since a very few years; and the question is, how long since?

Mr. HUGHES. Will my colleague yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CUTTING. Certainly.

Mr. LETCHER. Oh, that seems to me to be going rather too far, [laughter,] when I yield the floor for a personal explanation, that it should be given up to a third hand.

Mr. HUGHES. I merely wanted to make an inquiry.

Mr. CUTTING. I have not the smallest objection to yield for the purpose. If any other member has, of course I must go on with my remarks.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when the chairman of the committee, in what he read this morning, conceded that the results, the profits of this manufacture, have been sufficient to build up these two stupendous establishments, the question arises, how long did it require to make these profits? How long has it been since Mr. Colt commenced to derive such profits from his business? As I understood him this morning, the statement was, that in 1850 this patent belonged to the effects of a broken and insolvent company, established in Paterson of which the capital was $230,000, and in which Mr. Colt owned stock. The chairman of the committee did not say that Mr. Colt paid the money for it, but that he owned stock to the amount of $50,000. Was this $50,000 worth of stock subscribed for by him, or was it the price paid for the patent by the company to which Mr. Colt assigned and transferred it?

A little light on this subject would let us into the understanding of the whole of this matter. When the creditors of that company placed its effects in the hands of receivers, this patent was put up and sold at public auction, and Mr. Colt bought it in, and bought it at the cost of one dollar; and having bought it for one dollar, he has proceeded, and since that time—for he was a moneyless man, and without aid—he has gone forward and started his establishment in Hartford, and built up a large concern there; has crossed the seas, established himself in London, and, as I understand, is now supplying the British army with pistols of his manufacture, in London; and all that has been accomplished since 1850. How much has he made, then, since 1850? What is the value of all these establishments? I ask, for somebody must know. Does no one answer? Was it half a million of dollars? Was it a million of dollars? How much has he invested in those establishments? Only let me alone, says he; only let me go on for ten years more without competition, and I will bid defiance to the whole United States; for then I shall be strong enough to break down all competition; and the public, who are interested in these things, must have my invention, or have none at all.

I was once counsel against Mr. Colt. Have I given you some good reasons which should justify the mind in forming an opinion against this bill? It has been said that this large amount of loss was made up by ex parte evidence. Is there a denial anywhere that the witnesses spoke the truth? Did Colt's counsel do anything more than to sit by and hear the evidence? Everybody knows that a judicious counsel never cross-examines when he makes his case worse by so doing. He takes care to let his opponent put in his evidence, and then he assails it. There is not, then, a denial of the truth of the witnesses' statements anywhere, by anybody. Gifford does not deny it. Therefore, I say I shall cast my vote against the bill; because, if, since 1850, he has made sufficient to build up and finish these two magnificent establishments, he ought to be satisfied with the compensation which he will receive during the three years of the unexpired term of his patent; and I, for one, will not lend my aid to fetter and cramp the American people, by extending the patent seven years longer, when all the rest of the world are at liberty to manufacture the arms as much as they please. When they tell me that he has not made money enough out of this patent, I ask for a statement of the profits under oath. And, in the next place, I take their concession that he made half a million out of his first patent; and from what has been said this morning, it appears that he has made enough since to build up here and in London these two establishments, which are to manufacture for the world.

Mr. LETCHER. I shall not detain the committee very long with what I have to say in regard to this bill; and, in the first place, I take occasion to remark that nobody representing Mr. Colt, and nobody on the other side, has had anything to say to me in regard to this matter. I have made up my opinion without a word from the friends or enemies of this bill, in regard to its merits or demerits. I am opposed to this application upon the principle that special legislation by Congress has become the curse of our times. There are existing laws in regard to patents which prescribe, that when a party or parties desire an extension and renewal of a patent they shall apply, at the Patent Office, to the Commissioner of Patents; that he or they shall lay before the Commissioner certain evidence in regard to it, showing the profits which have been made out of it; and if such a case shall have been made out as demonstrates to the Commissioner that he or they have not received a full and fair compensation for their invention, he shall be allowed to extend to them the benefits of the patent for seven years longer. Now, sir, Mr. Colt went to the Patent Office, not a long time ago—for what? Was it for the extension of the patent which this bill proposes to extend? That was extended some three or four years ago. But when he went there the last time, he went to obtain an extension of a patent for a "rammer," which he had attached to the pistol as a part of his invention. That was denied him. At the time he went there he made no statement of the profits which he had derived from the invention. He laid before the Commissioner not a particle of evidence. There is no statement, derived either from his affidavit or that of any one else, showing what profits he has realized from his original invention, or from the time the patent was extended, in February, 1850. Why was this? Why did he not comply with the requisitions of this law, which must be complied with in all other applications? I call upon the gentleman from Michigan to say whether he knows what Mr. Colt has made out of this invention.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know how much Mr. Colt has made. I answer, in all frankness, that I do not know.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I ask the gentleman from Michigan whether, as a member of the committee to which this matter was entrusted, he called upon Mr. Colt to furnish him with evidence showing how much had been made out of his invention? Did he call upon him to know whether he had been sufficiently compensated?

Mr. STEVENS. I have now in my possession evidence in the shape of sworn affidavits upon this point.

Mr. LETCHER. Then why did not the gentleman have those affidavits printed, and give them to the House. The committee have presented us with no evidence of the sort in their report, but here, at the last moment, we are told that an individual has affidavits in his pocket, and upon these pocket affidavits we are asked to pass upon this measure.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman allow me a word?

Mr. LETCHER. Certainly I will.

Mr. STEVENS. I stated in my remarks that I had these affidavits in my possession, but that I was anxious to take up as little of the time of the House as possible, and, therefore, I did not have them read. I did, however, state their substance. But the gentleman now, not very fairly, as it seems to me, comes forward and charges me with not having them printed and presented to the House.

Mr. LETCHER. What is the date of those affidavits?

Mr. STEVENS. Here they are, and the gentleman can examine them for himself.

Mr. LETCHER. The first thing that strikes the committee, in connection with this matter, is the total want of evidence to justify the extension of this patent. The report made by the committee upon it contains nothing but what is to be found in the petition of Mr. Colt asking for the extension of his patent. And there is another significant fact connected with this application and report. You will find that the petition was first presented to the House by the chairman of the Patent Committee, on the 19th day of December, 1853, and on the 21st day of December, 1853, this bill is reported. This is a very significant fact connected with the case.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, (interrupting.) I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia one question. I want to know whether this committee are to understand the time occupied by the gentleman from Michigan, is to come out of his time?

Mr. LETCHER. Certainly, so I understand it. And if it will be any relief to the gentleman to know it, I will inform him that I do not intend to claim any more time. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am happy to know that no more of the time of the committee is to be consumed under the privilege of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. LETCHER. These affidavits bear date January 18, 1854. These affidavits furnish all the evidence which the friends of Mr. Colt rely upon to secure the extension of his patent, and those affidavits were taken without notice to his opponents. The testimony taken, and laid before the Commissioner of Patents by Colt's opponents in reference to this case, is testimony which it was perfectly fair to present—testimony which, according to the information given by the gentleman from Michigan to this committee, was in all respects fairly taken; for he admits that notice was given Mr. Colt of the time and place at which it was to be taken.

Then if Mr. Colt had due notice, the opponents of the extension of his patent have shown a disposition to deal fairly and honestly with him. They have not been willing to take any unfair advantage of him. They have not been willing to take their testimony, which was to be laid before the Commissioner of the Patent Office in regard to this extension, without giving Mr. Colt the amplest opportunity of showing that the testimony did not warrant the conclusion that these parties sought to establish.

But, sir, the gentleman tells the House that although Mr. Colt had this notice, although it was important for him to show that the conclusion was unfounded, yet he declined to examine the witnesses after the notice was given.

Mr. STEVENS. The counsel of Mr. Colt was engaged in other business, and elsewhere, and could not appear, and therefore the matter had to go by default.

Mr. LETCHER. I imagine if a gentleman has counsel, and that counsel undertakes to act for him, the principal is bound by the act of his attorney.

Now, here was this gentleman who had the notice. According to the letter which was read here, it seems that on that day the lawyer of Mr. Colt was not present. Was it not a matter of sufficient importance to secure his presence? If Colt had not realized immense profit, do you suppose that his counsel would have been out of town at the time the opportunity was afforded him by his enemies to show that fact to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Patents, and thereby to make up such a case as would warrant the extension of his patent? But so it was. He was gone.

Now, I ask the gentlemen whether the affidavits taken, and on which he has so strongly relied, are not ex parte evidence; and whether they were taken with the same formalities and the same fairness which characterized the testimony taken by the opponents of Mr. Colt?

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know how those affidavits were taken. They were put into my hands. On their face they are very fair, and they are to go for what they are worth.

Mr. LETCHER. Then it is remarkable that while the gentleman characterizes the testimony introduced before the Patent Office in notice to Mr. Colt as unfair, he has never undertaken to ascertain whether affidavits on which he relies have had the same formalities for fairness. Ought he not to have ascertained it before he came here? Ought he not to have been enabled to show that Mr. Colt had practiced towards these parties the fair, just, and liberal rule which those parties practiced towards him? But the gentleman tells you that he does not know whether notice was given. He does not know how that is.

We have some evidence to show what amount is invested in the establishment in London, which has been erected for the manufacture of Colt's pistols. Here is the petition of Mr. Colt, which has been presented to the House, as I have already said, on the 19th of December, 1853, in which it is stated that the property and machinery in London are worth $250,000. If there was such a sum of money as $250,000 which could be transferred from the United States to London, for the purpose of establishing a manufactory in that city, is not the inference irresistible that there must have been an immense profit made here? Does it not warrant the conclusion that Colt has been well remunerated for his invention, and that his patent ought not to be extended?

Mr. STEVENS. I ask if Mr. Colt did not state in his petition how he came by the money invested in London?

Mr. LETCHER. He does not state that; but he states, when he got out of his partnership in New Jersey, that he was $30,000 worse than nothing; and then that he started off upon his—

Mr. STEVENS. Does he not state in that petition that he has been aided by friends? I do not know that he has, but I ask the question of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. LETCHER. I think he does not. He says that the expense of this undertaking has been already $250,000; that the cost is increasing every day, and that no profit has yet arisen, and it is doubtful whether it will be profitable for some years to come. Mr. Colt went to New Jersey in 1842, and leaving there the same year with a debt weighing upon him of $30,000, he goes to Hartford, and puts up extensive improvements there, and, according to the newspapers, he is extending these improvements at a very heavy cost at this very moment. According to the petition presented to this House by him, he has $250,000 invested in England; and according to one of these affidavits, he has $450,000 invested in the United States. It was but yesterday morning I saw the statement that he was putting up a most extensive establishment, in connection with his other improvements at Hartford, that would cost from $100,000 to $150,000. From the best evidence that could be obtained at the time the Commissioner made his decision, Mr. Colt had realized nearly $1,000,000 from his invention.

Had not the Commissioner sufficient evidence to warrant him in coming to the conclusion he did in this case? Take the testimony on file before us, take the statement made in the affidavit, on which the gentleman from Michigan so strongly relies, and take the statements in Colt's petition, and the sums which may be set down as profit amount in the aggregate to a sum approximating very closely to a million of dollars. If a party, by his invention, has received a million of dollars, has he not been amply compensated for that invention, and has not the Government done its duty towards him when it has protected him so long in the enjoyment of it? Besides, the patent does not expire until February, 1857. How much money will he make between this time and February, 1857? At a reasonable calculation he will make at least $500,000, and the probability is that he will realize a much larger amount. The claimant in this case comes here and asks an extension of his patent, after having failed to comply with the law of the Patent Office requiring him to show the profits he has made out of his improvement. And now, when he comes to this House, after the rejection of his petition by the Commissioner of Patents, he again conceals the amount of profits which he has made. I ask the House if, under such circumstances, they are willing to extend the patent for this improvement seven years longer? He will have had the use of it twenty-one years in February, 1857.

Every session we find persons coming here and seeking for patent extensions which have been refused by the Commissioner. Now, I take it that this House is one of the worst bodies in the world to be set up as an appellate tribunal from the decisions of the Patent Office. The law wisely leaves the matter to the Commissioner of Patents, who examines and decides upon all applications, with the evidence before him. But, under the practice which has been growing up of late years, this House is to be called upon to review the decisions of the Commissioner, and to annul these decisions, and extend patents to all who have been denied extensions at the Patent Office. Not only is Congress interfering with the duties of the Commissioner in extending patents for seven years, as provided for in the law of the Patent Office, but we are actually, in some cases, extending them to terms as long as fourteen years. Not only are we doing that, but we are giving the parties such latitude as not to require them to be limited by their specifications or models. Such a bill was passed at the last session of Congress, extending a patent, and which allowed the owner to claim anything he chose, whether in or outside of his specifications and model.

This kind of legislation, Mr. Chairman, is likely to lead to abuses the most serious. It is likely to lead to abuses to prejudice the interests of other persons, to an utter disregard of their rights. And this is uniformly the case whenever special legislation is resorted to for the purpose of accomplishing private ends. Congress ought to have nothing to do with such cases. The only case in which Congress ought ever to interfere in patent extensions is where a party has applied to the Patent Office for an extension, and where the testimony produced by him is ruled out by technicality, or where, by some other means, he has not had an opportunity to have his case heard on the merits. Then, in such case, it is right enough for this House to allow the patentee to have a chance to produce his testimony, and to allow the Commissioner to judge fairly and candidly in relation to the matter, with all the facts before him. But, instead of acting only in such cases, here we are extending patents day after day; and we have now on the Calendar several bills of this sort. It will lead to an utter abrogation of the Patent Office, and of the duties of the Commissioner, if the House determine thus to go on and permit the abuses which must necessarily grow out of such legislation.

One word in relation to another matter. There is another thing very remarkable in this bill. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STEVENS] tells the House that the bill provides that the Government shall have the benefit of this invention, and have the right to manufacture these arms. And yet, strange to say, in the very next breath the gentleman undertakes to demonstrate that the machinery and fixtures cost such a large amount of money that it would be far better for the Government to buy pistols from Mr. Colt, than to undertake to establish machinery to manufacture them. If this is so, what does the Government make by this provision? It is a mere provision in the bill which promises advantages to the Government, but which, when it is particularly examined, is found to give nothing of any sort of real, practical, permanent value. So far as advantage to the Government is concerned, this provision in the bill had as well be stricken out.

But another thing is insisted on as an argument why this patent should be extended. It is argued that if the extension is not granted, spurious imitation articles will be made, and that Mr. Colt should have the benefit of this advantage of an extension, in order to put down the manufacture of articles which are not equal in value to his own. This argument warrants the conclusion, nay, it leads directly to the conclusion, and none other, that this House must aid and assist to build up a monopoly sufficiently strong, sufficiently powerful, to choke down and prostrate all competition in this business, in order that Mr. Colt may reap immense profits, and pocket his hundreds and thousands of dollars. Does it mean anything else? Can it mean anything else?

But again: if Colt has had the benefits of a law confirmed by the wisdom of this country, which grants him a patent for fourteen years, and the benefits of an extension for seven years longer, has he not received all that the Government has guaranteed to him as the reward of his invention? But upon the principle which was laid down by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BLISS,] there ought to be no limitation at all imposed in the granting of patents. He tells you that in this country, when a man of ingenuity, industry and energy achieves a great triumph in science or art, he ought to be allowed to have the benefit of the products of his own intellect, and that he ought to reap the rewards of it indefinitely. The framers of our laws did not think that the benefits should be extended for an unlimited period in that way. They thought that there was a time when a party would have received an ample remuneration, and they fixed that time at fourteen years. But they provided, also, that there sometimes might be a renewal of it, if, upon the facts furnished by the party himself, it should be ascertained, that, for some reason or other, he had failed to realize a fair compensation. Then, sir, it seems to me that in refusing to extend this patent, we are doing nothing of which Colt can justly complain; and if we grant the extension, we are breaking down all competition for the benefit of one single individual.

But gentlemen tell us, in this connection, that whether Mr. Colt is wealthy or poor, it is a matter of no sort of consequence in the decision of this question. If it is a matter of no sort of interest, will gentlemen undertake to explain why it is that he is required to exhibit a statement of profits upon making his application for an extension at the Patent Office? and why he is required to show what his profits have been from the invention which he desires to have extended? But, according to the doctrine here contended for, if he choose not to show that evidence there, and if he choose not to show it here, we are to be told that it is a matter of no moment whether he is worth much or little. If he has made nothing, he is able to show that fact, and would be willing and anxious to do so. If he has not received anything from the New Jersey Company, he can show it. He can demonstrate that fact to the House, and make out at least a plausible case for asking this House to extend the patent for seven years longer. But nothing, absolutely nothing of this kind, is done.

When this committee shall rise, I hope it will, in accordance with the suggestion of my friend from Tennessee over the way, [Mr. ZOLLICOFFER,] postpone the decision of this question until some future time. But whether they do or not, I shall ask the permission of the House to introduce the resolution of which I have given notice, in order that it may be considered and adopted.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. It has been my intention to vote for the bill now under consideration, but, after what has occurred this morning, I cannot do so without giving the grounds upon which my opinion and intentions are based. I do not know that I have heard precisely the same grounds presented by any gentleman, nor do I remember to have seen it presented in any report that I have read; either in that which emanated from the Senate or the House committee.

I base my judgment upon the policy of, and design to be effected by, the laws in regard to granting patent-rights, and upon the constitutional provisions upon which they are founded. The product of the intellect of man, whether in the shape of books or useful inventions, were considered of so high and meritorious a character as to

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

MONDAY, JULY 10, 1854.

NEW SERIES...No. 104.

justify the passage of separate and distinct laws in the Constitution of the United States, for the purpose of protecting and encouraging them.

The particular manner in which that encouragement was to be given, or the extent to which it was to be carried, is not provided for or designated in the Constitution of the United States. But the Constitution contains what was deemed sufficient to provide for and secure protection to the party of the right to the enjoyment of the products of his own inventions, and to encourage upon principles of public policy, the fruits of the intellect which produce these useful inventions.

Now, our laws proceed upon the supposition that a man is, or ought to be, entitled to the exclusive use of his own invention for fourteen years. You do not thereby deprive anybody else of any benefit which they would have derived. In most cases, if the inventor had not made the discovery in the recesses of his own intellect, no one else would have made it, and the benefit derived from it would therefore have been lost to the human family.

Now, the ground upon which I am willing to extend this patent to Colonel Colt for seven years longer, is the simple unequivocal fact that he has not enjoyed the benefit of his patent during a period of fourteen years, and that he is, according to our laws, entitled to enjoy that benefit for that time. It is true the patent has been extended seven years beyond the time for which it was originally granted, but it is also true that he received no benefit whatever from it during that period.

Now, sir, if I were disposed to criticise the law itself, I should say that it does not give to inventors and authors such a protection as ought to be provided in carrying out the intention of the Constitution. I should be disposed to extend the benefit of the patent right to the inventor or of the copyright to the author, during his natural life at least.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The language of the Constitution is "to promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors, the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries." The gentleman will perceive that it provides expressly that these privileges shall be secured for "limited times."

Mr. STANTON. That is very true, but during the life of the author or the inventor is a limited time. The period of limitation is not fixed by the Constitution, and you may fix the limit where you please. But that is neither here nor there. Our laws proceed upon the principle that an inventor, whether rich or poor, is entitled to the exclusive use of his own invention for a period of fourteen years. I will admit, candidly, that under the laws as they now stand, upon legal principles strictly carried out, Mr. Colt could not get his patent extended, whether he be rich or poor; whether he have much, little, or nothing, the laws strictly construed would not give him this extension, and it is for that very reason that he comes here with his application. He has come here with his application, and let me say, that application is by no means without precedent, and let me say further, that the passage of this bill would by no means be an unprecedented act.

Now, sir, this is a very meritorious case, as I understand it. I derive my information chiefly from a report made by a gentleman formerly a member of this House, now a member of the Senate, in which he says, that from 1831 down to 1849, the efforts of Mr. Colt to introduce his invention, were attended with nothing but disaster; and it has been only from 1850 down to the present time that he has had any benefit from this invention. And every gentleman upon this floor knows very well that the Colt pistol was almost unheard of until within a few years past. Now, suppose that Colonel Colt has made a great deal of money—I suppose that he has made a very considerable amount—tell me whether the rights of the party in reference to the policy on which the laws are founded are to be governed by the fact whether he is rich or poor, whether he has made little or much money.

Now, I wish it distinctly understood, that I do not place my support of this application on the ground that Mr. Colt has any legal right to claim an extension, but that, under the policy of the law for the purpose of encouraging inventions of this kind, it should be granted to him. This point being distinctly stated as the ground on which I place my vote, it will be seen that I throw aside and disregard the statements made in reference to Mr. Colt's wealth. If he has made a great deal of money from 1850 down to the present time, it is due to his energy and enterprise. But, sir, I take it that the proof in this case, the sworn testimony, shows that the whole energies of his mind have been addressed to the perfection and introduction into general use of this important arm, and that the whole amount he has made is invested in the buildings and machinery necessary for its manufacture.

It is very true, that he has entered on a very large adventure in London. The gentleman from Virginia says that the building cost $250,000.

Mr. LETCHER. I did not say so. I said that Mr. Colt himself said so.

Mr. STANTON. Very well. Here I may say that I know Colonel Colt personally, and that I believe with entire confidence any statement he may make. I believe that he is far too honorable to make any misstatements in regard to his own affairs, even if they would carry the bill. He is far too honorable to use any unjustifiable means for carrying it.

Now, I say, that whatever money he has made since 1850, is invested in the machinery and buildings necessary to carry on the manufacture of his arms. It is very plain that, by throwing open the business of making them in February, 1857, the probability, at least the possibility, is, that the whole amount of money which, by his industry, energy, enterprise, and inventive genius, he has been enabled to make, will be lost. To-morrow morning an invention may be made superior to this, and the whole amount of funds invested in the first may be lost; so that an adventure of this kind is a hazardous thing. The adventurer may, to be sure, rely upon his knowledge that he has the exclusive right to his manufacture for a certain period, and he may rely upon the possibility and probability that Congress, in its wisdom and liberality, will extend the period still longer.

It is unnecessary to enter into some of the points made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CUTTING,] in reference to the possibility of introducing spurious arms from England. I presume, but I do not know the fact, that Mr. Colt has obtained patents for his arms in the principal countries of the world, and therefore in those countries in which arms are most likely to be manufactured, they could only be manufactured by—

Mr. CUTTING, (interrupting.) I presume that the gentleman from Tennessee has not overlooked the fact, that, by the patent laws of England and of France, where an alien is allowed to take out a patent based upon an invention made in another country, that patent takes effect and begins to run from the time of the beginning of the original patent granted him in his own country. So, that, if a patent was granted here in 1836, and a patent was taken out in England or France, the date of the foreign letters patent would be precisely that of the day in which the original patent was issued here.

Mr. STANTON. The consideration urged by the gentleman from New York is not a very important one. I know that many civilized nations extend their patents, and maintain the rights of patentees much longer than we do, and that they extend a much greater protection to inventors and authors than the Government of the United States does. But these are not the points to which I am addressing my argument. I understand that there are only two interests in this case to be regarded in estimating the propriety or impropriety of passing the bill now before the committee. One is the public interest in having the unlimited right of using Mr. Colt's invention, and the other is the private interest of Mr. Colt in making what profit he can out of his own invention. These interests, I acknowledge, are antagonistical to a certain extent. I do not agree with those gentlemen who insist that it will probably lead to the benefit of the public pecuniarily that Colonel Colt may be permitted to enjoy the monopoly of this manufacture for a longer period. It may or may not be so. One thing, though, I believe conscientiously, and that is, that it will do little or no injury to the public, although I would not say that the public would be benefited pecuniarily by a monopoly continued to Colonel Colt.

On the other hand, there are the rights of inventors to be protected to a reasonable extent. The history of civilization shows that inventors in all ages have been badly treated, and that the greatest benefactors of the world, in many instances, have been deprived of the benefit of their investigations; and it was on this very account that a provision was inserted in the Constitution of the United States, that inventors and authors should, for limited periods, have the exclusive right to use their own inventions, and print their own productions. You must balance these two considerations, so that the principle of public policy upon which our laws are based will counterbalance the public disadvantage of permitting Colonel Colt to make these arms himself. That is the whole question; and, in my judgment, it is unnecessary to go to other considerations. I think that the principle of public policy overbalances the injury to the public which must result from a continuance of this monopoly—if they choose to call it so—for a period of seven years longer.

Mr. McMULLIN. Mr. Chairman, it was not my purpose to have said one word on this question, nor would I have done so but for the course of the remarks indulged in by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] my colleague, [Mr. LETCHER,] and some others. I beg leave to say in the outset that, as a general rule, I am opposed to monopolies of all sorts. But I was not a little amused in the discussion of this question at the course of remarks pursued by the distinguished and learned gentleman from New York, [Mr. CUTTING,] But before I pay my respects to him, I must indorse, to some extent, the correctness of the views expressed by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. STANTON.]

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that it has been the policy of this Government to reward energy, to reward enterprise, and to encourage the industrious mechanic. And I can appreciate the motives which have induced or impelled the gentleman from Tennessee, who I hope will not be offended at the remark, to give his support to the bill. I should be surprised to find any gentleman on this floor, himself being a mechanic, who would go in opposition to it.

You not only reward the talent of the inventor, but do you not also reward politicians of the country? Why, Mr. Chairman, the country rewards men for services, by promoting them to the office of President, or Secretary of State, or Minister, or other official post. Why does it do so? As a reward for their political learning or other personal talents. My colleague yielded the floor to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CUTTING,] and for what purpose? For the purpose of personal explanation. I need not remind the committee of the character of that personal explanation. I need not remind the committee that that gentleman evinced no disposition to attack this bill when he solicited the floor. He came forward as the counsel against Mr. Colt; and that was his duty. He desired to make a personal explanation, he said. Shall I, I repeat, remind this committee of the character of that personal explanation? Did he stop when he had made that personal explanation? Oh no, sir. With the ingenuity characteristic of the lawyer, and a man of talent, he went on to argue against this bill. Sir, I might ask the learned gentleman from New York, if he has any constituents who would like to engage in the manufacturing of arms, so as to compete with Mr. Colt? I do not know how that fact may be. If I could put a question so derogatory to the honor of my learned friend from New York, how would he answer? I shall not undertake to say. But I might ask the gentleman from New York another question. I might ask him whether he would have opposed the extension of Mr. Colt's patent, if there had not been exertions used on the other side of the question. We were told by the perfectly disinterested and patriotic gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] that money, in hundreds and thousands of dollars, had been offered here to buy up members. Who, I ask him, who?

Mr. CUTTING, (interrupting.) The gentleman says that he might do such a thing, and he might do another. He might ask me such a question, and he might ask me another. Now, I ask him, whether he does ask me such a question? Because, if he does, I will answer it.

Mr. McMULLIN. Well, really I would like to know, but I do not like to give up my time.

Mr. CUTTING. I am willing to answer, and I should like to know whether he asks me.

Mr. McMULLIN. Well, I will ask the gentleman, if he has any constituents who have been engaged in the manufacture of arms, or who desire to engage in that business?

Mr. CUTTING. Then, in answer to that inquiry, I reply, that no human being, manufacturer or otherwise, rich or poor, capitalist or impoverished, has ever opened his lips to me upon the subject, excepting upon two occasions, one when I was solicited to vote for the bill, and upon the occasion when the attorney of those who once employed me, begged me to go for it. Is the gentleman answered?

Mr. McMULLIN. Well, it is a sort of lawyer-like answer. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTTING. Then up and down, horizontally, vertically, and diagonally, and in every shape and form I answer no. Is the gentleman answered now? [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. McMULLIN. How did the gentleman happen to appear as counsel? Who employed him?

Mr. CUTTING. Some gentlemen had the bad taste to suppose that I could be of service to them, and they parted with their money in consideration of my services. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMULLIN. Well, I do not think they displayed bad taste or bad judgment, for if I had a cause in court I should like to have the gentleman for my counsel, for I consider him as one of the most adroit and astute legal gentlemen upon this floor. [Laughter.]

But I have been diverted from my course of remarks. We have been told by the gentleman from North Carolina that money has been spent, in this case, to buy up members of Congress. Or, to be more particular, for I wish to state the gentleman correctly, he stated that he had been informed that thousands of dollars had been offered to induce members of Congress, either to vote for the bill, or to absent themselves—that is, in other words, to dodge. I should like to have the gentleman from North Carolina name the man.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have repeated my statement once or twice. I suppose it was this: that friends of members had said to them that they would make large sums of money, if this bill passed—thousands of dollars. Two hundred thousand was the last sum I heard mentioned. A gentleman said to me it would be worth $200,000 to him. My statement was, that friends of members had said to them that, if this bill passed, they would make so much—some of them spoke in thousands and some in hundreds.

I went on further to state, that I did not believe that members would be influenced by that sort of pressure. Of course, I supposed that this House would see, that if these allegations were well founded, and Mr. Colt could afford to give so much money, he must have been doing a good business.

Mr. McMULLIN. I am not prepared to say what has, and what has not been done outside. I hope and believe that no gentleman in this House, is capable of allowing himself to be influenced by any such means, either in or out of this House. I am as much opposed as the gentleman from North Carolina can be, to those outside influences, but agents there are here, and agents there ever have been, and ever will be. We are all aware of that fact, and of the effect. It has been the custom of the country, and surely the gentleman from North Carolina does not mean to leave the impression upon this House and upon the country, that Mr. Colt is liable to the charge which his language would seem to imply, of intending directly, or indirectly, to influence the members of the American Congress to give a vote in violation of their duty, and the oath which they have taken.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I never saw Mr. Colt in my life, nor did I ever see his opponents; I do not know any one of them. I merely said that these persons represented that they would get large sums of money. Well, if it comes from Mr. Colt, I cannot understand how he can afford to pay it, unless he has been doing a large and profitable business. I do not know that the money comes from him, but I should imagine that Mr. Colt has some connection with the matter; he may not have directly, with these particular persons. He has gentlemen in his employ, gentlemen who are his professed attorneys, and they have the undoubted right to use all the arguments, and all the solicitations they choose.

Mr. McMULLIN. Mr. Chairman, I stated that I do not know Mr. Colt, nor do I know who his agents here are. My attention was called to this subject by a southern gentleman, at a time when I had not determined how I should vote upon it. A gentleman who had traveled extensively, who had attended the World's Fair, in London, approached me upon the subject, and asked me how I was going to vote upon the Colt's pistol case. I told him I did not know. He said he hoped the whole united Virginia delegation in Congress would go for it. I asked him why? He replied that when in England, two years since, to attend the World's Fair, he heard everywhere American enterprise and American articles spoken of with reproach, because of the want of skill displayed in their manufacture. But when Colt's pistols came to be examined, they were pronounced to be superior to anything known in Europe or elsewhere. He said that he then felt proud that he was a Virginian and an American citizen, and that I, as such, ought to encourage an inventor who had brought so much honor and credit to the country. And, sir, my colleague, [Mr. LETCHER,] although he opposes this measure with so much zeal as a member of this House, would, as a private citizen, yield to this discovery all the advantages that are claimed for it. There are men in this House, who were in the Army during the late Mexican war, who will bear ample testimony to the usefulness of the invention. They will tell you that the red men of the forest were terror-stricken by these fire-arms; that they could not comprehend them; and that they struck terror to their hearts as effectually as Old Hickory himself would have done if he had been alive and present. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLINGMAN, (interrupting.) If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I desire to say a word more in reference to the outside influences which have been brought to bear upon members in connection with this bill.

Mr. McMULLIN. I have no more time to spare; but I will yield to the gentleman, if he will be brief.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I believe there have been a good many pistols given away to members of Congress; and I take it for granted that the gentlemen who have given them away are connected with this application. I do not intend to say that the vote of any member has been influenced from any such source. I do not believe any such thing. I do not say that it would be improper for a member to receive one of these pistols. This is a matter that every gentleman must determine for himself. Perhaps they were not presented with any design of having an effect in reference to this bill; but I take it for granted that the gentleman who has been disposing of these pistols is connected with Mr. Colt in some way.

Mr. McMULLIN. I have no doubt that he has disposed of these pistols as he had a perfect right to do. I do not know whether the gentleman from North Carolina has had the good fortune to receive one or not.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have not, and, under the circumstances, with this bill pending before the House, I should not feel at liberty to receive one. I do not mean to say that there would be anything absolutely improper in doing it. Other gentlemen may have done it; and if so, it is not for me to cast any censure upon them. As a private citizen, I might accept one if it were offered me. But when it was offered to me as a member of Congress, in view of this application, I should not feel at liberty to accept it. When it was understood that the gentleman was attorney, or in any way interested in this application, I should of course have felt some delicacy. I am laying down a rule for myself, and nobody else. I know that those who take a view of the question different from mine are quite as fastidious as I am in this regard.

Mr. McMULLIN. I hope the gentleman will not make a half dozen of speeches. He says that he has not accepted pistols from Mr. Colt. I do not know this inventor; and I here say, that I am willing to go with the gentleman from North Carolina and my colleague, to raise a committee of investigation as to whether there has been any intrigue or corruption in regard to this, or any other proposition which is now or has been before the House.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat that there are men upon this floor who know and can fully appreciate the value of this arm. It has been of immense service to our soldiers on bloody fields. This being so, is it not the duty of Congress to reward men distinguished for their great service to the country? Certainly. This man has made his name celebrated by his great inventive genius. His arms have added luster to the American name. Years of toil and suffering have been devoted to their perfection, and he should now receive at our hands sincere thanks and ample compensation.

I do not blame gentlemen who are opposed to fighting and war for opposing this extension. If I were like my friend from New York, [Mr. SMITH,] and others, I myself might be opposed to it. Those of us who hold different views ought, on the other hand, to yield it our votes. If it should be my fate to go to war, I would want on the field of battle the real and genuine weapon, and not one by imitating manufacturers, which would burst in my hands—one more dangerous at the breach than at the muzzle.

What was done by Congress the other day? Whose patent did you extend? You extended Mr. Bishop's patent for the manufacture of cloth. Have we not enough of manufactories of cloth in the country already, North, South, East, and West? Have we not enough without extending Mr. Bishop's patent? In that case, the extension was all right. Here, however, we have objection. In this case, one of the greatest inventions of the age, and which has done us so much credit, the extension is refused. I do not represent a mercantile constituency, but an agricultural and mechanical one. Those interests, of course, I am disposed to encourage. I shall encourage mechanics. I myself belong to the working class of the community, and am at all times ready to stand by it. I shall vote for the bill, because I believe it is for the just and deserved extension of a patent for one of the greatest inventions of American ingenuity. I do not care whether Mr. Colt has made money or not. The testimony on that point, however, is clashing. He ought to make money, and I am willing that he shall do so, and off the British too. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRATT. As the Representative of the district in which Mr. Colt resides, I feel called on to make a brief explanation in reference to his pecuniary condition, and also to disabuse the minds of members of this House and the country in regard to some of the statements and rumors which have been made, not only upon this floor, but out of this Hall.

In the first place, I was somewhat surprised at the remark which fell from the gentleman from North Carolina. He made a charge that bribery had been used in this case; but he afterwards qualified it in answer to a remark made by my friend from Georgia, [Mr. SEWARD.] I shall ask my friend from North Carolina, a gentleman for whom I have always entertained the highest regard, if he had any reference to me in any of the remarks he made? [Laughter.]

Mr. CLINGMAN. I take the greatest pleasure in saying that I did not even know that Mr. Colt lived in the district of my friend from Connecticut, and I have never heard the gentleman's name connected with the affair. I will say, further, that my object in referring to the extraordinary rumors about bribery being resorted to in this case, was, if possible, to bring public opinion to bear to correct this pressure from without. It may turn out that some good case will be lost, owing to the fact that the lobby are active in securing its passage. If this system of lobbying is to go on; if we are to have this eternal outside pressure, so that a gentleman cannot come into this Hall without somebody touching his elbow and saying, "Well, how does the Colt case come on? If it should get through, it would be a very handsome thing for me; I shall get so many thousands. If you cannot vote for it, have not you some business to attend to elsewhere when it happens to come up?"—I say, if this kind of thing is to go on, the result will be, that it will excite such prejudice against these outside influences as to endanger the passage of very meritorious cases.

Mr. PRATT. The explanation of the gentleman is perfectly satisfactory, although in relation to this matter of bribery any explanation from him, or any other gentleman, would be entirely unnecessary as far as my standing at home is concerned, for such a charge would at once fall to the ground. There is not a political opponent in the district I have the honor to represent who would believe that I would be guilty of receiving or using money directly or indirectly, or countenancing anything of the kind, with a view of effecting the passage of this bill, or any other. I have the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with Colonel Colt, and I am proud to acknowledge him as my personal and particular friend. He has never, in his conversations with me, alluded to lobby influence, or stated that he had an agent here, or had furnished funds to carry through this measure. I spent two or three hours with him when I was at home on a visit to my family last month. To be sure, he does not disguise the fact that he is anxious for a renewal of his patent, and he gives his reasons why it should be granted, which to me have proved satisfactory; and I have no doubt they would prove equally so to any other gentleman who should hear them from his own lips. But enough on that point.

The remarks of the attorney—the lawyer—the gentleman from New York, [a laugh,] might be excused; for, after so long an absence from his seat here, he doubtless thought it expedient to let his constituents know that he had returned once more. [Laughter.] A great deal has been said here by gentlemen in relation to the wealth of Mr. Colt. When he removed to Connecticut from New Jersey he was poor, and greatly in debt; but, fortunately, he has released himself from his embarrassments.

For the success attending Mr. Colt's exertions and industry, he was indebted to friends who—numbering, I believe, some thirty or forty in all—contributed funds to enable him to prosecute his business. I do not stand here to plead Mr. Colt's poverty. He has been, of late, successful; and if ever there was a man that invented anything in the shape of an arm for self-defense who was entitled to success, certainly Colonel Colt was such a man. Mr. Colt, when he commenced, hired a large building, known as the Porter Manufacturing Mills, and has occupied it since, and occupies it now. But he does not own it. He has, however, commenced building an armory which, when completed, will doubtless be a model for the world. But I say, on the honor of a gentleman, that, in my opinion, there is not an intelligent man in his district, nor any man who knows anything about this matter, that believes Mr. Colt has got money enough to complete the work which he has begun, and fulfill the contracts that he has undertaken.

Mr. LETCHER. Will my friend from Connecticut [Mr. PRATT] permit me to make an inquiry of him?

Mr. PRATT. Certainly.

Mr. LETCHER. I see from the affidavit furnished by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STEVENS,] that the machinery, tools, fixtures, and other property owned by Mr. Colt, in Hartford, Connecticut, is valued at $450,000. I desire to know from my friend from Connecticut whether he considers that a fair valuation?

Mr. PRATT. In answer to the inquiry of my friend from Virginia, I would say that I have no personal knowledge on that point; but I have here in my possession letters which I can read to the committee, if they desire it, which throw some light on the subject. They are from most intelligent gentlemen in my district; and I will name some two or three* of them. One of them is Governor Trumbull, once an honorable member of this House. Another is Mr. Belknap, president of the Bank in which Mr. Colt transacts his business. These gentlemen estimate Mr. Colt's wealth not to exceed $200,000 or $250,000, and that in machinery. Mr. Belknap says that within the last six months he knew Mr. Colt to buy steel, and other materials used in the manufacture of arms, on credit, and to give notes for the purchase of them, not having the money to pay their cost.

Mr. LETCHER. Does the gentleman know William Tuttle?

Mr. PRATT. I do.

Mr. LETCHER. Is he a man of character and veracity?

Mr. PRATT. He is.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, Mr. Tuttle says that Mr. Colt is worth $450,000.

Mr. PRATT. I would remark that Mr. William Tuttle is a manufacturer of arms; and I suppose he would be very glad of the chance of being able to manufacture arms himself. I do not think, however, if he were engaged in it, he would manufacture spurious articles; for I know he is an honest man.

Mr. LETCHER. He gives his affidavit, stating this fact, as Colt's agent.

Mr. PRATT. I do not deny that Mr. Colt has in his establishment or possession machinery to the amount of $450,000. I have no personal knowledge in regard to that matter. I have seen his establishment, and visited it. It is not such an establishment as that which he intends to have. And here I will remark that Mr. Colt is not a miserly man. No man that knows him can fail to admire his generosity. He is one of the most magnanimous men of the place. And his object in seeking the extension of his patent is not so much to amass wealth as to build up for himself fame. Nobody that knows him can doubt the truth of what I say in that regard.

I must say something now in reference to the statements made as to Mr. Colt's immense fortune, and to the story of his being worth a million of dollars, and so on. It is not correct. The statements have been exaggerated, doubtless, for effect.

Now, one word in relation to lobbying in favor of this arm. I do know that there was a gentleman here from the city of New York, in the early part of the session, engaged in that business. There were men here during the first part of this session lobbying against this arm; and I was told that others were employed to do so. I do not know the fact; and, therefore, I do not make the distinct charge.

Something has been said in relation to Mr. Colt's establishment in England. Mr. Colt established an armory in England because he believed it to be for his interest to keep upon good terms with the British Government. He had the same interest in doing so that any man would have similarly situated; but he had no idea of transferring his business across the Atlantic. He is an American, and has as noble an American heart as any man. He did so because it would subserve his pecuniary interest. But the work is done in this country, in Connecticut, and is carried across the Atlantic in detached pieces, and is put together there.

Mr. McNAIR. Will the gentleman yield to a motion that the committee rise?

Mr. PRATT. I will be brief, Mr. Chairman. I intend always to fulfill my promises; and I said, in the beginning, that I would not detain the committee long; and I would not have said a word, had I not deemed it a duty I owed to Mr. Colt, to this House, and to the country. Gentlemen will bear me witness that I am disinclined to consume the time of the House unnecessarily.

One remark in relation to the committee. The committee had this matter under consideration, and reported, as members well know, in favor of the renewal of the patent. I think some weight is due to the opinion of your committee, who have investigated the matter. But that will pass with members for what it is worth. Gentlemen have heard the report, and doubtless most of them have read it.

I would remark, Mr. Chairman, in relation to Mr. Colt's career, that he has been helped by wealthy friends. When he first embarked in the enterprise, his father, with other friends, opposed him. He had every difficulty to encounter; and he came down to Baltimore, and was almost an exile there, and was secluded for two or three years. But finally, by the aid of some of his mother's relatives, he procured funds, by which he was enabled to perfect this arm. When he went to New Jersey, it is well known that he was bankrupt. He was obliged to make the best bargain in his power to procure capital for carrying on his operations. He did succeed with some acquaintances of his, in obtaining facilities for manufacturing his pistols; but he had no capital invested in the establishment; and I do not suppose there is a member of this House who supposes he had. Well, sir, he left that establishment without means—at least so I am credibly informed. I have no personal knowledge of any of these facts. Mr. Colt himself told them to me, and with me his word is as good as my own personal knowledge. From New Jersey he went to Connecticut, and there some of his friends made up a purse for him, by which he was enabled to prosecute his manufacturing. And there he did prosecute it successfully, I admit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, admitting that Mr. Colt has made millions upon millions by this invention, is that any good or valid objection to the renewal of his patent? Sir, I claim that this invention is one that has done honor to America. It is one of which every American ought to be proud. It stands preëminently above every other arm ever invented in this or any other country. And, because Mr. Colt did succeed finally in making a little competency, because he succeeded in making a fortune, if you please, is that any valid reason for refusing the extension of his patent? I certainly think it is not, and I believe the good sense of this House will agree with me that it is not.

Again, I call the attention of the committee to the fairness and honor which Mr. Colt has shown in this whole matter. He has not sought to take any advantage of the Government. It is true that it has been said that the Government will never find it for its interest to take advantage of the right granted in this bill, that the cost of machinery would be so great that the Government would procure its arms to be manufactured rather than manufacture them itself; but such is not the fact. Nearly all the machinery at our national armories at Springfield and Harper's Ferry could be applied to the purpose of manufacturing these arms. At least, such is the fact in reference to that at Springfield, as I know from my own personal examination, and I have no doubt the same species of machinery is used at Harper's Ferry. Some additional machinery would be required, but with the full privilege of manufacturing which this bill gives, the Government would find no difficulty in applying the invention to its own advantage at the national armories.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me state what seems to me to be a matter of more importance than anything else connected with this matter, and which has been alluded to by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. McMULLIN.] So long as Mr. Colt has the control of the manufacture of this arm, the public are safe in the use of it. He is scrupulously particular in the inspection of every pistol that goes out from his establishment. While he is at home he inspects them himself, and when he is absent that duty is intrusted to a gentleman who is a good judge of fire arms, and who never allows one to pass his inspection that is not a perfect instrument. He takes much pride in knowing the fact, which we all know, that his pistols seldom, if ever, burst. They are much more perfect than the arms made under the direction of the General Government, judging from the number which are broken in their use.

Mr. Chairman, I have nothing more to say upon this subject. I ask pardon of the committee for detaining them one moment. I should not have done it but for the reason that I felt it to be my duty as a matter of justice to the committee and to Mr. Colt, to say a word in reference to the statements which have been made.

Mr. McNAIR. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to. So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky,) reported that a Committee of the Whole House had had the Private Calendar generally under consideration, and particularly House bill (No. 59) "for the relief of Samuel Colt," and had come to no resolution thereon.

COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY.

Mr. LETCHER. I now ask leave to introduce the resolution which I have indicated, in reference to the charges made here to-day.

Mr. WALSH. I object, on the ground that all such things end in smoke. They are, in general, miserable farces.

Mr. LETCHER. Let it be tested.

Several MEMBERS. Let the resolution be read for information.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of ——— members be appointed to inquire whether money has been offered to members, or other illegal or improper means used to induce members to aid in securing the passage of a bill to extend Colt's patent for seven years; and also whether money has been offered to members, or other illegal or improper means used, either directly or indirectly, to secure the passage of any bill through Congress; and that said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, with authority to examine witnesses on oath.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope there will be no objection to the resolution, or to the amendment which I desire to move.

Mr. WALSH. I have specifically objected to the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. LETCHER. I would be glad if the gentleman would withdraw his objection, and let the resolution pass.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will assure me that he seriously believes anything will grow out of it, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. LETCHER. If I had not supposed that it was due to this House, and due to the country, that something of that sort should be done, I should not have offered it.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I call for the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question received a second.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the resolution will be modified, so as to embrace as well those opposed to the extension of the patent as those who are in its favor.

Mr. LETCHER. I am for making it as broad as gentlemen want it.

Mr. SEWARD. Let all be embraced.

Mr. LETCHER. I will fill the blank with the word "five," and I will also modify the amendment by adding "or defeat" after the word "passage," where it occurs.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I call for the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. PRATT. I hope the resolution will pass unanimously.

The main question was then ordered.

Mr. SEWARD. I move to postpone the consideration of the resolution until Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, in the chair.) That motion is not in order, the main question having been ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. Is it in order to move to lay the resolution upon the table?

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order.

Mr. SEWARD. Would it be in order for me to make any remarks?

The SPEAKER. It would not be.

Mr. JONES. Well, I will take the responsibility of moving to lay the resolution upon the table, because I do not believe it will amount to anything.

The question was taken on Mr. Jones's motion; and it was disagreed to.

The question recurring on the adoption of the resolution, it was put, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed "An act making appropriations for the construction of certain military roads in the Territories of Nebraska and Washington," and twenty-two bills of a private character.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and, thereupon, (at four o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, at twelve o'clock, m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 10, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER appointed the following gentlemen the select committee under the resolution adopted on Saturday last, upon the use of improper means to influence the votes of members: MESSRS. LETCHER, THURSTON, CLINGMAN, T. D. ELIOT, EDDY, CUTTING, and ZOLLICOFFER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Treasury Department, containing copies of letters addressed to that Department by S. J. Briggs, general appraiser of the Pacific coast, O. P. Sutton, and P. S. Roach, the legal appraisers for the port of San Francisco, and also a memorial from the merchants of that place, asking the erection by the Government of a building at San Francisco for the use of the appraisers, and to enable them promptly and correctly to discharge their duties in presenting an estimate of the value of imported merchandise.

On motion by Mr. LATHAM, the communication was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to call the attention of the House to what has usually been treated as a question of privilege. As the Clerk read over the Journal, I observed that my name was placed upon the investigating committee raised on Saturday last. It will be remembered by the House that I expressed a very decided opinion that certain facts and allegations were true. Although my expression of opinion ought not, of course, to influence me, and I suppose it would not, yet I think it would be more satisfactory to others that some other gentleman should be appointed in my place, inasmuch as I might be looked upon as standing in the light of a prosecutor, or one who made the charge. I hope, therefore, that the House will allow the Speaker to substitute another gentleman in my place. For a week or so I have been quite unwell, although for that reason alone I would not decline serving upon the committee; yet I think it due that the report of the committee should come from persons who have not expressed any opinion upon the point made by me on Saturday last. I hope the House will see the propriety of excusing me, and allowing the Speaker to appoint another gentleman in my place.

The question was taken; and, on a division, there were—yeas 79, noes not counted.

So Mr. CLINGMAN was excused from service on the committee of investigation.

The SPEAKER. There is a proposition pending to suspend the rules of the House, and on the subject of that proposition there is a question of order pending over since last Monday week. The chair was then temporarily occupied by another gentleman; and the present occupant can not, as a matter of course, know of himself the facts connected with the case. The Chair is, however, informed by the Clerk, that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] objected to the motion being entered, for the reason that a quorum—as he assumed—was not present. The Chair would inquire whether or not the fact could have been known to the Chair on that occasion, or to the House, as to there being a quorum present?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I made that point, and I am very confident that there was not a quorum present. I think that that would be found to be the opinion of every gentleman in the House at the time, if it can be now recollected.

The SPEAKER. The question is a very curious one.

Mr. JONES. I withdraw the question of order that I made.

PAY OF LEGISLATIVE EMPLOYEES.

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) Then the question is on suspending the rules for the purpose of introducing the following proposition: "A joint resolution to fix the compensation of the employees of the legislative department of the Government, and to prohibit the allowance of the usual extra compensation to such as receive the benefits thereof."

Several MEMBERS. Read the resolution.

The Clerk reported the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the officers, clerks, messengers, and other employes of the legislative department of the Government, shall be paid an increased compensation of twenty per cent. upon the compensation now received by them respectively; and the messengers and public folders of the House of Representatives shall not receive less than is allowed to the messengers of the Senate, of the same class; such increased compensation to commence from the 1st of July, 1853; and that a sum sufficient to pay the same to the 30th June, 1855, be hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no person whose compensation was increased by the act approved April 22, 1854, shall be benefited by this joint resolution: And provided further, That the usual extra compensation shall not hereafter be allowed to any person receiving the benefit of this joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the rules of the House to be suspended, so as to permit the introduction of the joint resolution just read.

Mr. WALSH. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and MESSRS. CAMPBELL and PRATT were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported 31 in the affirmative, (a sufficient number.)

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk then commenced calling the roll.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, (when his name was called,) said: It is rather late in the day to make a question of order, but I understand that the resolution which was reported at the Clerk's desk this morning, and upon which we are now voting, is not the one which was offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CURTIS,] two weeks ago, and for the introduction of which he moved to suspend the rules.

Mr. CURTIS. It is not exactly the same resolution.

Mr. JONES. Have not words been interpolated into the resolution?

Mr. CURTIS. The words "and public folders" were not in the original resolution.

Mr. JONES. And they have been interlined since the resolution was offered.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I suggest, that inasmuch as it is stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there has been, by some means or other, I do not know what, an interpolation of some words into the resolution since he presented it two weeks since, which were not intended to be there, that the vote be taken over again.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I ask if the resolution was not read to the House this morning, and if we are not voting to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing the resolution which was read?

The SPEAKER. The resolution was read. This is rather a singular case, and the Chair does not recollect of the occurrence of any such case before. The Chair asks the House to recollect the fact that the clerks, at least, are not to be accused of having made the interpolation upon the paper. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CURTIS,] as a matter of course, supposed that he had the right to modify the resolution. That right, under the circumstances, and under the rule, he would not have. It is true that, under the rules of the House, the mover of a proposition may modify it before the House has acted upon it.

Mr. CAMPBELL, (interrupting.) But I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not propose to offer the resolution in the form in which it is presented now. If that is the case, the vote which is being taken amounts to nothing; certainly not.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Not at all. I understand that the resolution was offered from the Committee on Accounts; and since it was offered here, it has not been before that committee to be altered by them.

The SPEAKER. The decision of the Chair is, that a single member of a committee has no authority to alter a report himself, without the authority of the committee. It is also true that, after a motion has been made to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing a particular matter, it is not proper to withdraw that matter; but it is also true that the resolution, as it now stands, was read, and put to the House as the thing to be offered, if the rules were suspended. The Chair is not aware that any wrong has been done to any one in reference to it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not propose to offer this resolution as it has been reported, if the rules are suspended.

The SPEAKER. Was the resolution, as read this morning, a different paper from the one presented two weeks ago?

Mr. CURTIS. The printed resolution was the one I offered two weeks ago, and in reference to that I supposed the vote was being taken now. I do not propose to add the words "public folders," and by no act of the committee, or of myself, have these words been interpolated. I propose the resolution as I offered it two weeks ago, and as it then stood.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania denies having placed those words there. The clerks say they did not put them there, and there can be no doubt of the fact, in the opinion of the Chair, that the clerks state the fact correctly. He has had too much intercourse with them to doubt the correctness of their statement.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I desire to say a word of explanation. I did not intend to imply that any clerk of this House made the interpolation; but, having understood from the gentleman from Pennsylvania that those words were put there without his consent, or the knowledge of the committee, I thought it proper that the House should know it; and I intended to suggest that, by unanimous consent, inasmuch as some members have voted against the resolution in consequence of the alteration, the vote should be taken over again. I ask that, by general consent, it may be done.

Mr. WALSH. It appears that there has been some wrong committed here, and I should like to know who has been guilty of the wrong. If it has been done deliberately, it is a disgrace to whoever has been guilty of it, and we ought to know who it is.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no difficulty in getting along in this matter. If any gentleman has voted under a misapprehension, after the roll has been called he can change his vote.

The SPEAKER. It will be for the House to take such action upon it as they choose. Otherwise the Chair will order the call of the roll to be continued.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This resolution was reported from the Committee on Accounts; and it is not in the form in which it was reported. The gentleman may say that he will modify his resolution, but the Chair will also sustain me in the proposition that the gentleman from Pennsylvania could not modify it, it not having been so reported.

Then no power could alter or modify the resolution except the House, unless it went back to the committee, and received their action. This is not the resolution which was reported by the Committee on Accounts, and I submit, therefore, that there is nothing before the House upon which it can act.

Mr. CURTIS. I will state that the word public folders is in the resolution without my consent, and evidently without the consent of the Committee on Accounts, which reported the resolution. The resolution reported from that committee is the one which I offered, and is the one which I supposed the yeas and nays were being called upon, until my attention was called to it a moment ago. I have not offered the resolution with that alteration, and I suppose the resolution, as offered by the committee, is the one upon which the motion to suspend the rules to introduce is being taken.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to ask a single question. Is the resolution which has been read at the Clerk's desk the same as that reported by the Committee on Accounts, with the exception of the alteration which has been indicated?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it is the same.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I do not see any difficulty in relation to the matter. We are still voting upon the resolution reported by the committee.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I understand the committee reported the printed resolution, and that all the written manuscript contained in it has been added.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken. The written manuscript was added by order of the Committee on Accounts, with the exception of the single insertion of "public folders."

Mr. SMITH. I have had it intimated to me that those words have been improperly interpolated by some one having no control over the resolution, and I think, therefore, the resolution should be recommitted to that committee. If it be in order, I will make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the roll must be called through, and it will be in the power of the House to take such action as they may think proper.

Mr. SMITH. It is in order to recommit by unanimous consent. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to recommit the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the resolution is not before the House at all. The motion upon which the vote is being taken is to suspend the rules to introduce it. When the rules shall have been suspended, it will then be in order to move to recommit.

Mr. SMITH. I will then withdraw the proposition.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order. The chairman of the Committee on Accounts states to the House that these words have been interpolated without his consent, and without the consent of his committee. They have, therefore, been interpolated without any proper authority. And I ask whether they must not be stricken out by the Clerk, as a matter of course.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he has the right to order them to be stricken out.

Mr. STANTON. Well, sir, I raise that point of order, and ask that the Speaker shall order them to be stricken out.

Mr. WALSH. I hope not.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I ask what injury will be done by allowing the vote to be taken upon the resolution as it now stands? Let us take the vote, and get the resolution regularly before the House. It will then be competent for us to recommit, if it shall be deemed desirable.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that when alterations have been made improperly in a bill or resolution before the House, it is his business to see that a correction is made; and he will therefore order that the words which have been interpolated into this resolution shall be stricken out. They are improperly, unlawfully there, and must be stricken out. The clerks, perhaps, would do well hereafter to keep all papers belonging to the desk within their own possession.

Mr. WALSH. Can the words be stricken out without the House knowing by what means and by whom they were inserted?

The SPEAKER. That may be the subject of proper inquiry hereafter.

Mr. WALSH. We may have appropriations of untold thousands inserted into bills in the same way. Perhaps we have.

The words were stricken out by the Clerk, under the Speaker's order.

The call of the roll was then finished; and the question was decided in the affirmative—yeas 111, nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Ashe, Banks, Belcher, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Bridges, Bugg, Campbell, Caruthers, Chandler, Christian, Clark, Corwin, Cumming, Curtis, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dent, Dick, Dickinson, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Florence, Franklin, Giddings, Green, Greenwood, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hendricks, Henn, Hill, Hilmyer, Howe, Hughes, Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, Kerr, Knox, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Lindsey, McCulloch, McDougall, McNair, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Middlesworth, Morgan, Nichols, Norton, Olds, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Shower, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walley, Elihu B. Washburn, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, and Zollcoffer—111.

NAYS—Messrs. Bockoc, Boyce, Breckinridge, Carpenter, Clingman, Cobb, Cox, Craige, John G. Davis, Eastman, John M. Elliott, Ellison, Fuller, Grow, Hastings, Haven, Hibbard, Houston, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kittredge, Letcher, Lilly, McMullin, McQueen, Milson, Morrison, Murray, Noble, Orr, Parker, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Richardson, Ruffin, Sage, Seymour, Shaw, William Smith, John J. Taylor, Trout, and Walsh—46.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the resolution was introduced.

Mr. CURTIS. I move the suspension of the 133d rule, which requires that all bills and joint resolutions appropriating money from the Treasury shall have their first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. OLDS. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Jones, of Louisiana, and Cox, were appointed.

The question was taken on Mr. CURTIS's motion, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 101, nays 44; two thirds voting in the affirmative. So the rule requiring the joint resolution to have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was suspended.

Mr. CURTIS obtained the floor.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield me the floor for a single moment. I propose to add after the word "messengers," in the third line, the words "and the watchmen on the Capitol extension."

I desire to state that these two persons, employed as watchmen upon the wings of the Capitol, perform precisely the same duties, and are placed under the same obligations and responsibilities that the watchmen are who attend to the Capitol itself. They superintend the grounds, and do precisely the same duties, for which they receive but two dollars a day. If their names are inserted in this resolution, they will receive an additional compensation of only twenty per cent. more than what they now receive. I hope the amendment I have offered will be adopted, and then I shall vote cheerfully for it.

Mr. CURTIS. For that purpose alone I am willing to yield the floor.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Can such an arrangement be made without general consent?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania may yield the floor for any specific purpose, or he may yield the floor altogether.

Mr. STANTON. I have no purpose in view but to submit the amendment I have suggested.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Is the bill open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. The bill is open to amendment; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to know if the previous question has been demanded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has not demanded the previous question, nor has he signified his purpose in obtaining the floor.

Mr. DENT. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield me the floor, that I may offer an amendment, which I desire to have read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield the floor to the gentleman from Kentucky, or the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. CURTIS. At present I do not feel inclined to yield the floor for any purpose. I move the previous question.

Mr. SAGE. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I ask for tellers on seconding the previous question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and ASHE were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 76, nays 63.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put, being upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. PRATT demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WALSH called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. Jones's motion; and it was disagreed to.

The joint resolution was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. CURTIS. I move the previous question upon the passage of the resolution.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is it in order to move a single verbal amendment? If we are to legislate, it seems to me we should do it in English. Now, sir, there is no such word in the English language as "employé."

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to amend at this stage of the resolution, even to save the King's English.

Mr. SAGE. I demand the yeas and nays upon the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 120, nays 52; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Belcher, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Bridges, Brooks, Bugg, Campbell, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Christian, Clark, Cook, Corwin, Cunningham, Curtis, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dent, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliott, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Florence, Franklin, Giddings, Green, Greenwood, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hendricks, Henn, Hill, Hillyer, Howe, Hughes, Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, Kerr, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Lindsley, McCulloch, McDougall, McNair, Mace, Macy, Maurice, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Middleswarth, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Packer, Powell, Preston, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Shower, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, and Yates—120.

NAYS—Messrs. Boeck, Boyce, Breckinridge, Carpenter, Chastain, Clingman, Cobb, Cox, Craig, John G. Davis, Eastman, Ellison, English, Flagler, Fuller, Goode, Grow, Hastings, Haven, Hibbard, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Letcher, Lilly, McMullin, McQueen, Matteson, Milson, Morrison, Murray, Orr, Parker, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Puryear, Richardson, Ruffin, Sage, Seymour, Shaw, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Walsh, Daniel B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—52.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. CURTIS. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL REVENUE CUTTERS.

Mr. FULLER. Circumstances make it necessary that I should leave the city at five o'clock this afternoon, and I would therefore ask the unanimous consent for leave to introduce the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine is upon the floor, and asks for leave to introduce a resolution, which will be read for information.

Mr. JONES. Mine is a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine may also wish to submit a privileged motion.

Mr. WALSH. I object to the proposition of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. FULLER. Then I move a suspension of the rules for the purpose I have indicated.

The resolution was read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 242.

[Cries of "What is the bill?"]

Mr. FULLER. It is a bill which was reported 31st January last, from the Committee on Commerce, and authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to build or purchase four additional revenue cutters, which are now much needed by the service.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows: House bill No. 242. A bill authorizing the purchase or construction of four additional revenue cutters, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Read the bill in extenso, and let us know exactly what those other purposes are. They may be the most important of the provisions of the bill.

The bill was read in extenso. It appropriates $60,000 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be built, or purchased, in such mode as he may deem best for the public interest, four additional vessels of suitable size and construction, to be employed as revenue cutters on such stations as the Secretary may designate; and also regulates and fixes the pay of the revenue marine.

Mr. FULLER. In explanation of the bill, I would ask the reading of the communication which I send to the Speaker.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. JONES. I would suggest that the gentleman had better change the title of his bill, and make it read, "A bill to increase the pay of the revenue marine, and for other purposes."

Mr. FULLER. In reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, I will say that the compensation is only slightly increased and varied to suit the stations for which these cutters are designed. It is absolutely necessary that there should be an increase of compensation on the western coast or Pacific ocean, in order that we may get seamen on the Charleston and Texas station.

Mr. JONES. I do not controvert the gentleman, but I suppose the provision for increase of compensation is the most important part of the bill.

The question was then taken; and, on division, there were—ayes 82, noes 38.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Upon the demand for the yeas and nays, a division being had, there were—ayes 26, noes 74; no quorum voting.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS, of Alabama, and CHAMBERLAIN, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-three.

The SPEAKER. It is not one fifth of a quorum, and the yeas and nays are not ordered. The Chair will now proceed to ascertain whether there is a quorum present.

One hundred and forty-four gentlemen were ascertained to be present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that there certainly is a quorum in the House, and as only twenty-three gentlemen voted in the affirmative upon the demand for the yeas and nays, they are not ordered.

Mr. JONES. Twenty-six gentlemen voted for the yeas and nays at first, and twenty-three voted for them afterwards in the vote by tellers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair waived the count, and ordered tellers. It was not very regular to do it. If he had followed the rules, he would have ascertained at once whether there was a quorum when the House divided by standing.

Mr. FULLER. I now move to suspend the rule by which a bill making an appropriation of money is required to be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

I will explain what my object is. If the rules be suspended, I intend then to move the previous question on the passage of the bill, after having the report read merely. This will take up very little time.

The SPEAKER. The question, regularly, would be on discharging the committee from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. FULLER. Well, I make the motion that the committee be so discharged.

The question was taken; and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the proposition made by the gentleman from Maine, which is, that the rule requiring this bill, containing, as it does, an appropriation, to be first considered in Committee of the Whole, shall be suspended.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COBB. I ask for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PERKINS, of New York, and VAIL, were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-seven—over one fifth.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 87, nays 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Appleton, Ashe, Banks, Bell, Benson, Bliss, Boeck, Breckinridge, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chastain, Clark, Clingman, Cook, Cox, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Edgerton, Edmunds, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliott, John M. Elliott, Ellison, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Florence, Fuller, Green, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Haven, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Jagersoll, Johnson, Roland Jones, Knox, Kurtz, Latham, Lindsley, McDougall, McNair, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Norton, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Peckham, Phelps, Phillips, Preston, Puryear, Reese, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shower, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Stratton, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Upham, Vansant, Walbridge, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, and Tappan Wentworth—87.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Belcher, Bennett, Boyce, Bridges, Brooks, Campbell, Carpenter, Cobb, Corwin, Craig, John G. Davis, Dent, Eastman, Eddy, English, Giddings, Goode, Greenwood, Grow, Harrison, Hastings, Hillyer, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kittredge, Letcher, Lilly, McMullin, McQueen, Maurice, Middleswarth, Milson, Morgan, Murray, Packer, Parker, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Powell, Pratt, David Ritchie, Ruffin, Sapp, Shaw, Andrew Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Wade, Walsh, Wheeler, Daniel B. Wright and Zollicoffer—62.

So two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rule requiring the bill to be considered in Committee of the Whole was not suspended.

IMPROVEMENT OF CAPE FEAR RIVER.

Mr. ASHE. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the rules of the House be suspended, and that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 202, making an appropriation for the removal of obstructions from the mouth of Cape Fear river.

Mr. COBB. I ask for tellers on that resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN, and HARRIS, of Alabama, were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 106, noes 13.

So the rules were suspended.

The question was then put upon the motion to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill; and it was agreed to.

The bill was then read by its title, as follows:

An act making appropriation for the improvement of the Cape Fear river, North Carolina.

Mr. ASHE. I move to suspend the rule which requires this bill to be first considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rule was suspended.

The question recurred on ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. ASHE. Mr. Speaker, the best return I can make to the House for the generous vote they have given me in taking up this bill, and in discharging the Committee of the Whole from its consideration, will be the extreme brevity of the remarks I shall submit upon its merits. I will dispense with the reading of the memorial of the citizens of Wilmington, presented by me, under the rule, in the early part of the session; but I will read the resolutions unanimously adopted by the largest convention ever assembled in that State, representing, as it did, the chief interest of the State. This convention was presided over by his Excellency, the Governor of the State, Hon. David S. Reid:

Resolved, That the General Government, by the erection of jetties on Oak Island for the protection of the fortifications there, and the consequent washing away of the sands upon the opposite point of Bald Head, and their deposit upon the main bar of Cape Fear, has been the cause of great and lasting injury to the commerce of North Carolina.

Resolved, therefore, That we may rightly appeal to the Government, and we do appeal to it by all the claims of magnanimity and justice, to undo what it has done to our injury, and to restore what it has taken from us.

Resolved, That, in the judgment of this convention, the improvement of the Cape Fear, by closing of the New Inlet, is a work national in its character, constitutionally unobjectionable, feasible, at a cost far below comparison with the benefit of its results, of equal importance to the ship-owner and underwriter of the North, and the merchant and farmer of the South, and of vital necessity to the commercial interests of this State; and, moreover, that it would obviate, at a great saving of expense to the Government, all necessity for completing the plan already adopted, and as yet but partially executed, for the fortification and defense of Cape Fear harbor.

I will also mention that, independent of these highly respectable appeals to the justice of Congress in favor of this work, the last Legislature of North Carolina unanimously adopted resolutions instructing their representatives to urge upon Congress its execution. These are strong appeals; too strong, I hope, to be disregarded by this body. Before I more fully enter into my arguments, I will dispose of one or two preliminary objections which may be urged against the passage of the bill. It will be doubtless inquired why, if this work is of so much importance, did the Committee on Commerce report adversely to the passage of the bill? In reply to this objection, I feel authorized to state that the adverse report of the committee was not founded upon any want of merit in the bill, but upon the fact that the committee had determined to report a general river and harbor bill, and for that reason a majority of its members thought it would be incongruous to report a separate and distinct bill for any work whatever. The honorable chairman informed me, in the presence of the committee, that this work appealed more strongly to the justice of Congress than any other they had before them. As evidence that this was the feeling of the committee, I am informed that there is a liberal appropriation for this very work contained in the general bill which they have reported.

It may be, then, inquired why did I not consent to make this a portion of the general bill? Why make an exception in favor of this work? If the memorial had been read, the House would have observed that this work is now being carried on by funds raised by private subscriptions. The former appropriation made by Congress had been exhausted, and the works, being left in an unfinished state, were exposed to daily destruction; and, to avoid that misfortune, the patriotic and enterprising citizens of Wilmington raised such an amount of money as the officers in charge of the work reported was necessary to continue its execution until the end of the fiscal year. That time has now elapsed, and yet this general bill has not been acted upon; and if this bill is not soon passed, another draft must be made upon the patriotism and enterprise of my people. I would submit that in this there would be neither fairness nor justice. Hence my unwillingness to defer this measure until a general bill could be passed. Some of my Democratic friends may ask, why not resort to tonnage duties in order to raise the amount required? In reply to this question, I will state, that if there existed any reasonable hope that Congress would authorize the laying of such duties for this purpose, I would prefer it; but your records will show that I have made attempt after attempt to have this done, but always without success. Indeed, I know from experience, that if such a measure should pass this House, it would certainly fail in the Senate. Then, this resource being closed, what other alternative is left to us but an appropriation by Congress?

Some of my friends, knowing my strong opposition to any enlargement of the powers of the Federal Government, may be surprised at my advocating a bill of this character; but I say to them, that I have never considered it an assumption of power on the part of the Government to undertake works national, or, more properly speaking, general in their character. Your revenue is derived from importations, and, as long as this is done, so long is it your duty, in one way or another, to remove such obstructions as necessarily impede or prevent importations. Why do you have buoys on your rivers; breakwaters on your bays; beacons and light-houses on your coasts? All of these improvements rest upon the same principle; a principle, the strength of which must be acknowledged as long as your money is collected from importations. But, Mr. Speaker, another consideration presents itself to my mind, which has a strong, direct bearing on this question. It is this: The Government owns, and, as a consequence, has exclusive jurisdiction of the localities where these improvements are being established; and I will submit, if the Federal Government has not the power to carry them on, who has? The State of North Carolina has parted with her ownership, and, of course, she has no right. For this purpose she could not lay a stone or drive a pile without being a trespasser upon soil over which the General Government has exclusive jurisdiction.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will discuss the merits of the bill, and, if not much mistaken, I will be able to show the House, not only in a financial, but in a military point of view, its passage will be highly important. Yes, sir, in the language of the Engineer Department, that "the work is thoroughly national." I will read an extract from their report, with the letter of Superintendent Bache, addressed to me upon this subject:

ENGINEER DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, }
February 8, 1854.

SIR: In reply to the letter of Hon. T. J. D. FULLER, chairman of Committee on Commerce, House of Representatives, dated 6th instant, referred to this office for report, I have the honor to inclose herewith extracts from the letters of Captain D. P. Woodbury, Corps of Engineers, dated January 23 and February 3, 1854, showing the progress made, up to this time, with the works for the improvement of the Cape Fear bar, and their present condition.

I regard the proposed improvement as practicable, and as an object of national importance.

Mr. Fuller's letter is returned herewith.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOS. GROTTEN B. BRIGHT,
United States Engineer.

Hon. JEFFERSON DAVIS, Secretary of War.

COAST SURVEY OFFICE, July, 5, 1854.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your question as to the danger of postponing action at the Cape Fear, I have the honor to state, that the main bar is constantly deteriorating, and that the longer the work is delayed, the more difficult it must be to remove the obstruction. Since the survey in 1851, the main bar has shoaled nearly or quite two feet. The general fact is, that as the main bar shoals, the western channel and the new inlet increase in depth, so that the channel, which it is desired to stop, the new inlet, increases in depth, (by the bar being pushed further out to sea,) while the main bar decreases, making bad worse! Too prompt measures cannot be taken to remedy this disastrous state of things. The longer it is delayed, the greater will be the cost; and there is great risk that beyond a certain point enterprise may be "too late."

Very respectfully, yours,
A. D. BACHE.
Hon. W. S. ASHE, House of Reps.

Another report, from the same source, further informs us that there was once over twenty feet water on the Cape Fear bar, where now only nine or ten are found. This is indeed alarming, and brings immediately to our minds the question, will not our Government suffer in its revenue if these obstacles are allowed to increase, or to even remain as they are? A glance at the situation of that town will offer us a satisfactory solution of this question. There are now completed, or in rapid construction, six hundred miles of railroad, converging at Wilmington. In consequence of this improvement, we find the exports increasing from $1,200,000 in 1840, to $6,000,000 in 1853; and, sir, the most prudent and sagacious of our merchants calculate, that in five years after the completion of this improvement, its exports annually will amount to $15,000,000; but, of course, Mr. Speaker, these calculations are based upon the removal of these obstructions at the bar. If they are allowed to continue, the farmers of North Carolina will have to look elsewhere for a shipping port, and that city, distinguished as it is for its patriotism and enterprise, will soon have "its days numbered."

Our products heretofore have been shipped principally coastwise. Every Atlantic State participates in our trade. Maine looks to us for the best of her ship-building materials; Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, are dependent on us for their naval stores. Sir, you cannot visit one of these cities without being struck with the great contribution made by the trade of Wilmington to their wealth and prosperity. These cities are fully aware of the importance of this trade, and hence each of them, I believe, expressed its warm solicitude in favor of these improvements at our bar during the last session of Congress. But, Mr. Speaker, whatever may have been the amount of interest which those cities have had heretofore in our trade, it will be but "as a mote to a beam" as to its future. In the single article of coal, it is calculated that this interest will be immeasurably increased. The city of New York has already invested nearly a half of a million of dollars in our coal fields. Boston is not much behind her in this new enterprise. This material, so necessary to individual comfort, to manufacturers, and to steam navigation, will be soon poured into their markets in the greatest abundance, of a quality the very best, and at a price one half of what it now commands. I have before me the reports of the most eminent geologists, and they are replete with the evidence of these facts; and if the House will bear with me a moment, I will have their opinion read. I will first read from Emmons's report, our State geologist.

"The two varieties of coal, the bituminous and semi-bituminous, passing into anthracite, are known in this coal field. The bituminous is scarcely equalled for fineness and excellency in this country, and it has been said by a gentleman who is well acquainted with Liverpool coal, that it will burn twice as long. A direct comparison has not been made, to my knowledge, but that the assertion has much truth in it, I have no doubt.

"The Deep River coal is, in the first place, quite free from smut; it does not soil the fingers but in a trifling degree. It burns freely, and forms a cake; or it undergoes a semi-fusion, and agglutinates, and forms a partially impervious hollow cake, within which combustion goes on for a long time. When a small pile of it is made upon the ground, it may be ignited by a match and a few dry leaves or sticks. It may be ignited in the blaze of a lamp or candle. The coal is, therefore, highly combustible, easily ignited, and burns with a bright flame like lightwood, for a long time. It may be burnt upon wood fire. It may be burnt in the common fire-place, and it is not a little strange that gentlemen who have used it for many years, in a blacksmith's forge, should not have used it in their parlors, instead of green oak.

"This coal is adapted to all the purposes for which the bituminous coals are specially employed. Thus, for the manufacture of the carburized hydrogen, for lighting streets and houses, there is no coal superior to it. It will require less expense for furnishing it, because it contains so little sulphur, from which sulphuretted hydrogen is formed. So, also, in the grate, it will be far less offensive, for the same reason. But, as it is rich in bitumen, it will furnish a large amount of gas, and that which is, comparatively, pure. This advantage is one of great importance. It should also be stated that it furnishes an excellent cake, which may be used for manufacturing purposes; and as it is left very porous, it is in a condition to absorb a large quantity of the solution of cyanide of potassium; and hence, is well adapted to the work of reducing the metals. It is scarcely necessary to add, that it is admirably adapted to steamings, inasmuch as its flame is free and durable. For forge use, it is not surpassed by any coal in market; and for parlor grates, it is both pleasant, economical, and free from dirt. If a chimney has a poor draft, it is liable to the objection common to all coals of this kind—the escape of soot into the room."

Dr. Jackson is not less decided in his opinion as to the value of these coal fields. He says:

"The immediate object of this report, is to bring distinctly into view the importance of the coal mines of Deep River, which are destined to furnish no inconsiderable amount of fuel for steam navigation, and for various manufacturing establishments.

"The existence of large beds of good bituminous coal, in a region accessible to boat navigation, is a matter of universal congratulation; and no one can at first fully appreciate the advantages that will ultimately arise from a discovery of this kind. North Carolina is therefore peculiarly fortunate in possessing such mines, so conveniently situated.

"The excellent bituminous coals of Deep River will always command the highest prices in the market, and I should advise that the best coals only should be sent to a distant market, and the poorer qualities be kept on the ground, to be used for driving the steam-engines of the works, and for local uses at steam saw-mills and forges, there being a large local demand for cheap coals."

All who have examined the situation of these coal fields, lying, as they do, immediately on the Cape Fear river, agree that coal can be delivered at the town of Wilmington, or any other point on tide water, at less than $2 50 per ton.

Now, when we call to mind that the average price of coal ranges from six to seven dollars per ton in our northern cities, these extracts should satisfy their Representatives of the great advantage the removals of the obstructions from our river would be to their immediate constituents. With a restoration of twenty feet water on the bar, vessels of such tonnage could engage in our coal trade, which would so cheapen its transportation, that Boston, in the way of fuel alone, would save annually $200,000; Providence, in Rhode Island, $100,000. The city of New York save to her consumers one half million of dollars worth of coal. But however important this new supply of coal may be to our northern cities, it is not a whit less so to our Government. Independent of its forges and work-shops, the Government consumes annually thirty thousand tons of coal on her steamships, and for which it pays seven dollars as prime cost. Our coal can and will be delivered at the Government depots at two dollars per ton, thereby saving every year the sum of $150,000 to the Government. In order to satisfy the House I do not exaggerate the importance of these coal fields, I will read a portion of the annual report of the South Carolina North Eastern Railroad Company, wherein the President says:

"We cannot close without brief reference to the advantage of a road from Cheraw to Raleigh, in North Carolina, so 'deflected' as to pass through the valuable coal formations of that State. Our requirements for coal are daily increasing, and would be difficult to estimate the value of Charleston as a market to those engaged in its supply, or the advantages to accrue to our road from its transportation. We are now entirely dependent upon foreign markets and the cities north of us for our supply, which reaches us with all the charges and profits of transportation, to which must be added the freight and expenses incurred upon its arrival. We are informed that at this moment the freight alone upon a ton of coal from Philadelphia is equivalent to the cost of transportation from the coal fields of North Carolina to Charleston. The article would thus be furnished the consumer at the cost of mining, with the single charge of one transportation."

But independent of the greater cheapness of this coal, another consideration presents itself to my mind, which I would commend to the attention of the House. Our commercial and naval steamers are now entirely dependent on foreign or northern markets for their supply of fuel. In case of a war with any maritime Power, what would be our condition? Just suppose for a moment the mouth of the Chesapeake and Delaware blockaded, what possible use could you make of your steamers? It is the dictate of a wise and prudent forecast to anticipate this crisis, by the establishment of a coal depot at Fort Johnson or Fort Caswell. You will have a southern as well as a northern supply. Either of these localities, now belonging to the Government, offers every possible advantage for a depot; and it appears to me that this step is so eminently wise, that its bare suggestion should insure its adoption. The Government spends thousands of dollars annually to protect and preserve their naval timber. Why not a few thousands to place itself in the undisturbed possession of a supply of the best and cheapest coal yet brought to market?

But as germane to the military protection of my State, I will present to the House another view in which a certain portion of these works should be considered. We have two outlets for the Cape Fear river; the one at the main bar, thirty miles below Wilmington, the other known as New Inlet, but eighteen miles below. The engineer department has recommended the closing up of the last, for the purpose of increasing the volume of water which would pass out at the main bar, thereby removing the sand shoals which have formed at that place; but this will not be the only advantage resulting from the closing up of this inlet. In a military point of view, it will be highly important. With this inlet open, the whole trade of the southern and western portion of North Carolina would be exposed to any inroads an enemy might make upon us. The two forts erected at or near the mouth of the river would be useless for our protection, as they are situated some nine or ten miles below the inlet, and, of course, through it small war steamers could easily pass, bombard, and destroy our property, and then return to the ocean with impunity. An hour's sail would place us completely in their power. The War Department, from a document I have here, appears to be fully sensible of our great exposure, and, as a part of the plan of coast fortifications, recommended the erection of a fort at this inlet. This convention has recommended, in the place of a fort, that the inlet should be closed up, which can be done at less expense; and when once closed, there would be an end of all further expenditure. Neither soldiers nor munitions of war would have to be supplied. So the House will observe that the closing up of this inlet will have a double effect: that of increasing the volume of water passing out of the main bar, and also insuring protection against a hostile invasion.

I have now, Mr. Speaker, given the House such facts as must impress it with the nationality of this work, and place it on the same footing as any other great improvement; but I would be doing much injustice to my constituents if I rested their application on this basis alone. Sir, the first resolution adopted by the convention referred to, demands the completion of this work as an act of justice; they allege that you have caused their difficulties, and that it is your duty to remove them. What is its language:

"Resolved, That the General Government by the erection of jetties on Oak Island for the protection of the fortifications there, and the consequent washing away of the sands upon the opposite point of Bald Head, and their deposit upon the main bar of Cape Fear, has been the cause of great and lasting injury to the commerce of North Carolina."

By reference to this map which I hold in my hands, kindly furnished me by the Coast Survey, I will show the justice of their complaint.

In the year 1823 or 1824, Fort Caswell was erected on this point of land, known as Oak Island; and, in a course of a few years, it was discovered that its foundation was being fast washed away by the force of the easterly winds, the only remedy was to run jetties out into the channel, so as to prevent this abrasion. The jetties were so constructed; they were run out from three to four hundred feet. The remedy was complete. High dry land was formed around them as far as they extended; but, as a consequence, our best and deepest channel was destroyed. In the year 1827 I, for the first time, made a sea trip; and it is my recollection that our vessel passed out of the river where there is, at present, high dry land. What has made the change? Then it was fifteen feet water; now it is dry land. Facts—which are "stubborn things"—clearly show the cause of the change. I will read a few letters from individuals of high character and respectability, whose life business it has been to examine and to become acquainted with every change of the depth of water on the bar, and whose opinion upon such subjects must command the confidence of the House. The first letter which I will read is from Captains Bates and Lawson. These gentlemen have had charge of the Wilmington and Charleston boats for the last ten or fifteen years, and which occupation required them to pass and re-pass, two or three times weekly, over the bar. I will not consume the time of the House by reading the letter, but merely give a synopsis. They, in answer to a letter of mine, state it as their opinion, derived from observations made by them during the course of the last ten or fifteen years; that the impediments in the western channel have been chiefly caused by the building of the jetties to protect Fort Caswell.

The next letter which I will read has been furnished me by the pilots of the bar. These gentlemen I know well, and believe each of them above stating anything but what is the truthful conviction of their mind:

SMITHVILLE, N. C., May 4, 1854.

DEAR SIR: Your letter to us, asking our opinions as to the effect of the Government works at Oak Island to protect the site at Fort Caswell, has had upon the channel and the depth of water on the bar, we have to reply as follows:

The jetties opposite Fort Caswell were extended, in some cases, three or four hundred feet, and had a very decided effect in closing up the channel called the "Rip," the one usually taken by the Charleston steamers, and the effect on the main bar has been gradually, but perceptibly, and certainly, to reduce the depth of water from fifteen to less than ten feet.

To show more clearly this effect, we will refer to the recently constructed jetties at Bald Head to protect that point and counteract the effect of the jetties referred to at Oak Island. The water has been deepened on the "Rip" to about thirteen or fourteen feet at high tide, and is now much better than the main bar.

We have, most of us, been pilots here during the last ten, and some of us fifteen years, and are perfectly certain that the effect of the jetties on Oak Island has been, as we have stated, to reduce the depth of water on the bar at the mouth of the river, and in this opinion the pilots, so far as we know, unanimously concur.

We have taken this method of replying to your letter, as there is no difference of opinion among us upon this subject.

We are, respectfully, your obedient servants,
RICHARD DOSTER, G. R. SMITH,
JOHN W. GALLOWAY, S. B. DAVIS,
S. N. GALLOWAY, THOMAS K. DYER,

Hon. W. S. ASHE, M. C.

I will now read a letter from General Alexander MacRae, the president of the Wilmington and Roanoke Railroad Company, a gentleman who is well known to many members of this Congress, and who, I state, though not educated as a civil engineer, yet, by long practice, stands second to but a few in the country:

WILMINGTON, May 3, 1854.

DEAR SIR: You ask me for my opinion as to the injurious effects produced by the jetties erected by the Government on Oak Island Point, to protect the beach from washing away at Fort Caswell. In answer, I can only say, that it is the universal opinion of the pilots, whose life-long occupation it is to observe the channels of the river, and from my connection with the steamboat line from this place to Charleston for the last seventeen years the same opinion is forced upon me. At and previous to the erection of these jetties, there was twelve feet at low water in the channel at Oak Island, and soon after their construction the channel began to shoal, until our boats drawing six feet water grounded at low water, and were, in consequence, frequently detained from three to four hours waiting for the flood tide to float them. With such facts, I cannot believe otherwise than that these jetties were the cause of the filling up of the channel. The Oak Island channel, which was our best outlet, was within one hundred yards of the beach. The erection of the jetties had a tendency to accumulate the sand between and around them, and as they extended to the channel, the shoal formed entirely across it. If you, or any one in the least acquainted with the drifting character of sand at our bars, were to see and examine the works, you could readily see why the effect was produced. To aid you, I will append a rough sketch of the point of Oak Island and jetties, and the place of the channel, which may aid you in understanding the subject. If you will apply at the Coast Survey Office, you can obtain a correct chart, which will better illustrate it than my sketch, made from memory. Since the commencement of the works on Bald Head, a channel is being scoured out through the middle ground on the Oak Island side of it that is improving rapidly. This has raised our hopes that if an appropriation is made by Congress to finish these works, we shall have as much water as in former times, which was twenty-one feet. Of the final success I myself have not the remotest doubts, provided the plan proposed by the gentlemen of the Coast Survey is fully carried out. I therefore most sincerely hope that you will succeed in obtaining the appropriation. Respectfully, ALEX. MACRAE.

Hon. W. S. ASHE.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will submit whether, if this Government is not bound, when it uses its powers so as to injure any portion of its citizens, by every principle of justice to remedy the wrong done? Let any Representative imagine a wrong of this character done to his constituents, would he not demand an immediate application of a remedy? I am informed that our Government is regularly, punctually required to remove such deposits as may accumulate in the East river, in consequence of the operations carried on at the Brooklyn navy-yard. It is but proper and just that the Government should be required to do so; and on the same principle it should remove the obstructions complained of by my constituents.

The older members of this House will recollect that a few years since, when one of our war steamers, the Missouri, was burnt and sunk in the harbor of Gibraltar, our Government was compelled by the British Government to have it removed; and a resolution was introduced in the Senate by Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER, from Virginia, to appropriate $80,000 for this purpose, and it passed without a dissenting voice. And I will ask, if there is any difference between the principle of that appropriation and the one solicited by my constituents in their memorial? No, sir, there is no difference in principle, the only difference is in parties. In the former case, a foreign people were the sufferers, in the latter our own citizens. But who will maintain that it is proper to do what is just to foreigners, and at the same time to deny it to our own people? I am well aware that some members of this House represent districts so completely inland, that they look with jealousy, if not with ill-will, upon improvements of this character; but I cannot believe that they are so deaf to justice. I cannot believe that their prejudices are so strong, that they will be unwilling to do what is right in this matter. No, Mr. Speaker, that which is right will be done by the House. Such, at least is my expectation. And now, in fulfillment of my promise to the House, I move the previous question.

Mr. HOUSTON demanded tellers on the second.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL, and PERKINS, of New York, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 50.

So the demand for the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

Mr. MILLSON. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken on Mr. MILLSON's motion; and it was disagreed to.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ASHE. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and, on a division, there were—ayes 81, noes 28; no quorum voting.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ascertain whether there is a quorum in the House.

After a count the Speaker announced that there were one hundred and thirty-five members—over a quorum—in their seats.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a question of order. My question of order is this, that when the question was put a quorum did not vote; but subsequently a good many other members have come in who might have voted against seconding the previous question.

The SPEAKER. There being a quorum present now, it is competent for the House to vote.

Mr. WALSH. It is competent and proper, I submit, to have the vote taken over again.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair is about to order.

Mr. FULLER. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair. I wish to know whether the second section of the bill has been stricken out?

The SPEAKER. No section has been stricken out.

Mr. FULLER. Has the bill been read a third time?

Mr. KERR. I call the gentleman to order. I submit to the Chair that debate is out of order.

The question was again put upon the demand for the previous question; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 83, noes 35.

So the previous question was seconded.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. FULLER. I wish to propound a question to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. If it is in the character of discussion, even by indirection, it is out of order.

Mr. FULLER. I wish to ask if the bill has been read?

Mr. KERR. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine, before he votes upon the bill, has the right to have it read.

Mr. FULLER. I desire to state that this bill was carefully considered by the committee. The first section is right, but the second section ought to be stricken out.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. FULLER. I call for the reading of the second section.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read in extenso.

The first section of the bill provides that $140,000 be appropriated for the year ending the 30th June, 1855, to be expended under the superintendence of the Secretary of War, for the continuation of the improvement of Cape Fear river, North Carolina, at or near its communication with the ocean.

The second section provides that the further sum of $60,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be appropriated to refund to the citizens of Wilmington, North Carolina, the amount contributed by them for said improvement, and expended therefor by the agent of the United States in charge of the work.

Mr. FULLER. If it is in order, I will move to strike out the second section.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The demand for the previous question has been seconded, and no motion is in order.

Mr. LETCHER. Is it in order to move to lay the bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I make that motion; and upon it I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. ASHE. There appears to be some misunderstanding in reference to this section. I am perfectly willing that the motion shall be made to strike out the second section, and that a majority of the House shall decide the question. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. FULLER] reported the bill, with the understanding, upon his part, that I should make the motion to strike out the section. Such, however, was not my understanding. I do not wish, however, to act with any misunderstanding in reference to it, and I hope, therefore, the House will allow the motion to strike out to be made. I will not make it myself.

Mr. FULLER. I ask the consent of the House to say a single word in explanation of my connection with this bill.

The SPEAKER. Debate cannot be allowed if objection be made.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The question was then taken upon Mr. LETCHER's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 34, nays 113; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bocock, Bridges, Brooks, John G. Davis, Edmundson, Faulkner, Goode, Grow, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Houston, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kittredge, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Orr, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Shaanon, Singleton, Trout, Vail, Walsh, Tappan Wentworth, and Daniel B. Wright—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Appleton, Ashe, Banks, Belcher, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Boyce, Budd, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chastain, Chrisman, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Craig, Curtis, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dent, Dickinson, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, John M. Elliott, Ellison, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Giddings, Green, Greenwood, Sampson W. Harris, Harrison, Henn, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Roland Jones, Kerr, Knox, Kurtz, McDougall, McMullin, McNair, Mace, Macy, May, Mayall, Middleswarth, Morgan, Noble, Norton, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peckham, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Tweed, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollicoffer—113.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. FULLER. I now rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. ASHE. Before the gentleman makes that motion I desire to make an appeal to the House, in order to relieve myself from a peculiar embarrassment into which I am thrown, in relation to this matter. I state to the House that the citizens of Wilmington have not asked to be reimbursed for the money they have expended for this improvement. They are willing that this second section should be stricken out. I, perhaps, should have made that motion myself, originally, but, in the confusion of the moment, I did not do it. I now appeal to the House to grant unanimous consent for the striking out of that section.

[Several cries of "Agreed!"]

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. FULLER. I then submit the motion which I a moment ago indicated. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be read a third time. I ask the Chair whether that motion is debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable, for the reason that the House have seconded the demand for the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. FULLER. I then ask that the question may be taken upon the motion to reconsider.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. FULLER. I desire to know if debate is now in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. FULLER. I then move to strike out the second section of the bill, and demand the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. The same rule which makes the seconding of a demand for the previous question cut off debate, also makes it cut off all amendments. I submit, therefore, that the motion of the gentleman from Maine is not in order.

The SPEAKER. It is true that the previous question cuts off motions to amend as well as debate, but it has always been considered doubtful whether it was necessary to reconsider the mere seconding of a demand for the previous question; and the Chair, therefore, decides that while the previous question upon the passage of the bill will cut off all debate upon motions to reconsider, it will not cut off motions to amend after the vote ordering the bill to a third reading has been reconsidered, and that the motion of the gentleman from Maine is therefore in order.

Mr. FULLER. I ask then that the vote may be taken upon my motion.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. There are other amendments which ought to be made to this bill. I hope the previous question will not be seconded. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SAPP and Bocock were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 85, noes 31.

So the previous question received a second.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

Mr. FULLER's amendment, to strike out the second section of the bill, was then agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. FULLER demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved to lay the bill upon the table.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Cox, and HARRIS, of Alabama, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 98, noes 30.

So the previous question received a second.

The main question was ordered to be put, which was, "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. CAMPBELL. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 110, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Appleton, Ashe, Belcher, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Breckinridge, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chastain, Chrisman, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Craig, Cumming, Curtis, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dent, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, John M. Elliott, Ellison, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Giddings, Green, Greenwood, Sampson W. Harris, Harrison, Henn, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Johnson, Roland Jones, Kerr, Knox, Kurtz, Lindsey, McDougall, McNair, Macy, Matteson, May, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peckham, Phillips, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Ruffin, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollicoffer—110.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Bocock, Bridges, John G. Davis, Edmundson, Goode, Grow, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Letcher, McCulloch, McMullin, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Powell, Rowe, Singleton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Vail, Walsh, and Daniel B. Wright—28.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ASHE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill had been passed; and also that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

LIMITATION OF DEBATE.

Mr. HOUSTON offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That for the remaining part of the present session, all debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, shall be confined strictly to the question or proposition immediately under consideration.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved to reconsider the vote by which the foregoing resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

RAILROADS IN IOWA.

Mr. HENN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report back Senate bill No. 11, bearing an act making grants of land to the State of Iowa, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of certain railroads therein.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. HENN. Then I move that the rules of the House be suspended to enable me to report back the bill.

DAILY HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to withdraw his motion for a moment, to permit me to offer a resolution as to the time of meeting of the House, which, I think, will meet with unanimous support.

Mr. HENN. I withhold my motion for that purpose.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Then I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That on and after the 11th of July, instant, the House of Representatives will assemble, for the transaction of business, at eleven o'clock, a. m.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I wish to suggest an amendment to that resolution so as to have one hour for morning business. It is that the House will not resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole until twelve o'clock every day.

Several MEMBERS. I object.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would suggest an amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama. Add to the end of the resolution the following words: "And no motion shall be in order to adjourn until four o'clock, p. m." [A laugh.]

Several MEMBERS. "Oh, no!"

The question was put on Mr. PHILLIPS's resolution; and it was agreed to.

Mr. PHILLIPS moved that the vote last taken be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. HENN to suspend the rules for the purpose of reporting back from the Committee on Public Lands a bill "making a grant of land to the State of Iowa, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State."

Mr. LETCHER. I object to that bill, and as I think we have done a very large day's work, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and, accordingly, the House (at fifteen minutes past three o'clock) adjourned until to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, July 10, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. MASON presented the memorial of A. B. Fairfax, Lieutenant United States Navy, praying to be allowed the pay of a purser during the time he acted in that capacity, in addition to the regular pay received by him as lieutenant commanding; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, presented the memorial of James L. Collins, praying indemnity for property lost in the Mexican war, and for services as secret and confidential agent of the United States rendered during said war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHIELDS presented the petition of Colonel William Gates, of the United States Army, praying indemnification for losses sustained on board the San Francisco steamship; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SUMNER. I present the memorial of citizens of Haverhill, in Massachusetts, setting forth objections to the fugitive slave bill, and praying that it be at once repealed. The person who has forwarded this memorial to me states that it is largely signed, without distinction of party, by Whigs, Democrats, and Free Democrats; and that a large portion of the signers are members of the National Democratic party, and were voters at the last election for Franklin Pierce as President. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PEARCE presented the memorial of James H. Gale, praying to be allowed the bounty land to which his brother was entitled as an officer of the Army of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, the petition of Davidge Ridgely, praying a pension for injuries received while in the naval service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented additional evidence in support of the claim of Henry C. Miller and Philip W. Thompson, and of Jesse B. Turley; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion by Mr. ATCHISON, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Henry C. Miller, Philip W. Thompson, and Jesse B. Turley, with the adverse report of the Committee on Indian Affairs thereon, be recommended to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. STUART presented a petition of inhabitants of Kalamazoo, Michigan, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MASON presented a petition of the agricultural club of Stevensville, in King and Queen county, Virginia, praying the adoption of measures for reducing the cost of Peruvian guano to the agriculturists of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHASE presented a petition of inhabitants of Cleveland, Ohio, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a petition of inhabitants of the State of Ohio, and a petition of inhabitants of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying the repeal of the fugitive slave law of 1850; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PAPER WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. BENJAMIN, it was Ordered, That the petition of Peter N. Paillet be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom were referred the petitions of William K. Jennings and Alpha Jennings, Henry A. Wise, Ann Robinson, Edward Rudd, and Mary Martin, severally asking compensation for slaves taken and carried away by the British, during the war of 1812, out of the fund provided for under the first article of the treaty of Ghent, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of William K. Jennings and others; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of W. D. Porter, a Lieutenant in the Navy, praying remuneration for expenses incurred in conveying his Excellency Amin Bey, the Commissioner from Turkey, and suite, from Genoa to the United States, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIT, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred a bill to authorize T. H. McManus to enter, by preemption, certain lands in the Greensburg land district, Louisiana, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill for the relief of John Boyd, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Neal Smith, agent and attorney in fact for the heirs of William Turvin, deceased, praying to enter certain lands belonging to the United States, in lieu of lands which the Government has disposed of, to which they were entitled, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the heirs of William Turvin, deceased; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MASON, from the select committee, to whom was referred a resolution of the Senate, instructing them to inquire into, and report upon the organization of the Senate, so far as related to its Executive officers, submitted a report, accompanied by a resolution; which, together with the report, was ordered to be printed.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. SEBASTIAN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to authorize the State of Arkansas to donate a certain part of her swamp lands to aid in the construction of railroads in said State.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MALLORY, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to establish a marine hospital at Appalachicola; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CALIFORNIA INDIANS.

Mr. SEBASTIAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause to be communicated to the Senate copies of all the correspondence and other official documents on file in the Department of the Interior, respecting the claims of persons for services performed, and supplies and subsistence furnished, to Indians in California, under contracts with Indian agents, in the year 1851, and embracing the names of claimants, the amount respectively of their claims, on what account created, and by what authority, if any.

CHEROKEE TREATIES.

Mr. SEBASTIAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior furnish, for the use of the Senate, a certified copy of the register or record of the "heads of families," entitled to life-estate reservations under the Cherokee treaties of 1817 and 1819.

THE ICARIAN COMMUNITY.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am requested to present the petition of E. Cabet, who is the superintendent or chief of a society in my State, called the Icarian Society. They are French immigrants who have associated together on what is called the communal system, and are really amongst the most interesting immigrants that have ever come to our western country. Peaceable, amiable, intelligent, and inoffensive, they have formed a society in the State of Illinois, by which they are trying to work out this problem of socialism, or communism, as it is called. They occupy the place which the Mormons formerly occupied in our State. They are certainly an excellent exchange for that society. We are very well satisfied, in Illinois, with the change. Since they have come to Illinois they have won the esteem of our people by their intelligence, their quiet demeanor, their amiability and industry, and their extraordinary talent.

They have sent me a petition in which they ask for a grant of land in the State of Iowa, in order that they may establish a similar society there. They do not ask the Government to give them the land as a donation, but that they may be permitted to make a selection, and after the selection has been made, to pay the Government on such terms as may be prescribed.

Mr. EVANS. Are they "rappers?"

Mr. SHIELDS. They are not "rappers;" they call themselves Icarians. They are, in fact, what we in this country understand as communists or socialists, and they have given me quite a different idea of that doctrine—if it may be called such—from what I supposed prevailed in France. Their system is certainly a very simple and fraternal one, and, as far as it operates in our State, it is working remarkably well at all events.

I take occasion to present the petition according to their request, and move its reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

GRADUATION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill "to graduate the price of public lands, and for other purposes."

Leave was granted, and the bill was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HUNTER. I move that it be printed. It need not be referred.

Mr. WALKER. I think the bill ought to go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ADAMS. I hope it will not go to that committee. I introduced a bill for a similar purpose. It was one of the first bills introduced at the commencement of this session; but it has not yet been reported back. The House also passed a similar bill, which was referred to the same committee, but has not yet been reported back.

Mr. WALKER. There is a similar bill to this before the committee, and we had some indications that others, with like provisions, were to be introduced. I thought that this, being on the same subject, ought to go to that committee.

Mr. HUNTER. I prefer that it shall lie on the table. I shall ask that it be taken up the day after to-morrow.

The bill was ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending 30th of June, 1855; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill from the Senate to confirm the claim of William H. Henderson and Robert Henderson to five hundred acres of land in the Bastrop grant.

Also, that they had passed a bill to change the name of the American-built brig Hallowell to that of James Rose, and to grant her a new register.

TUSCUMBIA A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. CLAY. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill "to constitute Tusculumbia, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery," have instructed me to report it back and recommend its passage. Inasmuch as it is a matter of local interest to the people of that section of Alabama, and of immediate importance to them, I trust the Senate will indulge me by now considering and passing the bill. I will state to the Senate that the establishment of a port of delivery at this place is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to create Tusculumbia a port of delivery within the collection district of New Orleans, for which place there is to be appointed a surveyor of the customs.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

INDIAN RESERVATION IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I wish to give notice to the Senate that at one o'clock to-day I shall ask them to proceed to the consideration of Executive business, and I hope the Senate will indulge me by acceding to that request. In the mean time, I wish to have them consider a small bill which has been reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and has passed the House. It will not lead to any discussion. It is House bill "to authorize the President of the United States to cause to be surveyed a tract of land in the Territory of Minnesota, belonging to the half-breeds or mixed bloods of the Dacotah or Sioux nations of Indians, and for other purposes."

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to authorize the President to exchange with the half breeds or mixed bloods of the Dacotah or Sioux nation of Indians, who are entitled to an interest therein, for the tract of land lying on the west side of Lake Pepin and the Mississippi river, in the Territory of Minnesota, which was set apart and granted for their use and benefit, by the ninth article of the treaty of Prairie du Chien of the 15th of July, 1830; and for that purpose to cause to be issued to them, on the execution by them, or by the legal representatives of such as may be minors, of a full and complete relinquishment by them to the United States of all their right to the reservation, certificates or scrip for the same amount of land to which each would be entitled in case of a division of the reservation pro rata among the claimants—which certificates or scrip may be located upon any of the lands within the reservation not now occupied by actual and bona fide settlers of the half breeds or mixed bloods, or such other persons as have gone into the Territory by authority of law, or upon any other unoccupied lands subject to preëmption or private sale, or upon any other unsurveyed lands, not reserved by Government, upon which they have respectively made improvements. The certificates are not to embrace more than six hundred and forty, nor less than forty acres each, and they are to be equally apportioned, as nearly as practicable, among those entitled to an interest in the reservation. No transfer or conveyance of any of said certificates or scrip is to be valid. The President is to cause to be ascertained the number and names of the half breeds or mixed bloods who are entitled to participate in the benefits of the reservation before the issue of the certificates provided for; and he is also to have the lands within the reserve surveyed and exposed to public sale at the land offices for the districts in which they may lie, according to the boundaries of the several land districts recently established by Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON AND ALEXANDRIA RAILROAD.

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate take from the table the bill authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia, only for the purpose of offering an amendment to it, and asking that it may be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MASON submitted an amendment, which was ordered to be printed, and the further consideration of the bill was postponed until to-morrow.

TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. WALKER. I move that the Senate take up for consideration the bill commonly known as the homestead bill.

Mr. WELLER. I believe the hour has arrived which was specially assigned on Thursday last for the bill providing for the construction of a line of telegraph from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean. It was on Thursday postponed until half past twelve to-day; and I now move that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

Mr. WALKER. The homestead bill was made the special order long before the bill to which the Senator from California refers was introduced.

Mr. CLAY. With the permission of the Senator from Wisconsin, I will suggest that the homestead bill was made the special order for one o'clock.

Mr. WELLER. It was not understood that this would interfere with the homestead bill. The Senator is consuming the time devoted for the consideration of the bill to which I allude. We propose to devote until one o'clock to it.

Mr. WALKER. If that was the understanding I withdraw my motion.

Mr. WELLER's motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill authorizing the construction of a line of telegraph from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean, the question pending being upon the amendment reported by the Committee on Territories in the nature of a substitute, as it had been amended.

Mr. HAMLIN. I offer the following additional section as an amendment to the bill:

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That if any operator or operators, or any other person or persons, engaged upon said line of telegraph, shall divulge, or in any manner make public any communication, message, or dispatch, transmitted to or by the Government, or should negligently and willfully change or alter any such communication, message, or dispatch, he or they so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHASE. I move to amend the third section by striking out the words:

"—by paying the same tolls or charges paid by individuals for like services, and no more,"

—and inserting:

At such rates of compensation for messages transmitted as Congress may, by law, provide.

So that the proviso to the section will read:

That said free dispatches and communications shall not exceed a monthly aggregate of more than eight thousand words, but still reserving to the Government the further prior use to any extent within the capacity of said line, at such rates of compensation for messages transmitted as Congress may by law provide.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to ascertain from those who have the bill in charge, more particularly from its friends, within what distance they call "near" the line? The bill proposes to grant two millions of acres of the public lands to the parties who are to construct this line. I have looked over the report of the committee, and find no specification of the cost or the length of the line; therefore, there are no means, or at least I have no means, of judging whether we are paying for the whole construction of the line, for its partial construction, or to what extent we are paying for it in the grant we make. Throwing all that out, however, I find authority given to select the alternate sections "along and near said line of telegraph." I think there ought to be some limit within which the parties should be confined in the selection of the lands—some certain distance from the line. The word "near" is too indefinite. The sixth section provides:

"From and after the said completion, they shall have the right to select from any of the public lands along and near the said line of telegraph, in the territories, not before sold or appropriated, any quantity not more than a section, and in alternate sections."

I think it ought to be limited as to the distance from the line.

Mr. HAMLIN. Say within ten miles.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Fifteen miles. That will correspond with the railroad grants.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is the distance which you allow in the railroad grants.

Mr. WELLER. In answer to the inquiry of my friend from Delaware, I will say that in the report made last year, it was stated by the memorialists that their estimate was, that the line would cost some $500 a mile. They estimated the whole cost of the work at a little over $1,250,000. The committee were of opinion that that estimate was entirely too low; the work would cost some $2,000,000. Their estimate, however, was, I believe, only $1,250,000.

Mr. BAYARD. What is the estimate per mile?

Mr. WELLER. Upwards of $500.

Mr. BAYARD. The grant of land which the bill proposes to make is two millions of acres, and if you give the parties the right of selection to any of the lands, provided they select the alternate sections and within fifteen miles of the line, they certainly could get lands of the best character in taking the whole distance. They are not to be bound to select along all the parts; they may concentrate their selection in any space within fifteen miles in alternate sections. They will, therefore, I presume, of course get lands worth the minimum price. The grant, therefore, as I understand it, is equal to $2,500,000. To construct a line at $500 a mile, supposing it to be two thousand miles long, would cost $1,000,000. I do not know that these results will follow, but it seems to me we are, as far as I can judge, paying for the entire cost of construction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) Does the Senator offer an amendment?

Mr. BAYARD. I do not know that I shall offer any amendment. It is not material, for I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. EVANS. I desire to make some statements in relation to this matter, because I have turned my attention to it; and as it has been the habit of my life to deal very much in figures, I have instituted an inquiry as to what this thing is to cost. I understand that the project is to give two million of acres of the public lands. Those lands are to be taken in alternate sections; but there is another provision in the bill that if the lands are not surveyed within two years, the favored parties who are to take this contract may take them anywhere within the Territories. If this privilege be allowed, then, as it is a matter beyond all possibility of doubt that the larger portion of these lands will not be surveyed in twenty years—and a very large portion of them are not worth surveying at all—it follows of course that two million of acres of lands are to be given wherever the parties choose to select them; because much of this land will not be surveyed. It cannot be surveyed in two years. The thing is impossible. It is impossible that the lands could be surveyed beyond the boundary of Kansas and Nebraska into California. The first acre is not surveyed now, either in California or Oregon, or Washington or Kansas, or Nebraska.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. It does not extend to California at all.

Mr. EVANS. It goes to San Francisco.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. They cannot take the land in any State.

Mr. EVANS. If that be so, they will take either in Iowa—

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. They cannot take them in Iowa, or in any other State.

Mr. EVANS. They can, then, take them in Minnesota, Kansas, or Nebraska. Then they will be able to get land worth, at least, one dollar an acre. If they do so, two millions of acres at one dollar is $2,000,000; which we are to give. The interest upon that, at six per cent., is $120,000 per annum. Then the bill proposes that the Government, as a compensation, shall have the right to send, monthly, eight thousand words. A common column of a newspaper which I have counted—I have not gone into this thing without designing to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion—has one hundred lines, at an average of eight words per line. That would be eight hundred words to each column. A common newspaper contains sixteen columns; and the matter which the Government is to have a right to transmit in a year will be some ninety-six thousand words, which is not more than would be embraced in four or five numbers of a common paper. For ninety-six thousand words in a year, you are to pay $120,000; that is $1 27 for every word. Now, sir, is it right, or is it fair, or is it just, to give $2,000,000 for so paltry a privilege as this? I understood the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] the other day, to say that this was somewhat in the same ratio as was paid for transmitting ordinary telegraphic intelligence. I never had but one message by telegraph, and that was about four lines, and I paid thirty-seven and a half cents for it.

Mr. GWIN. Four words.

Mr. EVANS. I do not know the price; I never had any dealing in it; but I had one letter, and I think that is what I paid for it. It was on a small piece of letter paper, and I think contained two, or three, or four lines. I do not know what is the ordinary price of telegraphing, but I do know that it is exorbitant that the Government should pay $1 27 for every word it sends.

But, sir, there is another circumstance to which I wish to draw attention. For whose benefit is this? Here, also, it is necessary to look somewhat into facts and figures. We already pay for the transportation of the mails to California $621,190. The land transportation, which we also pay for, after the mails arrive in California, is $130,368. That makes $751,558. If you deduct from that all the postage which is received in the whole State of California, which is only $58,345, you pay over and above that already for the transportation of the mails in California $693,213 out of the public Treasury. Then it is asked that you should add $120,000 of interest upon $2,000,000 to that. I leave out the Shanghai mail entirely; and if you do that, it will be $813,213. That will be at the rate of $7 21 per head for every man, woman, and child in California, estimating them at three hundred thousand.

Mr. WELLER. There are letters and papers coming from California.

Mr. EVANS. That makes no difference. If the people who live in California were not there, they would still carry on their correspondence; but admitting that they write as many letters as they receive, and that the postage collected on letters and papers which come from California, is as great as that which is collected in California, what is the result? It only makes a difference of $58,000.

I have more of these statistical facts. It seems to me, much as I respect the Senators from California, and much as I am willing and disposed to do everything for the youngest sister of this Union, that we are asked to do a most unreasonable act, to pay $120,000 in addition to what we already pay, in order to facilitate the communication between the two countries. If there was war, if there was any necessity for the Government to communicate, then there might be some reason for it.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator has made an estimate of what we pay for carrying the mails in California. Is he not aware that that law was passed before California came into the Union as a State? The law which the gentleman charges to California was put on the statute-book to provide for carrying the mails to California and Oregon before California was admitted into the Union.

Mr. EVANS. It may be so, because it was some two or three years after California became a part of the Government, before she was admitted into the Union; and it is likely the law was passed before that time. But that does not make any difference; it was still for the benefit of California. Now, sir, although I am willing, as I have said, to do everything for California that is reasonable, it seems to me that this is asking too much; or, in the language of Dr. Franklin, that we are "paying too much for the whistle."

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to say a very few words in reply to the figures which the Senator from South Carolina has presented. In the first place, I desire to say, that the cost of a telegraphic line, constructed with double wires, from the valley of the Mississippi to San Francisco, according to the estimates, which are undoubtedly below what it would finally cost, would be $2,500,000.

A few words in relation to the value of the lands. They are to be taken from the Territories through which the line runs; they are not to be taken from the States. Two years is the time within which they are to complete the line. There are two additional years, then, in which the location must be made. There will, therefore, be four years to make the surveys in the Territories. Assuming that your public lands are worth just what the Government fixed upon them, as illustrated by its laws, to wit: $100 for one hundred and sixty acres—that was precisely the commutation which you allowed your Mexican soldiers, one hundred and sixty acres of land or $100 in money—or taking the estimate at their present value in the Territories, $1 25 per acre, which is the price you pay now; then take these lands that lie along through the Territories which cannot be brought into the market for at least ten years, but which can be surveyed within the four, and you reduce the value of these lands, by either process, more than one half what they would be worth if they could be converted into ready money at $1 25 per acre. That is an entire answer to so much of the remarks of my friend from South Carolina as shows that the amount the Government would pay would exceed one dollar per word.

What are the rates to be fixed? There are none fixed by the bill. It provides that it shall not exceed a dollar. I stated the other day, that, if you estimate the cost of the work, the expense of keeping the line through a new country in repair, and the expense of working it, undoubtedly the rate of one dollar a word from California would about correspond to the rates of telegraphing which we have on the Atlantic. That is true. I paid for a telegraphic dispatch from my place of residence here, which is seven hundred and twenty-one miles, $1 20. Estimating the distance of this line to be two thousand miles, that, multiplied by three, will be between four and five dollars; while the cost of a line under ground will exceed one here along the road more than three to one. So, I repeat again, the cost of communication at these rates, taking into view the cost of the line and the working of it, will be about the same. That, however, is a matter which the commerce of the country will settle. It will be for the interests of those persons to telegraph at the lowest possible rate, and they will do it. An amendment was offered by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE,] giving to Congress the power to regulate the rates on messages transmitted for the Government. Whatever may be the rates which will pay best, those will be the lowest, and they will be the rates which they will adopt. There are no rates fixed by the bill. I think we owe it in justice to California and to ourselves, to our own people as well as to theirs, that we should have this line constructed; when our public lands are going, they had better go for a valuable consideration to the Government. For that reason I shall vote for this bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I agree with the honorable Senator from Maine, that when your public lands are going, they had better go for a valuable consideration to the Government. My difficulty about the bill is not that it may not be proper to construct such a work as it contemplates, but if you are to do it, it seems to me it ought to be done by the Government itself. I make no distinction between the employment of moneys in the Treasury, and of the lands belonging to the Government, for a work necessary for the purposes of the Government. If the Government of the United States, for its own purposes, requires a line of telegraph to California, make it; appropriate the money out of the Treasury and make it; or contract for its construction for the use of the Government, by a grant of public lands, if you find that a more profitable mode of doing it; but I am opposed to giving the control of a work of this kind into the hands of individuals, or of a corporation either. In this case it appears that individuals are to have it, though, of course, it must pass into the hands of a corporation—I presume it will have to do so—or into the hands of an associated company, before the road can be constructed. The cost of the work, according to the estimate given, of $500 a mile, supposing it to be two thousand miles long, would amount to $2,000,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. The estimate which the Senator from California [Mr. WELLER] gave, was upon a line composed of one wire. This bill requires two wires, and the estimate is $1,000 a mile.

Mr. BAYARD. I should suppose that to make a double line would hardly require a cost double that of a single line.

Mr. HAMLIN. No, sir.

Mr. BAYARD. I cannot conceive that possible. If a single line can be constructed at a cost of $500 a mile, I do not think a double line would cost more than $750; but concede that it will cost $1,000, that, at two thousand miles in length, would make $2,000,000 for the cost of the line. I would rather pay the money out of the Treasury, or make a grant for the construction of a line for the Government, and let it keep it in repair for its own purpose, suffering the community to use it to such an extent, and under such regulations as Congress might prescribe, than place such a power as this in the hands of individuals, knowing, as I do, that the telegraphs in this country, even broken and disconnected as they are, have been, and always will be, used for purposes of speculation. Whenever there is an arrival from Europe, bringing important information, that information gets into the hands of speculators before it is given to the community; and with a distance so great as this line, and with a communication so rapid, and bringing important news from California and China, you will find, if it is committed to the hands of individuals, that speculation will be carried to a great extent, and will not be subject to our control; for this bill does not contain a word for the purpose of controlling any operation of that kind. I should object, therefore, to the whole form of the bill in that aspect.

I by no means intend, however, to say that it is not necessary that the Government, for its own purposes, should construct such a line, (either by an appropriation of money out of the Treasury, or by a grant of public lands to the persons who would undertake to construct it,) to be the property of the Government when constructed, and to be under the control of the Government. That would present the proposition to my mind in a very different aspect; and with my present impressions, believing that such a communication would be all-important to the Government, considering the remoteness of our Pacific possessions, I am rather inclined to think I should vote for a bill of that character; but I will not vote to put the exclusive power and control of such a line in the hands of individuals. I will vote for no bill which confers such extraordinary powers; and more especially, when, as far as I can see, from any report of a committee, founded on any reliable estimates, we are literally paying these parties in land the full amount they will expend for the purpose of constructing the line. I admit, however, that there is great uncertainty as to exactly what sum they will get out of these lands; but according to the statement of the honorable Senator from South Carolina—and it certainly is true—if the lands along the route of this line are not surveyed at the time the parties have a right to select, which is after the lapse of two years, when they say they will be able to complete it, (the probability is that few or none of them will then be surveyed,) they have the right to select the lands granted to them in any territory of the United States, with one solitary exception, that they shall not take mineral lands.

During the present Congress you have passed a railroad bill, by which you have granted land along the line of a railroad through the Territory of Minnesota, and you have done that on the basis that you were not giving away the lands, but you reserved every alternate section, and doubled its price. Under this operation, however, all the reserved alternate sections lying upon the Minnesota railroad, although they are held at double prices, may be taken by these parties in their selection, if the lands where this telegraphic line goes are not surveyed within that time. This is left open to them. I do not think it can be denied. They may not be able to get all those lands; but they may, according to the provisions of this bill, take them all. I mention this only as an illustration of the impossibility of getting at what will be the real value of the sum you are paying when you granted those two millions of acres of land for the purpose of constructing this telegraph. As far as I can judge, on all the evidence, it seems to me that the parties will receive after the construction of this work, the full amount of its cost to them; and though it may be true that its cost to them will be $1,000 a mile, yet the subsequent repairs of a line made under ground will be far less than those of a line made above ground. Well, for that you are to get eight thousand words a month transmitted for the Government; but the community—the public—are to pay these parties whatever they see fit to charge.

Mr. WELLER. No, sir.

Mr. BAYARD. Not exceeding ten dollars for ten words.

Mr. WELLER. The Senator misunderstands the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I think not.

Mr. WELLER. By the provisions of the bill the Government is to fix the price to be paid for the transmission of messages over and above the eight thousand words a month.

Mr. BAYARD. Is it to be fixed by themselves?

Mr. WELLER. By the Government.

Mr. BAYARD. We differ about the question of fact. As I understand the amendment of the honorable Senator from Ohio, (and it was only put into the bill this morning,) it provides that for all above eight thousand words a month, where the Government are the parties using the line, the Government shall pay such sums as Congress may prescribe; but there is no restriction at all in the bill as to the sum to be charged to the public for the use of this line, except that it shall not exceed ten dollars for ten words, and seventy-five cents for every additional word in a message. That is the only restriction. The parties then have a right to make this charge. They have it in their own control; and though the words "not exceeding" are used, I do not think that the argument of the honorable Senator from Maine will apply. His argument is, that they will put down the prices so as to increase the correspondence. If they have, as they will have under the bill, the entire, exclusive control of a means of communication so short as one day, compared with twelve or fifteen days in other modes, from the great markets of California and the whole East, they will charge the full amount that you allow them to charge by the terms of the bill. My own belief is that if such a grant of power is to be made to a company at all, of any kind, there ought to be provisions limiting the charges, and leaving in Congress the right to regulate those charges from time to time, as regards the public, as well as regards the transmission of the messages of the Government. I believe that in all this species of laws, whether they apply to railroads or to telegraphs, where you grant a charter or make a grant of land to a party, the Government should always retain certain control to see that the interests of the public are to be subserved by the work after it is made, and that they are not to be open to too high charges.

For these reasons, sir, on viewing the whole structure of this bill, I cannot vote for it, though I believe I should vote in favor of a bill providing for the construction, by the Government, of a telegraphic line from some point on the Missouri or Mississippi river, to California, for its own use, leaving to the public to use it, under such terms and stipulations as Congress might see fit. I cannot vote for a bill which places that power in the hands of individuals, and at the same time, it seems to me, gives them a sum which will pay for the whole cost of the work.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, if there is a disposition on the part of the Senate to take the vote now, I will not detain them. It will require but a very short time to answer all that has been said by the Senator from Delaware, for his whole argument is based on a false assumption. That I can readily show, but I do not desire to delay the other business of the day, which is the consideration of the homestead bill. If, therefore, the Senate are disposed to take the vote now, I will not trespass on them.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, were concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I hope, by general consent, the bill will be allowed to lie over until to-morrow, and be printed as now amended. It is a very important measure, and one for which I am anxious to vote, provided it is right. I do remember distinctly, however, and I think the country is somewhat indebted to the Senator from Delaware, for detecting certain provisions in a Pacific railroad bill, during the last Congress, in reference to which he and my friend from California differed very widely. I think we had better look into the bill; and in order that we may have an opportunity of reading it and taking the vote to-morrow, I hope my suggestion will be acceded to. I am not for delaying the bill a moment, but I am for passing it. I am friendly to the bill, but I want to guard against every possibility of speculation and corruption.

Mr. WELLER. I do not know that I can resist the appeal made by my friend from Iowa, for I am very sure he is friendly to the construction of this line of telegraph. We do not desire that any Senator shall vote upon this bill until he has had an ample opportunity of examining its various provisions. If there be any door to fraud left open, we desire that it shall be closed. All that the particular friends of this measure are anxious for, is that the line shall be constructed. Now, my friend from Iowa says that he desires to examine the various provisions of the bill, in order to see that fraud is not perpetrated either upon individuals or upon the Government. As I said before, I am as anxious as any Senator on this floor that the bill shall be so strictly guarded that no fraud can be committed. I will move, therefore, that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until half-past twelve o'clock to-morrow, and that it be printed as amended.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Before the question is taken on that motion, I wish to call the attention of gentlemen who are the friends of the bill to one portion of it. I am myself a friend of the bill, and am desirous to see it as perfect as possible; but I wish to call attention to the necessity of an amendment, which, in my view, is required. I have examined the bill with a great deal of care, and am desirous that it shall pass; but there is one thing which, it seems to me, should be attended to. In the sixth section, in the provision for the compensation of the parties, occur these words:

"From and after said completion, they shall have the right to select from any of the public lands along and near said line of telegraph."

I find that word "near" exceedingly vague and indefinite for a law.

Mr. WELLER. I believe there was a proposition this morning, to amend that portion by declaring that they shall not go further than fifteen miles. That, I believe, is the limit fixed to the railroad grants.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I did not know there had been an amendment to that effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) Such an amendment was mentioned, but not offered.

Mr. WELLER. Then I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to have that amendment made. I supposed that it had been made by my friend from Maine; but I wish now, as it has not been done, to amend the provision referred to by striking out the word "near," and inserting "within fifteen miles of."

The amendment was agreed to by unanimous consent.

The further consideration of the bill was postponed until to-morrow at half past twelve o'clock; and it was ordered to be printed as amended.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. WALKER. I now move that the Senate take up the homestead bill for consideration.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion, at present, in order to let us have a short Executive session this morning.

Mr. STUART. I think it would be better to have the Executive session later in the day.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, accordingly, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill "to grant a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of the public lands to actual settlers," the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. WADE, to strike out from the sixth section the words "a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and." The object of the amendment is to strike out the limitation which restricts the benefits of the bill to persons who are now residents of the United States, and prevents its operating in favor of those who may come into the country after its passage. The section thus proposed to be amended is as follows:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That if any individual now [a resident of any one of the States or Territories and] not a citizen of the United States, but, at the time of making such application for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent, as made and provided for in this act, shall be placed upon an equal footing with the native born citizen of the United States.

Mr. CLAYTON. I send to the Chair an amendment which I propose to offer.

The Secretary read the amendment.

It proposes to strike out the sixth section, which is in these words:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That if any individual now a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and not a citizen of the United States, but at the time of making such application for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent, as made and provided for in this act, shall be placed upon an equal footing with the native born citizen of the United States."

—and insert the following:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That any mechanic or other citizen of the United States, of full age, engaged in and accustomed to any business, trade, or calling, other than the cultivation of land, shall, in consideration of his inability to comply with the conditions of this act, by reason of his want of knowledge, skill, or experience in such cultivation of land, be entitled to receive in lieu of one hundred and sixty acres of land as herein provided, the sum of $160, to be paid to him out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. CHASE. I believe an amendment is pending, which was offered by my colleague.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will ask whether the amendment of the Senator from Delaware is in order? As I understand the matter, the question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio. Can this amendment of the Senator from Delaware be considered as an amendment to that, or is it in order whilst that is pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, which was pending when the Senate last had the bill under consideration.

Mr. WADE. The object of my amendment will be readily seen by examining the provisions of the bill. It will be perceived that the bill itself limits the benefit of its provisions to American born citizens and to such emigrants as may be in the country at the time of its passage. The object of my amendment was to extend its benefits to all others who may come in and comply with its provisions after its passage. When I offered the amendment I believed the principle of it was right; I now believe it to be entirely right; but at this period of the session I fear that it may endanger the passage of the bill. I am a friend of the bill, and would be glad to get its great principles, even if it be not as perfect as I could wish. I fear that to persist in my amendment, which elicited a good deal of discussion when it was up before, may endanger the passage of the bill; I therefore ask leave to withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to withdraw it, as no action has been had upon it. That amendment being withdrawn, the question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. CLAYTON.]

Mr. BRODHEAD. It is quite evident that there is to be considerable discussion in regard to this bill. I understand that there are several amendments and substitutes that will be offered. I know that two or three intended substitutes have been submitted and ordered to be printed. We have now, sir, only about three weeks of this session remaining, and my object in rising is to suggest the propriety of suffering this bill to go over until December next. If we are to proceed with the discussion of the bill, I presume that we shall occupy several days, and we shall thus interfere with the appropriation bills. The weather is unpleasantly warm, and for this and other considerations, I think we had better postpone this bill until next December. I move, therefore, to postpone its further consideration until the second Monday of December next.

Mr. GWIN. I am perfectly willing that the vote to be taken on this motion shall be regarded as a test vote as to whether we are to pass the bill or not. I think we have as much time now as we shall have in December. This is the period for action. There is no member of the body who has not made up his mind on the question. If it has not been directly before us for consideration, certainly the question is presented to us in such a form that we are prepared to vote on it. I hope, therefore, the vote on this motion may be regarded as a test vote whether we are to consider and pass the bill or not. I am in favor of the bill as it is, without any amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Every gentleman will regard his own vote as a test or not, as he pleases; but, for one, I wish to say that my vote on this motion must not be considered as a test vote at all; and I cannot consent to any agreement by which this vote shall be considered a test.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the motion of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, I understand, is to postpone this bill until the second Monday in December next, and make it the order of the day for that time. I will vote for that motion. I think it desirable on every score. I am opposed to the bill, as all its friends know, and whenever it comes up, whether now or then, I shall endeavor to give my reasons for my opposition to it. It will be admitted, however, on all hands, without going into the merits of the bill, that, if it be adopted, we shall be making a radical change in the mode in which this Government has disposed of the public lands from the foundation of the Government. It certainly ought to be a subject of grave deliberation, and of full discussion. You have now but three weeks of the session remaining. You have weather which, if it does not incapacitate for physical, certainly does for mental exertion. I think, therefore, there cannot be now such a full discussion of this bill as would be satisfactory without entirely laying aside measures which are imperatively required to be passed before the adjournment. I allude to the appropriation bills. I believe that next December will be more favorable to a fair discussion of the bill than the present time.

I do not desire to defeat this or any other bill by indirection. I am willing to meet the question fairly when it comes up in December. I am willing when the month of December arrives, if the bill can be so postponed by the votes of any of its friends, to persist then in adhering to its discussion until the vote shall be taken, without regard to other business. I trust, then, the motion will prevail. I think next December is more suitable, in all respects, for the discussion of the bill. I know that there are a great variety of amendments to be proposed, some of which may alter entirely the character of the bill; but if it is passed in the shape in which it now stands, I cannot entertain a doubt that it comes clearly within the meaning of the language used by the President of the United States in his veto of the insane bill; and hence would be sent back by him with his objections. Whether it can be modified or not, I cannot say. On all accounts, however, I think it would be more desirable for its full and fair discussion that it should be postponed until the next session. If a majority of Congress choose then to pass it, I shall on this, as on every other question, bow to their will; but I shall certainly oppose it, as I am decidedly against the bill. The present motion, however, has no reference to its merits.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Mr. President, I trust that the Senate will not agree to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania. In my humble judgment, in the whole history of the proceedings of this body, there never has been a bill treated with so much neglect if not indignity as this homestead bill. It has been twice passed by overwhelming majorities of the people's representatives, and has been sent here, but has been delayed and over-slaughed by indirect motions; and now the appropriation bills are to be lugged in to further delay or defeat it. For one, sir, I declare before God and the Senate, that I am willing to lose the entire appropriation bills, every one of them, if that issue is to be made with me, and I will sit here in my seat day in and day out, up to that time which has been arbitrarily fixed for adjournment, rather than lose this bill; and I appeal to its friends, if they constitute a majority of the American Senate, now, to-day, to make battle for it, and continue in the good fight up to the end of the session.

Sir, I impugn no Senator's motives; I say directly what I think, and under all the responsibility that pertains to my place here—and that is that I think this bill has been worse treated than any measure that ever emanated from a majority of the people's representatives. Sir, it was given the go-by at the last two sessions of Congress, when there was a large majority in its favor. Indirect motions and side blows did the work. I ask now that Senators meet it fairly, by objections in front. If it is a dangerous or an improper bill, it ought not to be passed; if just and meritorious, it should become a law.

I am not, at this time, prepared, sir, to answer the speech which was made on this bill when it was last under consideration, by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. THOMPSON:] a speech to which I listened with greater pain and regret than to any I ever heard on the floor of the American Senate. I know something of those foreigners whom it has become so common to assail. I know them as neighbors and friends; and, with few exceptions, better citizens or truer men I have never known. They are industrious, law-abiding, and patriotic. In every war that we have had, from that of the Revolution down, they have ever been among the first to enlist or volunteer. I have been personally acquainted with hundreds who have done so in the Indian wars in the Northwest, and that too, long before they had ever become citizens of the United States, or had ever signified their intention to become such. This bill, in its present shape, notwithstanding the manner in which it is attacked for its alleged liberality to foreigners, is the least so, in fact, of all the previous land bills which have ever been passed. I should willingly have voted for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] for I believe it to be right. I am glad, however, under the circumstances, that he withdrew it; for my wish is to pass this bill without dotting an i or crossing a t, if it has a majority in its favor. I again appeal to its friends to pass it in that shape. But if we cannot succeed in doing so, then, for one, being earnestly attached to the principle of reducing the price of the public lands so as to place it in the power of every free man who now is, or who may become a citizen of the United States, to be possessed of a little piece of land on which to live and rear his family, I will take the next best proposition that I can get. The present is the accepted time for action, and I exhort now the friends of this measure to stick by it. The eyes of the country are upon them. The Senate is charged, and I fear, with too much truth, with having failed to conform its action to the will of the people and of their representatives through a series of sessions past. I repeat, that I trust its friends now, if they are in a majority, will march up to the work, and pass it—to pass it to-day, if we have the numbers to do so. The pending amendment comes from an old enemy of the bill, and I trust it will be voted down.

Mr. HAMLIN. The friends of the bill, as I understand, desire that it shall not be postponed until the commencement of the next session, but that the vote upon the bill shall be directly had. I think it was suggested by the Senator who made the motion, that this was to be a test vote on the question.

Mr. BRODHEAD. No, sir; I did not make the suggestion. It was made by the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN.]

Mr. HAMLIN. I heard the suggestion from some Senator, and I rose only for the purpose of saying that this vote will be no test with me. I am willing to vote directly on the bill; and for the purpose of gratifying its friends, without indicating what my final vote will be, I shall go against postponing.

Mr. CASS. I hope the bill will not be postponed. Since this question was raised, four years ago, by an eminent member of the Senate, whom Providence has since taken from us, I have considered it as one of the most important measures ever presented to the American Government and people. I will take this opportunity of reading the resolution of that distinguished man, which all who were here at the time must recollect. On the 22d of January, 1850, Mr. Webster submitted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That a provision ought to be made by law, that every male citizen of the United States, and every male person who has declared his intention of becoming a citizen, according to the provisions of law, of twenty-one years of age, or upwards, shall be entitled to enter upon and take any one quarter section of the public lands which may be left open to entry at private sale, for the purposes of residence and cultivation; and that when such citizen shall have resided on the said land for three years, and cultivated the same, or if dying in the mean time, residence and cultivation shall be held and carried on by his widow, or his heirs or devisees, for the space of full three years from, and after making entry of such land, such residence and cultivation, for the said three years to be completed within four years from the time of such entry, then a patent to issue for the same, to the person making such entry, if living, or otherwise, to his heirs or devisees, as the case may require: Provided, nevertheless, That such person so entering and taking the quarter section as aforesaid, shall not have, nor shall his devisees or heirs have, any power to alienate such land, nor create any title thereto, in law or equity, by deed, transfer, lease, or any other conveyance, except by devise, by will."

From that day to this, the subject, in one form or other, has been before the Senate, directly or indirectly, sometimes almost coming to a direct vote, and sometimes being got rid of indirectly. I believe it is one of the most momentous questions ever submitted to the people of this country. Gentlemen may tell me of this business, or that business, or the other business; but, sir, in my judgment, this is the business of the session. I am willing to postpone all other business to the adjustment of this question. If it be adjusted rightly, as I trust it will be, it will have a better and a greater effect in promoting the prosperity of this country, in my opinion, than any other measure ever proposed. If it does not, the responsibility will not fall on those who advocate and vote for it. I therefore repeat my hope that this subject will now come to its final issue, and that, after having passed the House of Representatives, the bill will be voted upon by the Senate, and will receive a concurrent vote here.

Mr. PETTIT. I said some time ago all that I intend to say upon this bill, and I rise now only to express my hope that it will be pressed to a vote to-day. I hope the friends of the bill, if they be a majority here, or a minority, will stand together and vote down all amendments. I do not pretend to say that the bill is in every respect such as I could desire; but knowing that if we amend it, we must necessarily lose it in the House, I prefer taking it as it is; and I ask the friends of this bill now to put themselves together, vote down all amendments, and get a vote on the bill, if there is a majority for it, as the Senator from Iowa says, without dotting an i or crossing a t. If an amendment of any kind, however small, be adopted, it is a loss, beyond question, of the bill for this session. Let us know, then, to-day, whether we have or have not a majority for this measure, which is emphatically a measure of the people, and which is calculated to give to the country greater strength and greater defense than any and all other measures that are pressed here. I hope the friends of the bill will be at their posts, and see that no amendment is added to it.

Mr. BROWN. I will vote against the postponement of this bill, and will stand by its friends until they bring it to a final vote. With the remarks submitted by several Senators in favor of having the final action of this body on this bill, I fully and entirely concur. It is respectful to the House of Representatives, and it is demanded, I think, by the people, that we shall have some definite action on this proposition. I cannot vote with that portion of the Senate (if, in fact, there be such a portion) who are for killing off this measure by indirection. Whether I shall vote for it on its final passage, depends on circumstances which are not yet fully developed.

I cannot concur with my friend from Indiana [Mr. PETTIT] in the declaration that we are to vote down all amendments to this bill. I think it were better the bill should be lost than that we should have it forced upon us in the precise form in which it now stands. To take the ground that we are not to amend it at all for fear that the House of Representatives, where the bill has a large majority, will not act on our amendments, and that the bill must therefore be lost, is appealing, I think, rather to our fears than to our judgments. I believe that if we make reasonable and proper amendments, the House of Representatives will concur in them, and we shall thereby get a better measure.

I rise, however, simply to say, without meaning to have my vote understood as a test on this proposition, that I will now vote, and I will continue to the end voting, with the friends of this bill, so as to bring it to the final decision of the Senate. When an amendment shall be proposed which I think is right, I will vote for it; and I will vote against it if I think it is wrong. I utterly reject the proposition of the Senator from Indiana, that we are to vote down all amendments lest we should lose the bill. I have myself a substitute which I intend at the proper time to propose, and ask the vote of the Senate upon. If they vote it down, very well. It is just to myself, and just to some friends who concur with me, that I should ask the vote of the Senate on that proposition. I hope we are not to be forestalled by a fixed determination to pass the bill in its present form. If we do not believe that its present form is the best we can give it, it is our duty to amend it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will vote against this motion to postpone the bill until next December, but I am not satisfied that the bill as it now stands is the best homestead bill that can be passed. In other words, I believe there is a much better bill for the whole of the new States that could be passed, and would be passed if brought up embarrassed, and I shall hold myself free to vote for it at the proper time. But I will vote to have this bill brought up so that we may come to some conclusion in regard to our present public land system, which I feel to be operating oppressively and unjustly. These views will govern my votes on this matter, but I am not to be told that every vote I may give on every proposition, is to be a test vote.

Mr. BAYARD. It is true, as the honorable Senator from Michigan has remarked, that this bill has been before the country since 1850, but certainly it has been before it only to a limited extent. In this body, it has had no discussion at any time since I have been a member of it, which has been since March 1851. There has been no discussion of the general principle, or of the particular bill before the Senate during that time, though the question has been incidentally touched. There can be little doubt that it alters the entire system of the disposition of the public lands, that it embraces a system of donation in place of the grant of the land for a valuable consideration. It is an entire alteration.

I have many objections to the bill, as to some of its sections, if not to the whole bill, on constitutional grounds. There are a variety of other Senators who believe the bill can be modified so as to bring a majority of the Senate, a very large majority, to a coincidence of opinion as to the proper mode of disposing of the public lands, by way of graduating and reducing their price. The inclinations of my own opinion are in favor of that. I know, however, that this bill must lead to prolonged discussion. It has yet had no discussion. I do not think that at this season of the year, with such a limited period for the duration of the session, we ought to take it up now. It is on this ground, and this ground alone, that I shall vote for the postponement. Otherwise, I should be ready to meet the question now. If it be postponed until the second Monday in December, I shall then be willing to take up the bill, and proceed to its discussion until the vote be taken. At present, I think it ought to be postponed.

Mr. STUART. Mr. President, I only wish to say a few words, and prominent among them I wish to ask the Senate not to postpone this question, but to dispose of it, and to dispose of it at this session, and at the earliest time it can possibly be done. Another thing I desire to state, as one of the most zealous friends of the measure, and that is my willingness to amend it in such reasonable way as that it may command the vote of the majority of this body. I think it will hardly do to say that if the bill be amended at all, it will be lost in the House of Representatives. I certainly would not undertake to say what is the opinion or condition of that House; but I will say, with some degree of caution, that, so far as I have been able to ascertain, reasonable amendments adopted to this bill will be concurred in there.

But, Mr. President, this is a measure which is vastly important to the western, or, at all events, to the northwestern portion of this Union, and I submit to Senators from other quarters, that that is a portion of the Confederation of these States which is entitled to respectful consideration. Not that I would for one moment insist that this bill shall be thrown upon Senators without such reasonable amendments being made as they can assent to. I am willing, for one, to put a reasonable price upon the land; I am willing to say that the settler shall pay, at the end of his occupation, a fair and reasonable price for the land, if such an amendment be necessary, for the purpose of securing to the bill the friendly, honorable support of Senators from other parts of the Union. I am freely willing to concede much to the opinions and judgment of other Senators, and I ask those Senators, in all fairness, to concede the same spirit to us. Let us meet this question. Let us meet it fairly, not by some sidewise proposition, but let us come fairly to the consideration of the bill, and see if we cannot agree upon terms, and adopt them, and pass it.

Now, sir, I confess that it would not displease me at all, if the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania were true, and if it were so excessively hot that no Senator here could make a speech on this bill. Certainly, that would not grieve me at all. I should bear it with Christian fortitude. There is not a Senator on the floor who does not understand the bill in all its bearings. It is no new subject. There is not a Senator here who is not prepared to vote upon any amendment that may be offered as soon as it can be read from the Secretary's desk. If we should go forward, therefore, in the hottest weather, without hearing a lengthy speech, and should consider this bill, and amend it, and agree upon it, I think, so far from having lost anything, we should have gained a great deal.

I was opposed, as all Senators know—strenuously opposed—to fixing so early a day for adjournment as has been fixed, until we had acted upon this and two or three other important measures. I am as well satisfied now, as I was then, that the time is insufficient to dispose in a proper manner of the appropriation bills. It will not allow you four days in each House to consider each of the important appropriation bills. I thought then, as I think now, that the Senate cannot dispose of the business within the time; and, if it be disposed of, it will be very badly done. But, notwithstanding all this, that is a subject which is yet within our control. We can postpone that day, if it shall become necessary to do so. I hope it may not become necessary. I wish we could adjourn to-morrow; but, I repeat, if it becomes necessary we can postpone the day of adjournment. I only, therefore, ask in conclusion—and I do it with some little degree of feeling—that Senators will concede so much to us, who represent northwestern States, as to proceed to and continue the consideration of this measure until we can dispose of it, and see if we cannot dispose of it in a manner agreeable to a very large majority, if not to all of us.

Mr. PETTIT called for the yeas and nays on the motion; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Cooper, Dawson, Dixon, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Mason, Norris, Pearce, and Thompson of Kentucky—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Bell, Bright, Brown, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, James, Jones, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pettit, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Shields, Sidel, Stuart, Sumner, Toucey, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Williams—32.

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to; and the question recurred on the amendment of Mr. CLAYTON.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask for a division of the question, so that the first vote may be upon striking out, and on that proposition I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the first question will be on the proposition to strike out the sixth section; which is as follows:

"Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That if any individual now a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and not a citizen of the United States, but at the time of making such application for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent, as made and provided for in this act, shall be placed upon an equal footing with the native born citizen of the United States."

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLAYTON. The section proposed to be stricken out grants to every alien, or foreigner not naturalized, the moment he lands upon our shores, the right to locate one hundred and sixty acres of the public domain, to which he is to become fully entitled by a patent to be issued after the expiration of five years, if during that period he shall cultivate the land and reside upon it according to the terms of the bill. The object is to test the question whether aliens are to be placed on the same footing with citizens of the United States in the donation of the public lands. True it is, the section proposes to give only to foreigners who are here and not naturalized at the time of the passage of the act; but every man can see that if the principle is now adopted, by agreeing to the section which I propose to strike out, that all aliens in the country at the time of the passage of the act are entitled to one hundred and sixty acres of the public domain, as a matter of course it will follow that, at the next session, or at some subsequent session, another act will be passed for the mere purpose of putting them upon an equality of common justice, admitting all aliens, not only those now in the country, but all who may come hereafter, to as full a share of the inheritance of the American people as American citizens themselves. Sir, I do not propose to discuss the question; I simply ask that it be decided.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I do not propose to make a speech upon this question; but in addition to what has been said by the honorable Senator from Delaware, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that he does not present the case in as strong a manner as it may be presented. Now, sir, I wish to ask the friends of the bill what they mean by the term "now," as used in this section? It speaks of all who are "now" residents of the United States. To what period of time does this word "now" refer? Does it refer to the time when the bill was introduced into the other House? Does it refer to the time of its passage there, or of its passage here, if it shall be passed? To what time does it refer? I say that a more indefinite, indeterminate, and unsatisfactory word could not have been employed than the word "now." "Now," we are told, sometimes refers to past time, at others to future time; and we are told by the poet, that time is an eternal "now." It appears to me to have been adopted with a view to admit all who may hereafter come to the benefits of the act, and if that is the purpose let us meet it fully and fairly, and say so in the bill in terms that cannot be doubted or mistaken.

But, sir, this is not all. I say that it is giving to aliens who may hereafter come into the country bounties which have not been conferred upon American citizens, but bounties in which they cannot participate. The amendment which has been offered by the honorable Senator from Delaware suggests a large class of citizens who cannot participate in this bounty. Again, all those who have hitherto settled upon the public lands, and paid the price demanded, cannot be expected to participate in this bounty. Hence I am decidedly opposed to the sixth section, as it stands in the bill. I shall vote to strike it out, first, because I say it does not exclude any foreigner; it does not exclude those who are to come hereafter; for suppose the word "now" should be construed and understood by the Senate to mean at the time of the passage of the bill; suppose that to be the time designated, I ask, where in the bill is it required of any foreigner that he shall swear that he was a resident of the United States at the time of the passage of the bill? There is no such requirement anywhere; and hence it appears to me to be a miserable equivocation that is intended to mislead or deceive somebody. He is not required to swear that he was then a resident of the country. I do not care when they may come, it is a perpetual right granted to all who may arrive hereafter to participate in the bounties of the Government in settling upon the public lands; because they are not required to state that they were residents of the country at the time of the passage of the bill, and the word "now" is an indefinite and unmeaning one, which is subject to different interpretations by different persons.

Mr. WALKER. I was a little surprised to hear the Senator from Delaware make the statement which he did make in regard to the provisions of this bill. If he had read it with more care, he would have found that, in the section which he proposes to strike out, the provision is, that where any person, now a resident of any of the States and Territories, and not a citizen of the United States, shall declare his intention to become a citizen, and shall actually become naturalized before the patent issues, he shall be placed on the same footing as a native-born citizen. That is the provision of this section.

Mr. CLAYTON. Precisely.

Mr. WALKER. It is not, then, as stated by the Senator, for he took the ground that the bill provided that any person hereafter coming might avail himself of the provisions of this act, by simply cultivating the land. He has first to declare his intention to become a citizen of the United States, before he can make his claim under the act. Then, he must perfect his citizenship before he can be entitled to a patent for the land; and it is upon the doing of both—upon the becoming of an actual citizen of the United States—that he is entitled to the patent. It was to obviate what the Senator from Ohio deemed a difficulty in the bill, that his amendment was offered some time since, but by him withdrawn this morning. It proposed to give the right to those who might come into the country hereafter to avail themselves of the benefit of the bill; but he withdrew it. It is not now before the Senate, and the section proposed to be stricken out by the Senator from Delaware requires the declaration of intention to become a citizen, and, before the patent shall issue, the perfection of his citizenship; otherwise, he is not to have a patent.

Mr. CLAYTON. — What I stated in regard to the section is perfectly and literally true. It offers to every alien, every foreigner not naturalized, as soon as he arrives in the United States, the right to one hundred and sixty acres of the public lands as soon as they are surveyed; and it does it in this way: He has nothing to do but to make his declaration of intention. Of course that causes no trouble. Then he enters upon the land, and has as much right to enter as an American citizen who has lived here for forty years. Then he is to cultivate the land, according to the provisions of the bill, just as citizens must do, for five years. That is just the time within which he can become naturalized. In five years any foreigner can become naturalized, and then he is entitled to a patent precisely as any other man who is born here; so that, in effect and substance, this section gives to every alien the same right to the full extent of a native-born citizen of the United States.

Sir, there is another thing rather remarkable in this bill. There is no time provided within which the foreigner, not naturalized, shall become a citizen of the United States. If he lives on the land five years after having declared his intention to become a citizen, at any time after that, whenever he shall choose to become a citizen, if that is twenty years afterwards, he is entitled to a patent; and yet, during all this time he is to remain on the land and enjoy it as fully as any American citizen could do. There is not a word in the bill to drive him from the land because he does not at the end of the five years become an American citizen; so that I respectfully submit to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, I think I was right in everything that I said in reference to the section. I do not propose to discuss it. It is perfectly true that I have not disguised my views in reference to the great principle contained in it. They have been explained heretofore. I am decidedly for a distinction between the American citizen and the alien. I am not one of those who cry out against aliens, or one of those who have opposed the emigration of foreigners into this country. Let them come here; we have land enough for them. Let them become Americanized here; let them learn the institutions of the country. The naturalization laws direct that they shall reside here long enough to understand those institutions. Is it asking too much to say that they shall reside here five years before they become entitled to a donation of a hundred and sixty acres of land? I say again I do not propose to enter into a discussion of the principle. It is a mere question of whether there shall be a gift of this much land made.

Mr. DIXON. I do not understand the section, or, if I do, the Senator from Delaware, in whose opinion I have a great deal of confidence, is mistaken in the construction which he places upon it. I will read the section, and then make a remark or two upon it:

"And be it further enacted, That if any individual now a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and not a citizen of the United States, but at the time of making such application for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention, as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent, as made and provided for in this act, shall be placed upon an equal footing with the native-born citizen of the United States."

I understand that the proper construction to be given to that section is, that a person, to entitle himself to the benefit of it, must be a resident of a State or Territory at this time. If this is the proper construction, does it embrace anybody but those who are now residents, either of a State or Territory? Surely, it cannot include foreigners who may hereafter emigrate to the United States.

Mr. CLAYTON. It embraces all aliens in the country now.

Mr. DIXON. The construction given to it by the Senator is, that all persons hereafter coming into it may be entitled to the benefits of the bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. No, sir; I said that if you passed this bill, entitling aliens living here at the time of its passage to one hundred and sixty acres, it would follow as an irresistible consequence that hereafter, as a measure of mere common justice, others coming and asking for the same rights and privileges would have them granted to them.

Mr. DIXON. Upon that point I have no argument to make with the Senator. This is a simple proposition, as I understand it, to give to those who are now residents of the States or Territories, and who may hereafter become naturalized citizens of the United States, the right to one hundred and sixty acres. If I understand the proposition, it is that and nothing more. Then, sir, if that is its effect, and the Senator from Delaware seems to concur with me that it is, I do not see the force of the objection which he urges to it, at least I do not see it as the Senator does.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the honorable Senator from Kentucky permit me to state what is my understanding of the provision. It gives to the resident of the States and the resident of the Territories who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States—what? The right to work a piece of land in one of those Territories, on vacant, unappropriated, unoccupied, wild lands—a mere right to work it—and when he becomes a citizen, then he obtains a patent and title to the land.

Mr. DIXON. That is all.

Mr. SHIELDS. Precisely so; so that, in reality, I want to state to the honorable Senator, I cannot see exactly the force of the objection of the honorable Senator from Delaware.

Mr. DIXON. I understand it as my friend from Illinois does, that no foreigner who is not now a resident of a Territory, or of a State, has a right to the benefit of this bill. It does not embrace those who may hereafter come into the United States, but it only includes those who are now here. That is my understanding of it.

Well, now, Mr. President, I have but a single remark to make on this question. We naturalize a foreigner, and when we naturalize him, the policy of this Government is to make him a citizen, not only in name, but in fact—to put him upon an equality, in every sense of the word, with a citizen of the United States. This is the policy of this Government; and I think it is a correct policy, in view of all the circumstances connected with the settlement of our wilderness—for it is yet a wilderness in many respects—and it has been the policy of this Government from its very commencement. Sir, I am myself in favor of attaching the foreigner, who becomes a citizen of this Government, to the Government itself; and I think that to do this, to make him its friend, to secure his devotion to it, and his support and his defense of it, either in peace, when the great principles of the Constitution may be assailed by factionists or partisans, or in war, when it is necessary that the soldier shall shoulder his musket to defend our soil, our homes, and firesides, nay, our Government itself, against foreign enemies, or internal foes, the true policy is to make him not only a citizen in name, but in reality. If he is to be naturalized under the laws, I will give him just the same rights that any other citizen of the United States may have. I understand that the provision of this section will give the foreigner no right until he becomes a citizen of the United States. He may enter upon the land, it is true. He may cut down the trees; he may sweep away the forests; he may cultivate the land; but he cannot have a right to it; he can have no patent issued by the Government of the United States, securing to him the right, until he becomes a citizen of the United States. I understand that to be the plain construction of the section proposed to be stricken out. Is that the correct one or not?

Mr. SHIELDS. It is.

Mr. DIXON. My friend from Illinois says it is; and, doubtless, it is so. Then I shall not vote to strike it out. I shall vote to retain it, believing that it is better to give the naturalized citizens of the United States the rights of citizens, not in name, but in fact, if only to impress upon their minds and hearts that they are citizens, and have the same rights, under the Constitution, that the native-born citizens have. If the whole policy of the naturalization law is wrong, repeal it. I think it is right, and shall vote against repealing it. But, so long as it remains upon the statute-book, do not pretend to make a man a citizen without giving him the rights of a citizen.

I have said this much upon the motion of the honorable Senator from Delaware to strike out the section of the bill referred to. I will now say that it is my purpose to vote against the bill altogether when it shall be put upon its passage; not that I object to the principle of the bill, which proposes to give one hundred and sixty acres of land to the actual settler, but because I am in favor of distributing the proceeds of the public lands among the several States in equitable proportions. The public lands belong to the old as well as the new States. They have been acquired by the common blood and treasure of all the States, and are admitted by all to be held in trust by the Federal Government for all the States, and for all the citizens of the United States; and so long as there is a hope of effecting a just and equal distribution, I will vote against all other propositions embracing a general disposition of them. Next to the proposition to distribute them, or their proceeds, among the several States, I prefer the distribution proposed in the bill; that is, to give the lands to citizens who are actual and bona fide settlers. The life of the pioneer of our western and southwestern territories is a difficult one. Exposed, at all times, to the attacks of the ferocious wild beasts, to the attacks of the more ferocious savages that inhabit the forests, to say nothing of the fatal diseases always incident to new and unsettled countries, as well as of the scarcity of provisions, and a want of all the comforts of life enjoyed in countries settled and civilized, he fully earns his one hundred and sixty acres of land when he has endured all the hardships necessary to acquire a title to it; and I confess, that if I had given up all hope of seeing the lands distributed among the States, I would vote for the bill.

Mr. SHIELDS. I shall not enter into an argument on this question. There are many reasons why I shall not. It would not be very becoming for me to do so. I merely want to call the attention of my very able friend from Delaware to one view of this case which may have escaped his mind. This was intended, in the first place, to apply to residents in the States and Territories; and then they must be persons who have declared their intention to become citizens. These are the requisites. Now, sir, in a case of that kind, the honorable Senator says a person is an alien. Perhaps he may be; but, at all events, he is a kind of probationary citizen. I hold that he is, as it were, a man in a state of probation, in a state of apprenticeship. He remains in that condition for five years. During those five years it is expected that he will learn and acquire something of the rights and duties of a citizen of the United States. Now, I put it to the honorable Senator as a matter of high American policy, in reference to this peculiar class of persons coming to this country, if there can be any plan more judicious and more politic than to attract them from the large cities on the sea-board, where they are loose and unemployed, and where they fall into the hands of persons who take advantage, perhaps, of their want of knowledge, and plant them in the Territories, and make them soldiers to defend the country? Plant them down there. Sir, there is not a man who lives in the West that does not know this singular fact: that the moment a man builds a log cabin, cultivates a piece of land, and finds himself in possession of a home, he becomes a better man, as well as a better citizen; he becomes more attached to the soil, and he becomes a better man as far as moral character is concerned. I cannot imagine any better position in which you can place a man, as a school of instruction in which to exercise these high duties, than to place him in one of the frontier Territories through the exercise of this power. It does not affect you, it does not affect any other part of the country, it merely affects himself and a few of his neighbors. He learns to practice these duties. Be assured, sir, of one thing, that all the aversion to foreigners originates in the fact that they congregate about the large cities; that they herd together and form as it were societies of their own, and excite the prejudice of Americans. But, sir, break up this collecting in your cities, transfer them to the far west, put them on the frontiers, throw them into the Territories, let them take their rifle and ax in hand, and make homes for themselves, and you will make them better men than they were before. They will be better citizens, and will be no longer what they were in the city of New York. In my humble opinion, seeing that these immigrants will come here, seeing that they are increasing every day, the true policy is by all just means to divert them, as it were, to draw them away from the large cities on the seaboard, to plant them away on the frontier, to break up these bodies which are congregated in the large cities, to scatter them and disperse them among your own people. There is not a western man who does not feel the effect of it. We know that in all the northwestern States there are a great many of these men. They attach themselves as it were to the soil; and depend upon one thing, the moment a man commences to work the soil, and saturate it with his own sweat, the moment that a man begins to work for himself, that moment he will become attached to the soil, and will fight for that soil. Such men to-morrow are as much to be depended upon in an emergency as the loose population hanging about your cities, no matter where born; for, after all, it does not depend so much upon that.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, JULY 11, 1854.

NEW SERIES.....No. 105.

I take this view of the matter, and I express it with great deference. As I remarked before, I dislike very much to touch any feeling upon the subject, but I think this view of it is a perfectly American view. Here are something like five hundred thousand people coming into our country almost every year from every part of the world. They collect into New York, and Boston, and Philadelphia, and they create all this unfortunate feeling which is being engendered in those cities. Get them from there; send them to your frontiers; scatter them about on the vacant, unappropriated, unreclaimed territory; let them enter into a contest with nature, and struggle for homes and for farms. Let them have their own little hearths, to collect their families around them, and you will find nothing of this clamor. I recollect having a conversation with the distinguished Senator who introduced a resolution into the Senate on one occasion on this subject—a gentleman now no more, but whose memory is a treasure to this country, Mr. Webster. I recollect the views which he presented. He said he knew of no other policy than that which would carry off this population that was coming into the country, and throw them into the frontier Territories. Americanize them as soon as possible, plant them down there, and break up those large collections of persons who are now in the cities. I think, sir, that while the foreigner is exercising this suffrage in a restricted, limited, contracted sphere, he is studying, he is improving, he is instructing himself, and in five years, when he becomes a citizen of the United States, he will be better acquainted with the institutions of the country; he will look upon them as those of which he may be proud.

I merely wanted to suggest these views to my honorable friend from Delaware, whom I know to be capable of grasping everything, and looking far beyond the little considerations of giving land to men. I think he will find this is the best policy.

Mr. CLAYTON. I desire to say one word in reply to the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Dixon.] He said he could not see that this bill granted any right whatever to an alien, any right whatever to a foreigner, until he became a naturalized citizen of the United States; because, he said, the patent was not to be issued until he became a naturalized citizen of the United States.

Mr. DIXON. I wanted to convey the idea that he had not a right to the land. I know that he has a right to settle on the land, but he has not the right to the land itself until he is naturalized. The section expressly authorizes him to take possession of the land for a certain period of time; and if he become naturalized, he is to have the title. He has an inchoate right, I admit, which he may acquire by settlement on the land; that is a right of a preemption character; and nobody can dispossess him of it, and he may go and obtain a patent for it when he becomes a citizen of the United States; but if he never become a citizen, he can never get the patent for it; and, if he should die without becoming a citizen, he would lose it altogether—both him and his heirs.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is exactly what I said; that you are aiming to confer on them the same rights as on American citizens. Now, the honorable Senator says that aliens can settle on the lands, and have the right to remain there until the patent is granted, which may be at the end of five years. A patent cannot be granted to an American citizen until the end of five years. He must cultivate the land five years, and the alien must cultivate it five years. The naturalization laws only require five years' residence, and then he becomes a citizen; so that, in every respect, from the moment he lands and declares his intention to become a citizen, he is to be precisely on the same footing as the native-born American citizen. That is certain.

Mr. DIXON. Oh, no, I will not say that it is a certain conclusion. It cannot be true, in fact, that anybody has a right to these lands, except those now in the States and in the Territories. It cannot be true that those hereafter coming into this country have a right to them.

Mr. CLAYTON. There is no difference on that subject, if the Senator will hear me.

Mr. DIXON. I would make one suggestion to the Senator from Delaware, because it was a remark which he made which justifies me in explaining myself. It is not the fact that the law is precisely the same in regard to the alien now in the States, or in the Territories, and the citizen. It is not the fact that the law which limits the right of native born citizens to five years, only limits the right of an alien for five years. There is another condition, so far as respects the alien. What is that? It is that he is to become naturalized; and unless he becomes naturalized, he cannot get the patent.

Mr. CLAYTON. Of course, so I stated. He is to become naturalized. There is no difficulty in obtaining naturalization papers; that is a mere matter of form. He gets his papers; and he is, as I before stated, not compelled, by the provisions of the bill, to obtain them as soon as the five years are out; but he may remain on the land as long as he pleases, and at any time afterwards he may come forward, become naturalized, and get the patent. You cannot turn him out if he stays on the land without naturalization for forty years. He is, to all intents and purposes, in every respect, endowed with the rights of an American citizen.

Now, I turn to my friend from Illinois. I am a friend to immigration. I consider it a part of the established policy of the United States. I am in favor of it; but, sir, I am decidedly for a distinction between the American citizen and the alien. I will do nothing which shall cheapen the right of an American citizen, and place him upon the same footing precisely with an alien, or a man who has only declared his intention to become a citizen. My honorable friend considers a man who declares his intention to become a citizen as having become, in some degree, a probationary citizen. Sir, he is not a citizen. He is not bound by the same obligations which bind you and me, and my honorable friend. He is not under the same obligations which bind all the citizens of the United States, until he obtains his naturalization papers, after remaining here five years. I would not cheapen this right of American citizenship by extending it to all foreigners. As the bill on your table drawing a distinction between foreigners who are here now and those coming hereafter, I think it is a distinction without any substance. We know that if the bill passes it establishes a principle; it establishes a great principle, as my honorable friend from Illinois says; that is, that an alien, upon merely declaring his intention, becomes entitled to the same rights as those of us who are citizens and residents here, and he can remain upon the land until his naturalization be perfected. Then it follows, having established the principle, as a sheer matter of justice, it will be extended to all aliens coming here hereafter.

Now, sir, the point of difference between us lies here. I am entirely opposed to offering a premium to immigration from Europe, and, in offering that premium, placing the foreigner precisely upon the same foundation as an American citizen. That has never been the policy of this Government, and I trust it never will be. No nation that ever cheapened the right of citizenship prospered by it. I would teach every American citizen, if I had my way, to be proud of the name of an American citizen, and to honor it, and I would have it respected throughout the whole world. It should be a matter of boast, in a foreign country, that he was an American citizen. While making no distinction between the naturalized citizen and the native-born, yet I would have them all proud of the name of an American citizen. But, sir, if you pass this measure, it will necessarily require the adoption of another measure hereafter, to let all aliens who may come here in future, participate to the same extent in the enjoyment of the public property of the United States with native-born citizens. The effect of it is to cheapen and degrade the character of the American citizen. Yes, sir, it tends to cheapen and degrade it, because it places the American citizen upon the same foundation precisely with every man in Europe; no matter whether that man be an outcast of a prison, no matter what crime he may have committed, he comes here and acquires that right.

Sir, I know not whether the bill will pass. I look upon it as the most agrarian measure that has been offered since I have been in Congress. It bears upon its face, to my mind, indications, I will not say of the approaching dissolution of this Government, but it looks as if the American representatives of States had come at last to consider that this great and glorious partnership of ours, which has stood so long, and which has been the admiration of the world, is hereafter to be a partnership without effects and assets. How long a partnership can last without any assets, how long it shall endure, when there is no longer a single link of common interest to bind the States, I know not. I merely suggest it; and as I said I did not intend to go into the discussion of the great question raised by the bill, I will not. I leave it with these remarks, and I shall anxiously wait the decision of the Senate upon the motion I have made.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, said: Mr. President, as the debate seems now to turn upon the sixth section of this bill, that section which has reference to the privileges granted to foreigners, and the danger which is apprehended as likely to result to the institutions of our country from such privilege being awarded to them, I beg to call attention to the existing laws on this subject. Are Senators aware of the fact that this bill is more illiberal in respect to foreigners than any other measure of the kind touching the public lands, which has ever been proposed in either House of Congress? The sixth section is in these words:

"Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That if any individual now a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and not a citizen of the United States, but at the time of making such application for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention, as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent, as made and provided for in this act, shall be placed upon an equal footing with the native-born citizen of the United States."

In reply to my esteemed friend from Alabama, [Mr. Clay,] I say that, according to my understanding of this section, the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior would construe it as referring to the date of the passage of the bill—the word "now" being employed in lieu of the more common ones, "from and after the passage of this act"—certainly not to its introduction into the House. That is my impression.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask my friend from Iowa, with his permission, how is it to be ascertained that a foreigner was a resident of the country at the time of the passage of the bill? Is there any provision requiring him to make oath to that fact?

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. The bill is, I think, well guarded against abuse. It is filled with conditions and restrictions, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office is required to issue such rules and regulations, consistent with the bill, as shall be necessary and proper to carry its provisions into effect. All the laws relating to the public lands are to be construed together. I have the land laws before me, and, having read the sixth section of this bill, I propose to read the law as it stands to show the contrast against foreigners made in this bill. The general preemption law, passed in 1841, reads thus:

"Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, every person being the head of a family, or widow, or single man over the age of twenty-one years, and being a citizen of the United States, or having filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen, as required by the naturalization laws; who since the 1st day of June, A. D., 1840, has made, or shall hereafter make, a settlement in person on the public lands, to which the Indian title had been, at the time of such settlement, extinguished; and which has been, or shall have been, surveyed prior thereto, and who shall inhabit and improve the same, and who has or shall erect a dwelling thereon, shall be, and is hereby authorized to enter with the register of the land office for the district in which such land may lie, by legal subdivisions, any number of acres not exceeding one hundred and sixty, or a quarter section of land, to include the residence of such claimant."

That act of 1841 is the first in the history of these United States in which we ever undertook to confine the benefits of any preemption, donation, or other law to citizens of the United States. Under all the preemption laws, from the earliest foundation of the Government down to that day, any foreigner fresh from Europe, who had just landed, might, by complying with their provisions in relation to settlement and cultivation, go to the land office, and enter his quarter section just as though he were a citizen. That act was the first which introduced such a restriction. Listen to the language of the act of 1830, the first general law which granted preemption rights to all who should settle upon the public domain. Its words are:

"That every settler or occupant of the public lands prior to the passage of this act, who is now in possession, and cultivated any part thereof, shall be entitled to enter," &c.

This is the language of the act of 1830, under whose provisions preemptions were taken all over Alabama, Mississippi, and Missouri. Every foreigner fresh from Europe, who settled upon any portion of the public domain of Alabama, Mississippi, or in any of the States, went to the land office, and entered the land without any question being asked him in regard to citizenship.

I come now to the acts of the 19th of June, 1834, and of the 22d of June, 1838, under which I remember to have granted preemption rights to several hundred foreigners in the State of Iowa, when I was acting as a register of the land office. Like their predecessor, these laws read that "every settler and occupant shall enter," &c.; precisely the same language as that used in all the previous laws.

"Settlers," "occupants," and "persons," are the terms made use of, and never were there any other terms employed in any of the preemption acts prior to the act passed by the Whig party in 1841, with their triumphant majority in each House of Congress. To that party belongs the honor, if it be such, of having introduced the first provision in any law of this character to confine its benefits to citizens, and to such foreigners as filed their declaration to become citizens. My venerable and distinguished friend from Delaware was not here then; but, if he had been, judging from the penchant which he has shown for amendments of this character, I have no doubt he would have presented it, and that it would have been baptised, "the Clayton amendment." But there was a worthy and respectable Senator of his own party, [Mr. Merrick, of Maryland,] who ably and zealously pressed those hostile amendments against foreigners which are now being urged by the Senator from Delaware.

"Mr. MERRICK [Whig Senator from Maryland] then offered the following amendment:

"Insert after the word years, in the tenth line:

"Provided, That the right of preemption granted by this act, or the act hereby revived, shall not accrue to any other persons than those who were, on the first day of December, 1837, citizens of the United States; and such citizenship shall, in all cases, be established by legal and competent testimony, to the satisfaction of the register and receiver of the land district in which the lands may lie, prior to any entry thereof, by virtue of the provisions of this act."

"The amendment I have offered proposes to modify the bill as to limit the grant of this bounty to our own citizens; to exclude from the immense advantages of this law and this policy (for remember, it is avowed on the other side that this is to be the settled policy of the Government, and all other similar laws are to be passed continually hereafter) all aliens, all who are neither native nor naturalized citizens of the Union. Between the native and naturalized citizen I propose to make no distinction in this respect; but I desire, while you are about to deal out the property of the American citizens in bounties and gratuities, that you should confine your liberality in disposing of their means to your own people."

"What, sir, has been the chief argument urged in favor of the passage of this bill? Was it, and is it not, that you thereby give to the industrious, and honest, and enterprising poor man, who owns no land, and has not the means of purchasing in the old settled portions of the country, an opportunity of acquiring a home, and comfort and independence for himself and family? And will you, can you, while you use this argument, exclude our own citizens from the advantages thus speciously held out, by letting loose, as competitors with them, the hordes of European and other foreign vagrants, knaves and paupers; and will not the poor man, the honest, and virtuous, and industrious poor man of this country, be effectually excluded from all the vast benefits and advantages of this and similar laws, if you reject the amendment I have offered? Yes, sir, they will be excluded by the preoccupation of the knaves and paupers of the Old World. Already this description of persons are flocking, in most pernicious herds, to this country: let it once be known that they are admitted to the free and full enjoyment of the advantages of these preemption laws; that they are authorized by Congress to come in any numbers, and seize upon the inheritance of the American people, and the character of our frontier population will be sadly changed. No longer shall we find our frontier, as it extends farther and farther west, peopled by brave, and hardy, and patriotic yeomanry. That which has hitherto been the bulwark may become the scourge of the country. You will have there a vicious, corrupt, and debased swarm of outcasts from Europe; and the poor, but honest and proud-hearted American freeman will rather die in poverty and want, than dwell among such people; no, sir, he will never go among them; and you exclude him as effectually by refusing to shut the door against such alien intruders, as if you were to proscribe him by name in your statute. Make the professions I have heard good; so frame this bill as in fact to enable the meritorious poor men of our own country who have them not, to acquire homes, and comfort, and independence for themselves and families, and my heart will be with you; at all events, bestow not the property of the citizens of this Union in bounties upon aliens who owe you no allegiance, who have no sympathies for, no ties to bind them to you, but who are, from habit and education, hostile to all those institutions so dear to this republican people. Sir, so to bestow this property, to pass this bill as it now stands, without the amendment, will be an outrage upon the rights as well as upon the feelings of the American people."

"Mr. WALKER, of Mississippi, [R. J. Walker,] was entirely opposed to the adoption of any such amendment. It not only excluded aliens that had been driven by oppression, to seek a shelter among us, but would also prevent those who voluntarily sought homes in this, the country of their adoption. It savored too much of the old alien and sedition law to meet his encouragement. He pointed to cases where the bounty of the Government had been extended to foreigners; and cited the case of the exiled Poles. He alluded, also, to the number of foreigners that had so warmly espoused the American cause at the time of the Revolution, and had so freely shed their blood in defense of her rights, during the late war with Great Britain."

"Mr. NORVELL, of Michigan, said the Senator from Maryland, had asked whether we were to be called on to bestow this bounty on foreigners, upon the foreign paupers from Europe? Sir, if foreign emigrants will come among us, clear our lands, drain our marshes, and plant the soil with wheat and corn, what possible objection could be made to allowing them thus to contribute to the population and wealth of the country?

"Mr. BENTON, of Missouri, said he was entirely opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. Merrick.] It proposed something new in our legislation. It proposed to make a distinction between aliens and citizens in the acquisition of property. Preemption rights had been granted since the formation of the Government; and no distinction, until now, had been proposed between the persons, or classes of persons, to whom they were granted. No law had yet excluded aliens from the acquisition of a preemption right, and he was entirely opposed to commencing a system of legislation which was to affect the property rights of the aliens who came to our country to make it their home. Political rights rested on a different basis. They involved the management of the Government, and it was right that foreigners should undergo the process of naturalization before they acquired the right of sharing in the Government. But the acquisition of property was another affair. It was a private and personal affair. It involved no question but that of the subsistence, the support, and the comfortable living of the alien and his family."

"Mr. BUCHANAN, of Pennsylvania, probably should not have said a word upon the subject had it not been for the amendment which had been offered by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. Merrick.] This amendment proposed to make an invidious distinction, which had never been made heretofore in our legislation, against foreigners who had settled upon the public lands, and had not been naturalized prior to the first day of December last. Whilst it granted preemptions in such cases to our own citizens, it excluded these foreigners. Why had this change been proposed in our settled policy? He had observed with regret that attempts were now extensively making throughout the country to excite what was called a Native American feeling against those who had come from a foreign land to participate in the blessings of our free Constitution. Such a feeling was unjust—it was ungrateful. In the darkest days of the Revolution, who had assisted us in fighting our battles and achieving our independence? Foreigners, yes, sir, foreigners. He would not say, for he did not believe, that our independence could not have been established without their aid; but he would say the struggle would have been longer and more doubtful. After the Revolution, emigration had been encouraged by our policy. Throughout the long and bloody wars in Europe, which had been an asylum for the oppressed of all nations. He trusted that at this late day the Congress of the United States were not about to establish, for the first time, such an odious distinction as that proposed between one of our citizens, who had settled upon the public lands, and his neighbor, who had pursued the same course under the faith of your previous policy, merely because the neighbor had not resided long enough within the United States to have become a naturalized citizen. He was himself the son of a naturalized foreigner, and perhaps might feel this distinction the more sensibly on that account. He was glad the yeas and nays had been demanded that he might record his vote against the principle proposed by the amendment."

"Mr. YOUNG said: But, sir, the object of this amendment of the honorable Senator from Maryland [Mr. Merrick] is to exclude foreigners not naturalized from the advantages held out by this bill to native citizens, and to such as have been naturalized. I, sir, can never consent to this distinction. By the constitution and laws of Illinois, the State of my adoption, foreigners may vote, they may be elected to offices of the most important character, and are made capable of purchasing, holding, enjoying and again transferring real estate, by will or otherwise. Yes, Mr. President, I have seen a foreigner, not naturalized, a member of our State Legislature, enjoying all the privileges of a native citizen. Many of them are my acquaintances and friends, and I cannot vote against them. I hope, therefore, Mr. President, that the amendment may not be adopted."

Thus spoke the leading and distinguished Democrats who occupied these seats in June, 1838, upon the question which, in spirit, and almost in form, is now before us. There was another Senator, an esteemed friend of mine, well known throughout the whole Republic for the talent and statesmanship which he exhibited during a series of years, both in this and the other House of Congress, and to whose views on this subject, I beg respectfully to call the attention of my friend from Alabama, [Mr. CLAY,] knowing, as I do, that they will have great weight with him:

"Mr. CLAY, of Alabama, expressed his astonishment at the motion of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. Merrick,] to exclude foreigners settled on the public lands from the right of preemption. That honorable Senator, Mr. Clay said, could not be aware that his amendment, if adopted, would go to change the whole policy of the Government heretofore toward that unfortunate class of individuals. That policy, Mr. Clay said, had commenced more than twenty years ago. In the year 1817, Congress passed a law setting apart four contiguous townships of land for the French emigrants, who had followed the fortunes of Napoleon; and been driven from their own country by the last disastrous battle of that great chieftain. Carrying out in practice the theory that our own free country is the asylum of the oppressed of all others, Congress, by the law alluded to, had authorized the grant of these four townships to these unfortunate exiles, on better terms than land was sold to our own citizens; that is, not only at the then minimum price, but on a credit of fourteen years."

"Again, on a more recent occasion, when the liberties of unhappy Poland had been cloven down by the power of despotism, and many of her unfortunate sons had sought a refuge in the only "land of the free," Congress had granted thirty-six entire sections of land to two hundred and thirty-five of her exiles, on the payment of the minimum price in ten years. Indeed, Mr. Clay remarked, the Senate had gone so far in this case, as well as he recollected, as to pass the bill last alluded to in such form as to make the grant a pure donation; but the House had very properly modified the bill so as to require the payment of the minimum within ten years. Mr. Clay said he was not disposed to put foreigners on a better footing than native citizens, but he was far from a disposition to exclude such as were cultivators of the public lands, and had thus given evidence of their intention to reside permanently amongst us from the benefits common to others, especially when the laws of most of the States allowed them to become landholders. He was, he said, in favor of making our own country emphatically what it professed to be—a refuge and a home for the oppressed of all other countries—an asylum for every foreigner who might be driven into exile by the hand of tyranny."

"Mr. Clay made other remarks against the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland, urging its rejection, and expressing the earnest hope that Congress would not now depart from the liberal and humane policy which had heretofore characterized its legislation."

The following are the yeas and nays on Mr. Merrick's amendment:

"YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Clay of Kentucky, Clayton, Crittenden, Knight, Merrick, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Smith of Indiana, Southard, Spence, Tallmadge, and Tipton—15."

"NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay of Alabama, Cuthbert, Fulton, Grundy, Hubbard, King, Linn, Lumpkin, Lyon, Mouton, Nicholas, Niles, Norvell, Pierce, Roane, Robinson, Sevier, Walker, Webster, White, Williams, Wright, and Young—25."

Mr. President, there is, it seems to me much instruction in this debate. It is a correct rule to reason of the future by the past. Sir, have any of the gloomy predictions of Mr. Merrick, or those who voted and spoke with him, been realized by the passage of those laws which they resisted so determinedly, especially their lugubrious vaticinations respecting the "foreign paupers," with revolutionary designs, which these laws were to throw upon the new States? No, not one; but on the contrary, these laws have been most beneficent in their operation. They have contributed to bring us that hardy, industrious, and law-abiding population with which the new States are filled up. The foreign element is a respectable, but not a controlling one. We are anxious in the new States for its increase. We are those who are to be most affected by this population, and should be glad that the views and feelings of the people of the new States and Territories should be allowed to govern in the enactment of such laws as are calculated above all others to bring us that which we most want—population.

I ask you, sir, if these foreigners can be allowed in any numbers to go and settle upon, and buy the public domain, and that, too, under the rights of preemption, which means preference over every other person in the world, at $1 25 per acre, what additional evil can result from granting them the homestead privileges of this bill in common with our own citizens? The homestead bill is not so liberal towards this class as are the preemption laws; and as the latter have been found to work well in practice, I think we should be willing to try the former. To those who are opposed to the bill as applied to native-born Americans, hostile to it in any shape, it is quite unnecessary, it seems to me, that they should wage this merciless warfare upon the section for the benefit of foreigners.

Mr. President, I should like to know of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. CLAYTON,] or any of those who cooperate with him, when, and upon what occasion, this much abused foreign population has shown any disloyalty to the institutions of this country? When, and where, have they ever raised the standard of rebellion against its Constitution or its laws? At no time or place, do I believe they have ever done either; nor have I the most distant idea that they contemplated either or any of these things. I remember that my friend from Mississippi, [Mr. ADAMS,] during the last winter, alluded to some ebullition of feeling on the part of some of the German population, I think, of Cincinnati, which I myself regretted, but which I attributed to others—to native-born citizens, Abolitionists—such as those of the old Bay State, and others who were so much disposed on a recent occasion to give way to mob-violence. I repeat my solemn belief that there are no more loyal and patriotic people than those foreigners who have found their way to Iowa, Wisconsin, and other western States. When the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] was ridiculing the persons and bodily formation of these men who happened to be born on the opposite side of the ocean, I think, if the scenes of the American Revolution could have been brought fresh to his memory, if he could have contemplated the Irish foreigner, Montgomery, in his winding sheet—one of the very first to strike and fall in the cause of our then struggling and feeble country; had he remembered the services of Pulaski, Kosciuszko, DeKalb, Lafayette, and that host of other noble spirits who flocked around our revolutionary standard, and shed their blood upon almost every battle-field, from Massachusetts to Georgia, he could not have found it in his heart to oppose, denounce, and ridicule their countrymen in the manner he did. The person of the Baron Steuben may not have been such in all particulars as would command the admiration of the Senator from Kentucky, but it was one that faced the front of war—one from whom the father of his country was willing to receive that instruction in military tactics which his early and imperfect education had not given him an opportunity to acquire.

I know much of these people. I speak from my knowledge of the great body of them when I say before God and the Senate that I believe they are as true, as loyal, as devoted to the institutions of the country as any native citizens, and are among the most ready to take up arms in its defense. Look at your Adjutant General's reports, compare the places of nativity of the soldiers who enlisted in your Army during all the wars from that of the Revolution down to the recent war with Mexico, and you will find a very large proportion of them were foreigners. I have lived in a section of the country in which it has been necessary at times to call for volunteers to repel Indian hostility, and have never found these people, whether they had gone through the forms of naturalization or not, backward in rallying in defense of the country of their choice, and that too without hope of reward or emolument.

Although I differ from the honorable Senator from Delaware as widely as the poles upon almost every political question, I entertain a high personal respect for him, for his years and public services, and my colleague, when a delegate in the other House, caused one of the finest counties of our State to be named after that Senator, in consequence of his friendship to Iowa when a Territory. I was about to ask him, but I will not—I will inquire of the most determined opponent of this foreign-born population, if he will propose to repeal our naturalization laws? For if it be an evil those laws produce it, and should be repealed. If those laws are to remain as they now are, and emigration shall continue to pour into the country, I humbly submit that it is much the wiser course to adopt such measures as will cause these people to feel the deepest possible interest in our country and its institutions.

At present the fight is upon allowing them to become the owners of the soil, that soil which many of them have fattened with their blood, as I know was the case in Wisconsin and Iowa. Here you fight them upon the simple privilege of allowing them as your native-born citizens, when they take their lives in their hands, and go to Nebraska and Kansas, the right to become the owners of a quarter section, after having complied with the conditions of the law, and settled and cultivated the land for five consecutive years. Is there any party, faction, or segment of a party, except that misguided and proscriptive faction, called "Native Americans" or "Know-Nothings," who have the hardihood or the courage to propose to repeal the naturalization laws of the United States? I sincerely hope and trust not! If there be, however, a party or a faction with such purposes, they should direct their guns at the naturalization laws. If these men are unworthy to settle on your public domain and be allowed with others, who go with them, their friends and neighbors, to acquire a homestead in case you pass this bill or any other of a similar character, then you should go further and repeal your naturalization laws or increase the time required to twenty-one years. These are the provisions which should be enacted, if this be a dangerous, a revolutionary, or an incendiary population, which I deny in toto. I undertake to say that nothing of the sort can ever be established? There are some of them when they have arrived here fresh from Europe, who have been imposed upon by Abolitionists and others, but when they understand, (as they readily do, for the larger portion of them being educated, can read the Constitution, and the laws of the United States,) they are willing to live up to the laws and comply with their requirements, and I undertake to say that in any State there will be found as few instances of resistance to the laws of the land among the foreign-born population of the country, as in any other class.

But our unparalleled increase is not be mainly ascribed to emigration, nor should we be told that this is a bill for the benefit of foreigners alone. The last census shows that of our whole population of 23,347,884, but 2,210,028 were born in foreign countries. From this, the most reliable data, it will be seen that our increase is to be attributed mainly to the productive and expansive energies of the Anglo Saxon stock of this continent—the same causes which impelled us forward so rapidly in our early history, when emigration was comparatively unknown.

Mr. President, this homestead bill is the most misunderstood and most abused bill, in my opinion, that has ever entered this body. The number of persons who will avail themselves of its benefits is greatly exaggerated. It is spoken of as a measure which will swallow up all the public lands. My own belief is that it will cause more of them to be annually sold for cash than are now disposed of. I believe that its operation will be highly beneficial to the new States and the Territories, but equally or more so to the people of the old States, and especially to that class who, whilst they feed, and may be said to support, all others, rarely, if ever, receive anything at the hands of National or State Legislatures, other than taxation. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that, although we passed a liberal homestead law giving three hundred and twenty acres to the heads of families, and one hundred and sixty acres to single settlers in Oregon, we have recently had, from that portion of the country, petitions presented, requesting us to relieve some of them of the provision requiring five years' settlement and occupancy, and asking to be allowed to buy the lands. Those who become able to prefer to buy the land, rather than be compelled to live on it for five consecutive years without acquiring title.

I have a statement, though not by me, showing that under the land system as it now exists, selling, as you have sold in Michigan, from the time my distinguished friend [Mr. Cass] went there until the present time, it will take fifty-four years to extinguish within the borders of that State the proprietorship of this Government, which lords it over the people of the new States somewhat after the manner of Great Britain over Ireland, selling and exhausting all our resources to pay for its land, without contributing a dollar towards the support of our Government, or allowing our authorities to tax their land to support State or county government.

In Missouri, nearly two thirds of whose superficial area remains public land, it will take, under the present system, and at the rate of past sales, sixty years to pass the title of her lands from the United States to individuals, and thus make them available for the support of the State government.*

Now, sir, this being the condition of the public land States, I ask you if any measure which has for its object the encouragement of the settlement of these lands with a hardy, industrious people, who will find their way to them, will do us any harm? I think not; but, on the contrary, great benefit. No one, I take it, will propose to repeal the naturalization laws. Then is it not better by liberal laws, to make them land-owning and tax-paying citizens, than, by a different policy, to keep them in your crowded cities? To state the case, it appears to me, is to meet an affirmative answer. Of all the capital in a new country, muscle and bone is the best to develop its resources. I feel an abiding confidence that the homestead feature ingrafted upon our present land system, will operate most beneficially, and will be felt to a greater or less extent in all the ramifications of society. It will give confidence and security to those who are seeking to benefit their condition, but are prevented from settling on the public domain because of the dread with which they look to the sale of the land on which they may reside. Of all the things the nearest and dearest to the human heart, is the desire to become the possessor of a piece of our mother earth. It is the strongest feeling which animates the human breast. The

*WASHINGTON, May 1, 1854.

SIR: In reply to your inquiries of April 29, I have the honor to inform you that I have examined the returns of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and find as follows:

The first public sale of lands in Alabama was made in the year 1809. From that date to the 30th June last, a period of forty-four years, there was sold and located by land warrants 12,514,630 acres, and there remained undisposed of 15,019,693 acres. Estimating the future by the past, it will require, to dispose of this remaining land, a period of about fifty-two years.

The first public sale of land in Mississippi was made in the year 1820. From that date to the 30th June last, a period of thirty-three years, there was sold and located by land warrants 10,094,537 acres, and there remained undisposed of 9,083,656 acres. Estimating the future by the past, it will require, to dispose of this remaining land, a period of about twenty-nine years.

The first public sale of land in Arkansas was made in the year 1821. From that date to the 30th June last, a period of thirty-two years, there was sold and located by land warrants 5,052,980 acres, and there remained undisposed of 15,725,388 acres. Estimating the future by the past, it will require, to dispose of this remaining land, a period of about ninety-nine years.

The first public sale of land in Missouri was made in the year 1818. From that date to the 30th June last, a period of thirty-five years, there was sold and located by land warrants 13,105,500 acres, and there remained undisposed of 22,722,801 acres. Estimating the future by the past, it will require, to dispose of this remaining land, a period of about sixty years.

The first public sale of lands in Michigan was made in the year 1818. From that date to the 30th June last, a period of thirty-five years, there was sold and located by land warrants 10,421,302 acres, and there remained undisposed of 16,142,293 acres. Estimating the future by the past, it will require, to dispose of this remaining land, a period of about fifty-four years.

I am, with great respect, your obedient servant,
DAVID H. BURR,
Draftsman United States Senate,
Hon. A. C. Dodge, United States Senate.

settlers upon the public domain in the new States and Territories look with alarm at the appearance of the United States surveyor, and with far greater terror to the proclamation of the President, ordering the lands on which they have located to be sold on a three months' notice.

Pass this bill, and individuals who may settle and reside upon public land for five consecutive years, will get their homes; others who are not willing to wait so long a time can buy theirs whenever they choose.

From calculations which have been made, I am inclined to the opinion that not more than one half the quantity of public lands annually disposed of in the northwest, is purchased by those who wish to cultivate it. An immense amount is now being entered by those who do it exclusively from motives of speculation. One of the excellent tendencies of this bill will be to check these speculations in the public domain, and I am one of those who think it almost a national calamity that the bill reported by Senator Walker, of Mississippi, in 1836, and which passed this body, confining the sale of all public lands to actual settlers, did not become a law.

I ask Senators, as American citizens, as those who are disposed to keep the country together, and to sustain all its institutions, whether it is better—no one proposing to repeal the naturalization laws of the United States—that you should keep the foreign-born population confined to the cities, discourage them from going to the frontier, or allow them to spread out, and fuse in with, and become a part of the population of the country? Sir, their numbers, as I have before remarked, are magnified. The census shows this very clearly—shows that the number of foreigners in the country, and the probable number who buy the public domain, is immensely exaggerated. Let no man tell me that this is a bonus, or a bounty to revolutionary Europe. Sir, your naturalization laws, and your free institutions, the participation of foreigners in the struggle which burst British tyranny, and enabled us to advance from colonial dependence to our present proud position—your inter-communication by steam navigation—these are the things which bring foreigners here, and not your land system. A large portion of them are mechanics and tradesmen who settle in cities, and will not, under your most liberal land system, find their way to the frontier. No, sir, it is not the lands, but the laws and free institutions, that bring them here.

Sir, I have said that I think something is due to the House of Representatives. That House, at an early day, among the very first measures which were passed at this session, sent us the homestead bill. It was sent to us at the first session of a previous Congress. It was then lost, because of a want of devotion on the part of its friends. A proposition to establish ocean line steamers, to increase their compensation, and other measures of a like character, which have some speculation and outside strength to support them, very easily pass, and upon the shortest possible notice; but look at the time that we have had to consider the homestead bill. To-day is the first time it has been up for months. Sir, it is for a class, whether they be foreigners or not, who are not able to be represented here by lobby agents, and that class of voters, who, I fear, are becoming more successful than they deserve. It is a bill for those who pay the taxes, who fight the battles of the country, and that, too, without any inducement beyond patriotism; it is for the men who rally for the trifling pay which is given to the regular soldiers, at the first sound of war, and are ready to march to the Rio Grande, or to other portions of the country which may be assailed by an enemy.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I may vote against striking out this section. I rather think I shall; and I wish to submit one or two observations in explanation of my present views. I do not put the construction upon this section which other Senators have placed upon it. My reading of it is not the same as theirs. It provides:

"That if any individual, now a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and not a citizen of the United States, but, at the time of making such application for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention, as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent, as made and provided for in this act."

"As made and provided for in this act." Take that language in connection with the rest of the bill, and what do we ascertain? The bill elsewhere provides that the patent shall issue at the expiration of five years. It is "made and provided" that it shall do so. It is clear to my mind that if an alien born seeks the benefits of this act, he can obtain them only on the condition of his perfecting his citizenship in the five years. The act only proposes to hold the land in reserve for him five years. In that time he may complete his citizenship, if he chooses. If he fails, he loses all rights under the act. He cannot receive the title, because, having had the opportunity of becoming a citizen competent to receive it, he has voluntarily declined doing so. The means are "made and provided" for him; and if he rejects them, it is his own fault.

I think the construction placed upon the section by some Senators, that a foreigner may continue to reside on the land without becoming a citizen, is not sustained by the language of the section. If he has filed his declaration of intention to become a citizen, and shall actually become so within the five years, a patent shall issue to him, just as though he were a native-born citizen. That is all that the section means, according to my reading of it. If he fails to become a citizen, at the expiration of the five years he cannot receive the title, and Government, having complied with its part of the engagement, may, and doubtless will, sell the land to any one else who may offer himself as a purchaser.

Now, sir, a few words as to granting lands at all to foreign-born people. I am, perhaps, as much opposed as any gentleman in the Senate to conferring political rights on foreigners, as long as they are such; but when they have been naturalized, when they have been, by our laws, placed upon the same footing with American-born citizens, then, and then only, am I ready to admit them to all the rights of citizenship. But, sir, during this session of the Senate we have made a very marked exception to that general rule. We have, by the almost unanimous vote of the Senate, authorized, in the two important Territories which we have just organized—Kansas and Nebraska—foreign-born people, who are not yet citizens, to vote, and we have admitted them to all the political rights of our own native citizens. And now, sir, shall we hesitate when we are asked simply to allow these same people to settle upon a piece of public land? How can the mere fact of a foreigner settling upon a bit of land affect the political prosperity or property of the country. How is it going to affect the political rights of our people? His settlement there does not give him the right to vote; it does not give him the right to hold office; it confers upon him no political authority. And as far as the mere occupancy of the soil, it no more affects the rights of native-born citizens, or the political rights of the country one way or another, than if the man were back in Germany or in Ireland. It is the right of suffrage, the right to vote, and to hold office by the votes of other foreigners like himself, that interferes with our people and our politics.

We get a marked advantage from having laborers employed on the public lands; and the labor of a foreigner is quite as productive as though he were a native-born citizen. Every bushel of corn that he raises, every bushel of wheat, every ounce of produce of every kind which he makes by his labor, enters into the general wealth of the nation, and to the same extent as though he were a native-born citizen. Then, I say, that so far as this bill goes, you grant him no right except the mere right of occupying the land and cultivating it; and, in return for this, he gives you all that a native-born citizen would give you; he gives you the products of his labor as an addition to the general wealth. I cannot, myself, see the propriety of first admitting foreigners to all the political rights of American-born citizens, and then stopping short when you are only asked to allow them to occupy and cultivate the wild lands of the West. If they are fit to vote and hold office, I hardly think we shall be seriously damaged by allowing them to mingle their labor with the soil which we allow them to govern. If they do any part of the voting, I am for getting as much work out of them as possible; and if they have a fancy for cultivating the soil, I am clear for letting them do it.

I think there is a manifest propriety, when you have admitted a man to political rights, that you should provide for him in some way a home; and that, too, at the cheapest rate at which it can be supplied. What is your interest, sir; what is manifestly your interest towards these people whom you have allowed, by your legislation, to vote in Kansas and Nebraska; and, I believe, in all the other Territories? It is to settle them down, to make them permanent inhabitants of the country, to stop their roving disposition, to get them out of your cities and towns, and identify them as early as possible with the soil. That, I believe, is our true policy. If I could have had my way, I never would have admitted these people to political rights until they had been here long enough to learn something of our laws, long enough to learn and study and understand our Constitution; but the policy of the country, as marked out by the two branches of the Legislature, and sanctioned by the President, has been different. It has been to admit them to all the rights of citizenship, so far as voting and holding office in these Territories are concerned. Now, I am not going to stop short and say to a man, "though you may have the same right to vote as a native-born citizen; though you have the same right to hold office as a native-born citizen, you shall not have the same right to occupy the land; though you may govern, you shall not occupy the soil." I see no propriety in this—no reason for it. Why, sir, I would rather any sort of a foreigner should occupy a quarter section of land than it should be occupied by a wolf or a bear. I would rather that any sort of a foreigner, who would cultivate it, should occupy it, than a savage. And this upon the principle which I have already stated, that his labor is just as valuable as though it were the labor of a native-born citizen. It is worth as much, and the products of it will sell for as much in the market, and go as far in subsisting the country. According to the bill, you do not give him a title until he is a citizen, and made so according to the laws of the land. When he is made a citizen, then, I say, not only in reference to this, but in reference to all other rights, I am for putting him upon a footing with natives-born.

It is said many of these emigrants are bad men; doubtless, this is true. But will he be made a better man by keeping him in a city or town? The best thing that can be done with a bad man is to put him to work, and, as long as you can keep him at it, he will be out of mischief.

Upon the broad principle that one man's labor is as good as another in raising corn, wheat, cotton, rice, or tobacco, I am willing to see every foreigner go to work on the public lands. When he becomes a citizen in the regular way, I would admit him to all the rights of a citizen, political as well as others. I would not give him the title until he became a citizen; but if he wanted to work the land, I would tell him to go ahead. It would make a better man of him; and when he came to be a citizen, he would love the land all the more in which he had mingled his sweat.

You committed a grievous fault when you authorized foreigners to vote and govern the country. You cannot atone for it by refusing them the right to work the land which they govern.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. President, I do not desire to enter into this discussion, but I wish to suggest a few thoughts which occur to my mind, as the reasons which induce me to vote to strike out the sixth section. The whole of this question has been brought upon us by an unnecessary purchasing out of Indian title and the acquisition of too much land in that way; and because our population is not sufficiently large to occupy this extensive country, we are seeking to divest ourselves of this great possession, as we say, in the best way we can for the benefit of mankind. As there are more lands within the limits of this country than can be occupied by our people, we are seeking out all manner of inventions to dispose of it, and hence the present controversy. It is not a controversy between foreigners, and American or native citizens. It is unjust to the character of the country and to the respective parties of this Confederacy, to charge this against one or the other. It is, sir, a question of justice between the foreign population and the natives of the country. Like the Senator from Delaware, I maintain that, if there be any property to be distributed, or any advantage in the administration of bounties, the native American, the citizen of the country, should be entitled to it. I maintain that the man who has up to this period lived upon your soil, defended your frontier against the savage population, of which my able and distinguished friend from Iowa has spoken, defended it from the incursions and attacks of the very nations from which these foreigners may come, should be entitled to it. The man who does not possess that feeling is lacking something of the patriotism which attaches to me in my native country.

Why, sir, I have not an unkind feeling to a foreigner. I extend the hand of charity and the arm of protection as soon to him, personally, as I would to my native-born neighbor; but, sir, when I am called upon as an American Senator, representing this great Confederacy, to dispose of any rights, whether personal or political, or to make any donations which it is supposed Congress has power to make, I will never do injustice to the citizens of the country for the benefit of a foreigner.

Now, sir, I wish to state one thought that has occurred to my mind during this discussion. The Constitution of the United States contemplates a difference between the native and the foreigner, and requires a uniform system of naturalization. There is a constitutional difference between personal and political rights in some degree. By our naturalization laws we declare to the world that all foreigners, whatever may be their age, who arrive within the limits of this country, are not of full age—speaking after the manner of men—are not twenty-one years of age until they remain here five years, and qualify themselves to become American citizens. Those persons, then, who are not qualified for want of proper time or examination into our institutions, are to be entitled, according to this bill as it stands, to one hundred and sixty acres of land, when the sons of native American people over the age of sixteen years, understanding our language, living here, having, in all probability, rendered some service to the country, cannot, in anticipation of their majority, claim to settle upon one hundred and sixty acres of land, because they are not of full age. A foreigner who cannot utter an English sentence, whose parents, and who himself, never rendered a particle of service to this country, can go under this bill, and settle himself upon one hundred and sixty acres of land, while an American young man of intelligence, even if he be in his nineteenth year, is not entitled to it.

Why do you require a pupilage of five years before a foreigner can become a citizen? It is to enable him to qualify himself for the duties of a citizen. Why is a young man of sixteen deprived of political rights until he becomes twenty-one? Why does this bill require that Americans, to receive its benefits, shall be of full age, while a foreigner who has just arrived, may take land under it? Why not say to the young man of sense, the poor of your soil, who have been here from the foundation of your Government, "Go whilst this pupilage exists, place yourself upon the public lands, and wait until you are twenty-one years of age, and then a patent shall issue to you?" Why do gentlemen discriminate between foreigners and native Americans? I do not wish gentlemen to understand me, or to charge me with being unkind or ungenerous, or wanting in proper philanthropy towards foreigners. I love them as much as others. There is no difference between us on that score.

But here comes up another great point of view. Is not this a disposition of the public land? Is it a disposition founded upon justice, upon liberality, or upon any principle of equity? Answer me, if you please, gentlemen. Do it candidly, uninfluenced by foreign feeling or native American feeling. You are giving away the public lands. On what principle are you doing it? Are you giving them as a compensation for services rendered to the country? No, sir, but you are giving away your public lands because you want to get rid of them. You want to give them to somebody, and why do you give them to foreigners, instead of to the whole American people? The question cannot be answered. Here, you may say, is a foreign gentleman of education, of honor, honesty, and property, leaving his country and coming here to enjoy the privileges and happiness of this Government. As soon as he steps upon our shores, he is disconnected from his old home, and is seeking a new one here. He is free to go anywhere. He is invited to take the public lands as a free gift. Here stands by on the very spot where he lands, a mechanic in the city of New York, who was bound an apprentice boy to learn his occupation, who has been toiling from morning till night to sustain himself and family. You say to him that he shall not be entitled to one hundred and sixty acres of public land unless he abandons his trade, goes from the State of New York, and settles upon one hundred and sixty acres in the West, and there remains for five years. You require that, before he can receive the land, he shall abandon an occupation calculated to benefit and prosper the country, and one for which he had been taught and reared. You say to him in language so plain that no man can doubt: "Although you paid your taxes and aided in fighting the battles of your country, yet in consequence of your occupation, which is necessary to the subsistence of society, and to the prosperity of the country, your hands are so completely tied to a particular location that you shall not enjoy the glorious privileges obtained by your labor, and protected by your arms, but a foreigner who is aloft, and can settle where he pleases, shall enjoy them." You say the like to the poor dependent widow, with a family, perhaps, of ten children, whose husband has been in the army of the country, and has perished in the service, though poverty surrounds her, that she is fixed like a plant to one peculiar spot, and shall stay there, because her poverty is too great to allow her to pick up her all and travel with those children to the great western regions, and settle there, and cut down the forest trees. She is to be denied justice, and the foreigner is to receive the land which she ought to have enjoyed, because she is incapable of going there.

Contrast this bill as you please, gentlemen, and it is an outrage upon justice, upon the equal rights of this country, and I tell you to-day there will be a rising up of public indignation against the inequality of this measure; and there ought to be. It seeks to disconnect society, to dissolve the relationship of neighborhood, by seducing men to leave their homes, and go out and settle upon distant soils, and it says to them, "If you do not do it you shall be entitled to nothing." I may be a man with but one arm and one leg, or with neither, with none of the means of locomotion. I may be a poor man, settled on one particular spot which I cannot leave. I must stay there. Those legs and arms may have been lost in the service of the country, but that is immaterial. I cannot enjoy this boon; you say to me that I cannot, although the very man who may have inflicted those wounds in the opposite ranks among the enemies of the country, now comes here as a foreigner, and receives a hundred and sixty acres of land, while there I am compelled to stay because I cannot go on the public domain. Is this right? It is unjust; it is cruel, because it violates the principles of justice. Hence it is, that seeing that the public lands will have to go, I have come to the determination that they should be divided fairly.

I am no agrarian; I am no bidder for public estimation; I do not desire to purchase any special influence by special legislation; but I say if the public lands are to be given away, they belong to the men of the country, the citizens of the United States, and whenever you are about to make a donation of them, you will be an unjust, and, in my judgment, an unwise trustee, to give them to those who were never contemplated when they were acquired, and who were never considered at that time as the cestui que trusts. You should give them to the American people—not to the idle poor whose habits prevent them from acquiring, but to the man who, by toil and honest employment as a citizen, has acquired the comforts of life. Thus you should draw a distinction between the trustworthy and industrious, and the indolent and indigent.

That is the argument. Hence it is that I say, all men here politically being equal, the lands belong to the people; and if those public lands are an incumbrance to the Government, and you desire to dispose of them in order to rid your hand of them, I will introduce a measure to which, in my judgment, the necessity which exists, the circumstances under which we are now legislating, and the feeling and disposition of the country, will drive me, to give to every male citizen of the United States one hundred and sixty acres of land; and why should we not have it? Why should my distinguished friend from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] whose services to the country, in the field, and in the Cabinet, have placed him before the American people in a proud and prominent position, be excluded, and a man from a foreign nation, and perhaps infected with vice, have the right conferred upon him? Why give it to such a man and deny it to my friend from Michigan? By what principle of equity or justice can you make such a discrimination? You cannot do it. Then, sir, these lands, if they are in the way, and you must get rid of them, and they are increasing to such an extent that you cannot occupy them, give them to the people, in the name of justice, who to-day are living here, and whose forefathers fought for and gave us this immense inheritance. Give to each his right; can anybody deny the justice and propriety of doing that?

In addition to that, there are thousands of wretched, unhappy poor, who would emigrate if they had the means in their hand; would go with joy if they could. Why will you say to them, stand ye there; and because you stand there, we deny you that justice which we give to the foreigner, who stands by your side, idle and wretched, and who has never paid a dollar of taxes for the defense of this Government? It is wrong; it is radically wrong; it is unjust. I feel it to be so.

It may be asked, are there enough lands to give to every person of every description? Yes; and I will go a little further in my amendment, in the amendment founded upon my judgment. If you cannot take care of your public lands, husband them, diminish your revenue, reduce your territory, if necessary. Let your influence spread over the territories wherever they lie, and let them be occupied by those who desire to do so. That is my doctrine. You will not do it; hence I say, give it to every citizen, native or adopted, for the purpose of encouragement; and a still more important thing, to increase population by reproduction; give to every girl over the age of eighteen or twenty-one, one hundred and sixty acres of land.

Mr. BROWN. How would that affect reproduction?

Mr. DAWSON. By inducing some one to unite with her. Now, I want to know is this not right? Is it not just? And can you give a good reason to your constituents when you go home and point out the sixth section of this bill, and tell them that you have conferred this upon aliens; and when they ask you why did you not give it to us, can you then say, "You are well enough off at home and did not want it?" Will that do?

Well, Mr. President, they say it is land, and it must go into the possession of somebody. Here are the old States. I know that some of my friends from those States are voting to give away public lands, and they are giving them away by voting for propositions calculated to purchase a population for the new States. Here is Connecticut voting to give to the people of that State one hundred and sixty acres of land to get rid of them, and move them off to Nebraska and Kansas, or some other place, letting the General Government diminish the population at home thereby. All these things are now going on, and it has taken away from us every idea of diminishing the expenditures of this Government, and of diminishing the revenue of the country. There are great principles involved in this, and I am sorry to see it insinuated that feelings hostile to foreigners are controlling us. Why, sir, if you felt towards this part of the population as I do, you would not suspect it. I would uphold the principles of equality and justice to any of those who come here, and, in truth, I am so much of a Democrat, that I am a much better one than many of those who profess that creed.

Mr. CASS. That comes after reflection.

Mr. DAWSON. Why, sir, do I believe that? Because I am opposed to unnecessary special legislation—legislation for one class over the heads of another. No Government can do it and administer equality and justice at the same time. Hence the Democratic opposition to corporations. Now we have here a legislation special in its character, for the benefit of foreigners—special legislation for them—contemplating the giving of land to them, and saying to them, because you have no land we will give you some. Suppose we were to propose to pay their value to our own citizens by special legislation? Here is an antagonistic proposition. Will you give the lands, or an equivalent in their value, to the mechanics in the country, who cannot leave their present homes; or will you prefer the foreigner, who has not yet been naturalized, to the mechanic? There is the question. What public policy is it which will lead you to place an American citizen below the foreigner? Or, to use the language of the Senator from Delaware, to declare, by a special act of legislation, that one class shall be placed in a superiority in the public lands over another class? What right, Mr. President, has Congress to pass a special act? Before a citizen can occupy, under this bill, the same privileges that a foreigner can, he has to give up his native home; he has to give up the State of his birth, or he will not be entitled to the same character of legislation.

Now, sir, in conclusion—for I intend to be heard at the proper time upon the principles I have put forth in presenting my amendment—I beg to say that I am justly in favor of foreigners, who, not having a home beyond the seas, seek one in this country, and reside upon our soil as Americans; but I will not, by any act of mine, place the right of an American citizen below that of a foreigner. Let your law be general, and I will even go so far as to say that if you are determined to dispose of the public lands at one sweep, I should vote for enlarged extension; but I do not say that I would go to the extent of giving to every person described in the sixth section of this act, whether settling upon the soil or not, the same rights given to an American citizen. I would vote to strike out every part of this bill which admitted that you would place an American, who has fought the battles of the country, and helped to sustain the Government, on a level with a foreigner who has but just landed upon our shores, and is unacquainted with the institutions of our country. Having, Mr. President, thus briefly set forth the grounds which I shall hold on this subject, and they not being founded upon any sectional feeling, or upon any unkind or ungenerous feelings of opposition to foreigners, I shall content myself, for the present, with the remarks which I have submitted.

Mr. WELLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. EVANS. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion, so that I may submit a motion to make a bill a special order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such a motion as that indicated by the Senator from South Carolina cannot be entertained until this subject is disposed of.

Mr. WELLER. Then I move to postpone its further consideration until to-morrow at one o'clock.

Mr. WALKER. And that it be the special order for that hour.

Mr. WELLER. It is the special order already.

Mr. WALKER. Then it is the understanding that it will be the special order at that hour to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

REVOLUTIONARY CLAIMS.

Mr. EVANS. I move that the bill to provide for the final settlement of the claims of the officers of the Revolutionary Army, and of the widows and orphan children of those who died in the service, be made the special order for twelve o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. WELLER. I shall have to object to that. It makes the bill a special order for to-morrow. I am very anxious to get through the bill which the Senator from South Carolina so bitterly opposed this morning; therefore, I shall hardly consent that he shall indirectly accomplish his object by getting something else made a special order.

Mr. EVANS. What day will satisfy the Senator?

Mr. WELLER. If the Senator will name some day next week, I shall not object to it.

Mr. EVANS. Then I move to make it the special order for twelve o'clock on Monday next.

The motion was not agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. CASS, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 11, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

REIMBURSEMENT TO MARYLAND.

Mr. KERR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a report from the Committee on the Judiciary, in order that it may be referred and printed. It is a report upon the memorial of the special agent of the State of Maryland, asking a reimbursement of the money advanced by that State in 1792, to assist in the erection of the public buildings in this city. The report is accompanied by a bill.

No objection being made, the report was received, and the bill "for the payment to the State of Maryland of money advanced by that State, in aid of the public buildings in Washington city," was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGETOWN GAS-LIGHT COMPANY.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to enable me to report back, with an amendment, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, "a bill to incorporate the Georgetown Gas-Light Company." It is a Senate bill. Its consideration will not consume five minutes, and it is a matter of very great importance to those interested.

No objection being made, the bill was reported back.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask for the reading of the amendment, and I call the previous question upon the passage of this bill.

The amendment, which was read, provides that each of the stockholders in the Georgetown Gas-Light Company shall be held liable, in his or her individual capacity, for all the debts and liabilities of the said company, however contracted or incurred, to be recovered by suit, as other debts and liabilities, before the court, or tribunal having jurisdiction of the case.

Also, that all the rights granted to the Washington Gas-Light Company, by an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Washington Gas-Light Company,' approved July 8, 1848," approved August 2, 1853," to lay gas mains or pipes in the city of Georgetown, be repealed.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put, being upon the adoption of the amendment.

The question was put, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. DAVIS. I demand the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. SKELTON. I ask that the bill may be read through, in order that we may know what it is.

The bill was then read in extenso.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The bill was passed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and that that motion do lie upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JUAN M. AND JOSE L. LUCO.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of the bill granting lands equally to the several States to aid in the construction of railroads, and for the support of schools, on which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HILLYER. Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago I made a motion which was regularly entered to reconsider the vote by which the bill "for the relief of Juan M. Lucio and José L. Lucio" was referred to a Committee of the Whole House. My object in desiring that vote reconsidered is that the bill may be put on its passage. And I am sure that no member of the House will object to its being put on its passage immediately when I have stated the reasons which make it necessary to do so.

Mr. OLDS. Is the gentleman in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia cannot take the floor to call up his motion, unless by the consent of the gentleman from Ohio, he being regularly entitled to it.

Mr. HILLYER. I thought I was recognized by the Chair, and was in the rightful possession of the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not know what the gentleman's object was when he rose; it might have been something which was in order.

Mr. HILLYER. The gentleman from Ohio will, I am confident, yield a few moments of his time for the passage of the bill.

Mr. DISNEY. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. HILLYER. The reason which makes it necessary that the bill should be passed at this session is this: At the last Congress, a commission was created by which the title to lands in California should be adjudicated. The act under which that commission was created prescribes the day by which the titles of claimants to their land should be filed before the commission. That day has passed. The petitioners in this case claim, under one Rosas, who claimed under a grant from the Republic of Mexico. The wife of Rosas ran away from him and returned to Mexico, carrying with her the title papers. These papers have been recovered, but they were not recovered in time to file before the commission in support of the claim of the petitioners, until after the day prescribed in the act for filing the title papers before the commission had expired. The commission itself will expire on the fourth of March next. The object of this bill is simply to authorize the petitioners in this case to file their title papers before the commissioners in California to be by them adjudicated; and unless the act is passed at this time, they will lose the right to have their title adjudicated, and they will be left without remedy. This is the state of the case, and I am confident no gentleman will object to the passage of the bill.

The question was then taken on Mr. HILLYER's motion; and it was agreed to.

So the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House was reconsidered.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, and having been read the third time, it was passed.

SUPERINTENDENCY OF ARMORIES.

Mr. DICKINSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the select committee, to whom was referred the consideration of the change of the superintendency of the national armories, be authorized to visit Springfield, in Massachusetts, and Harper's Ferry, in Virginia, after the close of the present session of Congress, for the purpose of making such further examination into the subject-matter of their inquiries as they shall enable them to furnish Congress with the fullest possible information before their final action in the premises.

Mr. CURTIS. I object.

Mr. DICKINSON. I rise to a question of privilege. I wish to call the attention of the Chair and of the House to some of the rules by which this House purports to be governed. And I ask that the 26th and 27th rules may be read by the Clerk.

The rules indicated were thereupon read, as follows:

"26. All the States and Territories shall be called for resolutions on each alternate Monday during each session of Congress; and, if necessary to secure this object on said days, all resolutions which shall give rise to debate shall lie over for discussion, under the rules of the House already established, and the whole of said days shall be appropriated to resolutions until all the States and Territories are called through.

"27. After one hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees and resolves, it shall be in order, pending the consideration or discussion thereof, to entertain a motion that the House do now proceed to dispose of the business on the Speaker's table, and to the orders of the day; which being decided in the affirmative, the Speaker shall dispose of the business on his table, in the following order, viz:—"

Mr. DICKINSON. That is enough. Now, the question I raise is this: I want to inquire of the Chair whether these rules are still in force? If they are in force, I should like to inquire whether there is any time when members of this House, representing constituencies here, have a right to offer resolutions? Is there any time when any one member here who chooses to object and put a veto on the proceedings of this body, cannot prevent us, from the beginning to the end of the session, from offering resolutions, as is the case now, unless members are willing to go into a general raffle—ignoring their own self-respect—for the purpose of introducing resolutions upon Mondays?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the gentleman from Massachusetts has not, at this time, a right to introduce the resolution proposed by him, under the rules of the House, without the general consent of the body. The bill before the House now is regularly before it, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] is entitled to the floor, and the floor cannot be taken from him unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. DICKINSON. Then can I not give notice of my intention to introduce this resolution?

The SPEAKER. By the general consent of the House the gentleman can give notice of his purpose. He can also give notice under the rules, without reference to the consent of the House.

Mr. DICKINSON. I wish to give notice to the House openly that I shall move to-morrow to repeal the 137th rule of the House, which I ask that the Clerk be directed to read.

The 137th rule was read, as follows:

"Except during the last ten days of the session the Speaker shall not entertain a motion to suspend the rules of the House at any time, except on Monday of every week: provided nothing herein contained shall be construed to alter so much of the one hundred and thirty-sixth rule as provides as follows: 'The House may, at any time, by a vote of a majority of the members present, suspend the rules and orders for the purpose of going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and also for providing for the discharge of the committee from the further consideration of any bill referred to it after acting without debate on all amendments pending, and that may be offered.'"

Mr. HOUSTON. I object to the notice, unless it is in order.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. DICKINSON. I wish the objection to be noticed, so as that the name of the gentleman objecting may appear on the record.

Mr. BENNETT. I rise to a question of order. I understand the Chair to rule—

Mr. DICKINSON, (interrupting.) Can I give notice under the rule?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot thus give notice of his intention to introduce a resolution proposing to amend the rules. That notice must be given in open House. And, under the rule, it may be done by the gentleman, when his State is being called for resolutions under the rule.

Mr. DICKINSON. I find that the 136th rule of the House—

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) Does the gentleman appeal from the decision of the Chair? There is already another question of order raised.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes, sir; I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and will state the grounds of my appeal. I read in the 136th rule—and I suppose that I can understand common language—that no standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice being given of the intention to introduce a resolution for that purpose. Now, I ask to give notice of such motion in open House. That notice is decided by the Chair to be out of order. I then inquire if I can give notice at the Clerk's desk?

Mr. SPEAKER. The Chair decides that out of order.

Mr. DICKINSON. Then I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that, under the rules, it requires one day's notice before any one rule, or any of the rules of the House, can be altered or amended. The gentleman inquires of the Chair whether or not he has the right to give that notice in open House, at any time. The Chair decides that he has no such right. If, for no other reason, he has not the right now, it is very clear, because the gentleman from Ohio is upon the floor. But the gentleman has no such right, except when Massachusetts—the gentleman's own State—is called for resolutions. Such is the rule, and such is the practice of the House.

The gentleman takes an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and the question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?"

The question was then put; and it was decided in the affirmative.

DISPOSITION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BENNETT, (resuming.) I understand that the Chair decides that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] is entitled to the floor to speak upon the bill to equalize the grants of public lands among the several States, &c.

The SPEAKER. The question pending, in relation to the bill, is, shall it be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands? That question is debatable, and the gentleman from Ohio obtained the floor, and was recognized by the Chair, and he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BENNETT. My point of order is, that upon the same motion as that which is now pending, the gentleman from Ohio has already spoken twice upon the bill, occupying two hours of the time of the House, while I have occupied but one; and I do not think it is exactly fair that the gentleman should be allowed three times as much time in discussing the bill as I am permitted to occupy.

I reported the bill, and, consequently, under the rules, I had the right to close the debate. But I did not get up and obtain the floor until every gentleman who, as far as I know, chose to occupy the floor, had done so; and I did not, when I spoke, know of any other individual who wished to speak upon the question.

I refer the Chair, in support of my point of order, to the 37th and part of the 34th rule. The 37th rule declares that "no member shall speak more than once to the same question, without leave of the House, unless he be the mover, proposer, or introducer, of the matter pending; in which case he shall be permitted to speak in reply, but not until every member choosing to speak shall have spoken." The 34th rule says that "no member shall occupy more than one hour in debate on any question in the House, or in committee; but a member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close the debate," &c.

Now, the gentleman from Ohio has had two hours already, while I have had but one. I submit the point and leave it to the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The rule as read by the gentleman declares that no gentleman shall speak twice on the same proposition, except by leave of the House. The gentleman from Ohio has already spoken upon the motion to recommit. That motion was withdrawn, and was again submitted. The Chair thinks that fact will not alter the case. It is substantially the same proposition. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] objects to the gentleman from Ohio speaking twice upon the proposition.

Mr. DISNEY. I supposed the gentleman would object. It is all very natural.

Mr. BENNETT. If the gentleman wants to say anything of a personal character, I do not object; but if his object is to debate the subject over again, I do object; for I think he has had full opportunity to discuss it already.

Mr. DISNEY. I have not a very distinct recollection of the motion upon which I spoke—

Mr. COBB. I claim the floor, if the gentleman is not entitled to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to put the question to the House, as to whether the gentleman from Ohio should be allowed to proceed?

Mr. DISNEY. I was proceeding to say, that my recollection is not very distinct in relation to the circumstances under which I before spoke upon this bill; but my impression is, that I spoke upon the merits of the bill, and not upon the question of recommitment. I will not say absolutely that such was the case, but that is my impression. I think I spoke once upon it in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ORR. Has the gentleman from Ohio spoken twice upon the motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. He has spoken once, and now proposes to speak again. The Chair will state that the motion to recommit has been pending ever since the bill has been before the House, during the morning hour.

The question now being upon granting leave to Mr. DISNEY to speak again,

Mr. BENNETT demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. DISNEY. Oh, I will waive all claim to the floor.

Mr. COBB. Now, Mr. Speaker, the object I had in claiming the floor, was not to deprive the gentleman from Ohio of his privilege of speaking. I shall be very glad to hear his remarks; but I desire to make such a motion as shall get clear of this bill for the present, in some way or other. It has been before the House for a long time, and, in connection with some other propositions, has blocked all the business before us in the morning hour. Now, I ask the gentleman from New York what is his wish? If he desires to have it postponed until the third Monday in December, I have no objection; or if he wishes to put it upon its passage now, I am willing to make what remarks I shall have to submit now, and have it disposed of at once. My object is to dispose of it in some way at once.

Mr. BENNETT. My object is to have the further consideration of this bill postponed. I desire that the gentleman from Alabama, and every other gentleman who wishes to speak, shall have an opportunity. My intention now is, and if the gentleman will yield me the floor for that purpose, I will withdraw the motion to recommit, and move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the third Tuesday in December.

Mr. COBB. For the gentleman's accommodation, I will, then, make that motion myself, if he will withdraw the motion to recommit.

Mr. BENNETT. I withdraw that motion.

Mr. COBB. I move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until the third Tuesday in December next; and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I too desire to get clear of this bill; and for the purpose of accomplishing that purpose, I move to lay it upon the table.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no! do not do that.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, sir, if it is the wish of gentlemen I will withdraw the motion, and allow the bill to be postponed.

The question was then taken; and the further consideration of the bill was postponed until the third Tuesday in December next.

NEW REGISTER FOR THE BRIG AMELIA.

Mr. FENTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report back Senate bill (No. 454) "to authorize the issue of a register to the brig Amelia, by the name of Abby Frances," for the purpose of putting it upon its passage.

There was no objection, and the bill was read in extenso.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

ROADS IN WASHINGTON AND NEBRASKA.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to take from the Speaker's table a bill making appropriation for the construction of common roads in the Territories of Washington and Nebraska, in order that it may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Making appropriation of money, it must, under the rule, have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and I desire it referred to that committee, so that we may have action on it at this session of Congress.

Mr. LETCHER. Have these roads been surveyed?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Of course not, except so far as they were marked out by parties sent out by the Government during last summer.

Mr. LETCHER. Then, if they have not been surveyed and located, I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman will make no objection to the bill being sent to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. He can make his objection then.

Mr. LETCHER. So far as that is concerned, it is true what the gentleman over the way said, that the public lands take up all our time, when there are a good many other things to look to.

PUBLIC LANDS IN OREGON.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to take from the Speaker's table "An act to amend an act approved September 25, 1850, to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands in Oregon, and also the act amendatory thereof, approved February 19, 1853," in order that we may concur with the Senate in its amendment.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken up for consideration.

The amendment of the Senate was read and concurred in, as follows:

Add the following as a new section:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the Territory of Washington shall be erected into a separate surveying district. And the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint a surveyor general for the same, who shall hold his office at such place as the President may direct; and the location thereof may be changed from time to time, if, in the judgment of the President, the public interests should require it; and the powers, duties, obligations, responsibilities, and emoluments of the said surveyor general shall be the same as are now prescribed by law for the surveyor general of Oregon.

ROADS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to take from the Speaker's table "An act making further appropriations for continuing the construction of roads in the Territory of Minnesota," in accordance with the estimates made by the War Department, in order that we may concur in the amendment of the Senate.

There was no objection; and the amendment of the Senate was read and concurred in, as follows:

On page one, line nine, after the words "Lake Superior," insert the words "in Wisconsin."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back Senate bill (No. 181) for the purchase of the copy-right of the work published by Thomas H. Sumner, wherein he describes his new method of determining a ship's position at sea; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report from the Committee on Commerce a bill "to provide for the construction of certain custom-houses."

Mr. LETCHER. I object.

Mr. BRIDGES, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, reported a bill "for the relief of Isaac Adams," which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

POSTAL SERVICE IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. McDUGALL, by the unanimous consent of the House, reported back, with an amendment, a bill "making provision for the postal service in the State of California, and in the Territories of Oregon and Washington."

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the following words:

"That in consideration of the duties to be performed under the third section of this act, and of all other special duties performed, or to be performed, under the orders of the Postmaster General, the Postmaster General may increase the annual compensation of the postmaster general at San Francisco from commissions, allowances, and emoluments, from the 30th of June, 1853, to a sum not exceeding double the compensation now allowed by law: Provided, That the surplus commissions, allowances, and emoluments accruing out of his office shall be paid over, as required by the forty-first section of the act entitled an act to reduce into one, the several acts establishing and regulating the Post Office Department, approved March 3, 1825."

Mr. McDUGALL. The bill now before the House was reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, sometime since for the purpose of having it printed and re-referred. It is a bill prepared by the Post Office Department to increase the postal service in California. The difficulties under which our service labors there were set out at length by the Postmaster General, in his annual report. The greater part of the mail business in California is done by expresses, and the result is that the expenses for the transmission of letters have been very great. The subject was brought to the attention of the Department here, and after a full investigation of the subject by the Postmaster General, the plan proposed by this bill for furnishing increased postal facilities to California was adopted, which I think obviates the great expense now charged by the expresses for the transmission of letters.

The bill authorizes the employment of letter-carriers by the Department. It also provides for a dead-letter office in California, which the Postmaster General recommended in his annual report should be established there. A vast number of letters are sent to California which remain uncalled for, and it proves a heavy charge upon the Department to return these dead letters to Washington. The bill provides that the letters shall be examined at San Francisco, and such only shall be returned to Washington as it is proper should be returned. In California we have the amount of postal service that you have, but the expenses of the post offices are five times as great as the expenses of post offices are here. The result has been that nearly every postmaster in the State has to be, year by year, charged as a defaulter, and suits are now pending against several postmasters there. They became defaulters for this reason: The amount of provision made by law is not sufficient to pay the post office expenses incurred by them, much less pay compensation to the postmasters. The postmasters of California, in fact, never receive any compensation for their services in that capacity, though they are generally willing to perform such services.

The bill provides that the Postmaster General here may order the payment of all just and proper claims and charges for the expenses of post offices formed provisionally in California, as well prior to the month of June, 1853, as subsequently. A class of cases where the evil is felt is provided for by a bill which formerly passed the House, and which covers the expenses of distributing and separating offices; but it does not cover the extraordinary expenses of the other offices of the State. I would also state to the House, that this bill, as it was drawn up in the Department to meet the emergencies of the services there, has been altered in one respect. There was one feature in the bill originally which has been superseded by another. That is, it contained a provision giving extraordinary compensation to the Postmaster at San Francisco for his extraordinary services. It was known, however, that that provision might have been objectionable, and so it was stricken out. I believe that the bill, as it stands now, cannot be objected to by any member of the House. I move the previous question.

Tellers were demanded and ordered on the call for the previous question.

Mr. McDUGALL. I withdraw the call for the previous question.

Mr. HAVEN. What I intended to say to the House, Mr. Speaker, is briefly this, and I say it now, inasmuch as the House did not seem anxious to second the call for the previous question. I have looked at this bill with some little care, and I am quite willing to vote for it. In my judgment it is wise on the part of my friend from California [Mr. McDUGALL] to strike out the fourth section. That section simply provides for an increase of the pay to double what it now is, of the postmaster at San Francisco. I could not have quite seen my way clear to vote for that. As to the residue of the bill, the first section of it provides for giving power to the special agent of the Post Office Department in California, Oregon, and Washington, to appoint carriers for the delivery of letters from any post office on the Pacific coast. If the House bear with me, I will say to them that I have examined that part of the bill, and find that it is, in my judgment, in every respect, fair. The same power precisely—that of appointing letter carriers there, is now vested in some officer of the Post Office Department, (which I do not recollect this moment,) subject to appeal to the Postmaster General. And the variation or difference between the existing law and this first section of the bill consists in this: This first section proposes to allow the letter-carriers in California, and the Territories of Oregon and Washington, to be appointed by the special agents of the Post Office Department to demand and receive for carrying letters a sum not to exceed fifty cents for any letter, newspaper, or ounce of other mailable matter, while the present law restricts the amount to be charged by them to five cents. This is a very large increase, but still it may not go up to that sum. It is within the competency and discretion of the persons holding the power of appointment of these carriers to make an arrangement to carry at as low a sum as they please; they are only prohibited by this section against giving more than the fifty cents, as I have stated.

Sir, this service by these carriers is a very desirable service for the Pacific coast, and seems to be almost indispensable in the present condition of the country, and the post office and mail-carrying facilities there. Why not allow the post office department there to regulate this matter according to the interest of the citizens resident on that coast?

The propriety of the measure will appear upon a moment's reflection. The miners living in the remote mining districts and villages, and other citizens there—so remote that they can get no mail service—club together, and give some proper man a written power to receive their letters from the postmaster at San Francisco or Sacramento. Armed with this power the man goes, sometimes hundreds of miles, gets his letters, and carries them to his employers, and is usually authorized to receive such a sum as his employers agree to give. It is a kind of self-government—a provision for their own wants, where this Government cannot relieve them; and it seems to me eminently proper. I, for one, am willing to accommodate my brethren on the Pacific in this way.

Sir, it is a matter in which we upon the Atlantic slope have no interest whatever, and it comes recommended by both the members from California; and I am informed by one of the Delegates from the Pacific Territories, [General LANE,] that it meets with his unqualified approbation. We can have no objection to it, as we have no interest in it, and it is no charge upon the Treasury; on the contrary, it is giving our friends on the Pacific coast some facilities which it might be said the Treasury ought to pay for. These gentlemen understand their own interests best, and what will enhance them. It is their citizens, and their citizens alone, who are to be affected by this measure; and I can easily perceive that, as these letters and papers, in most instances, are to go into the mountain villages, remote from San Francisco and Sacramento, there is a propriety in allowing the proper officers charged with that duty by this section, the power to allow the carrier to charge, not exceeding the compensation which is here proposed, to the person who authorizes him to receive the letters for him, as I have stated. The matter is discretionary; and as the members and Delegates from the Pacific coast are in favor of it, I am not willing to meddle with their well matured desires, when it affects their constituency alone. Sir, the remaining part of this first section, and all of the next section, provides that these carriers shall be subject to the provisions of certain acts heretofore passed, and now in force, and named in this first and second section. All there is in that, as I understand it, is that it makes certain penal laws, which are applicable to mail carriers generally, and to mail routes, applicable to those men who carry letters under the provisions of this bill. It is proper that they should be so applied. It will be a wholesome restriction and guard thrown around them, and secure the safety as is secured in the regular mail service.

The next section, being the third one, provides for the burning or destruction of dead letters at San Francisco, instead of sending them over here for that purpose. Can any man in his senses tell me any good reason why those letters should be transported down the coast to the Isthmus, and then carted across the Isthmus to Chagres, at a rate of twenty-four cents a pound, and thence transported here for the simple purpose of reducing them to ashes in the back yard of the Post Office Department? The section is properly guarded, by providing that a certain class of letters—being those having valuable inclosures—shall be sent here to the General Post Office Department, as under the present law, but that the mere waste paper shall be burned there, as it ought to be.

In reference to the rate of pay of the postmaster at San Francisco, provided by section four, I have nothing to say in addition to what I have said already. The gentleman having charge of the bill proposes to strike it out. I think it a discreet motion, and made with a proper appreciation of the apparent present temper of the House. I cannot vote for the bill if the section remains in it. The last section is in reference to the settlement of the accounts of the postmasters in the State of California and the Territory of Oregon, serving as such, previous to June 30, 1853. It provides, in substance, that the Postmaster General may allow to such postmasters all just and reasonable expenses incurred by them in and about the business of their respective offices, and the discharge of their official duties, but that in no case shall any allowance be made whereby the United States shall be charged with any indebtedness whatever.

The Postmaster General may exercise his discretion in the premises, but is not to do what shall charge the United States with an indebtedness. I am willing to vote for that, I think, although I do not understand this last section, by any means, as clearly as I do the previous part of the bill—but the Post Office Committee recommend it. I have said all I desire to say to the House. I think we had better not make a long matter of this bill at this late day. I think we ought to accommodate the gentlemen from the Pacific coast in what they unanimously ask, and what does not injure us, and to get along with the business as rapidly as possible. And, now, sir, if it is agreeable to the House, I will move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be now put.

The question was taken upon the amendment; and it was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Mr. OLDS, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a bill to amend an act, entitled "An act to amend an act, entitled an act to reduce and modify the rates of postages in the United States," passed August 30, 1852; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. OLDS. This bill proposes merely to do away with the discount of fifty per cent on prepayment, which is provided for under the act of 1852.

Mr. Speaker, I discussed this question so fully when another bill was before the House the other day, that I do not deem it important to say much in relation to it now. It will be recollected that, under the act of 1845, newspapers carried outside of the State in which they were published were charged a cent and a half postage upon each number. In 1851 a reduction of this rate of postage was made, but under such a system as to provide for some seventy-two different rates of postage. In 1852, in order to do away with this diversity in the rates of postage, a new law was passed making the rate of postage upon newspapers carried outside of the State in which they were published one cent for each number not weighing more than three ounces. It so happened that while that amendment was pending in this House or in the Senate, I do not recollect which, an amendment was offered and passed providing a reduction of fifty per cent. upon this rate, in case the postage was paid quarterly in advance, either at the office of publication or at the office of delivery.

It will also be recollected that it had been the uniform custom of the Department to require the payment of postage quarterly in advance upon newspapers and periodicals. That was the regulation under the law of 1845, and also under that of 1851. But when this amendment was introduced in 1852, it escaped the attention of Congress that in adopting it they were legislating into that bill what was already a regulation of the Department; and in consequence of legislating this provision into the bill, they made a reduction of fifty per cent. on the rate of postage on newspapers and periodicals.

I do not charge any intention of wrong on the Congress of the United States in the passage of the law of 1852, or on the author of that amendment; but it certainly was a fraud on the revenues of the Department. But it was not a new provision. You had already made a requirement of the prepayment of postage quarterly. Then why was it put in? What was the object to be subserved? Was one cent each too much for the Department to charge for the transportation of newspapers in the United States? For instance, from New York to San Francisco, in California, or from New Orleans to New York? It should be recollected that one half went to the postmaster, and the Government only received one half cent for the transportation of a newspaper weighing three ounces, that distance. Why, then, I repeat, was this deduction of fifty per cent. made, which reduces the compensation of the Department to a quarter of a cent, after taking out the commission on the postage? It reduced the pay of the Government to a quarter of a cent for carrying a newspaper, weighing three ounces, from New York to New Orleans, or from New York to San Francisco, while, at the same time, we paid one cent and a half per ounce for the transportation of that paper across the Isthmus alone. Will anybody for a moment contend that a quarter of a cent will reimburse the Government its expense for transportation? If you desire to make the Post Office Department a self-sustaining one; that everything passing through the mails shall pay the cost of transportation, then why, and for what reason, do you make this great distinction in favor of newspapers and periodicals? You can hardly sustain the Department, indeed you cannot sustain it, by charging the three cents postage on a letter weighing half an ounce. Then why only charge one quarter cent postage on a newspaper weighing three ounces?

The present rate is one cent for the transportation of newspapers and periodicals anywhere in the United States outside of the State where published, and weighing not less than three ounces. If, then, you repeal what is proposed by the bill under consideration, you will make the law just what it is on its face, one cent postage for the transportation of newspapers and periodicals anywhere in the United States. All we desire is to do away with the fifty per cent. discount, which was put into the law as a proviso for prepayment of postage, while, in fact, it always was a prepayment, and must necessarily always be a prepayment.

Sir, I am somewhat astonished to see a portion even of the country press warring against this provision. The gentlemen representing the cities of Philadelphia and New York, and more especially the astute gentleman representing the city of Philadelphia, [Mr. CHANDLER,] understand full well that this proviso of the law of 1852 is a bonus to the city, and against the country press. You suffer your country newspapers to circulate free of postage in the county where published; but when you make this reduction of fifty per cent. in favor of the city press, you enable that press to supplant that of the country even in their own county.

Now, I would not so much object if the city press paid what it absolutely cost the Government for transportation. If we were not at a loss to transport the city papers to the country, I would not so much object to the fifty per cent. reduction. But you are now carrying the city papers at one half the cost of transportation; and why should this bonus be given to them?

Mr. WALSH. I wish to ask my friend from Ohio whether it would be any detriment to the country towns to have the fifty cent pieces prohibited, and a large introduction of ten dollar gold pieces?

Mr. OLDS. I move to recommit the bill, so that it may be kept before the House. I am anxious to reply to the inquiry proposed by the gentleman from New York. Perhaps that fifty cent piece may seem as large to the countryman as the ten or twenty dollar piece of my friend from New York.

Mr. WALSH. Are there any countrymen in your district in Ohio so verdant as that? [Laughter.]

Mr. OLDS. I should consider one of my constituents very green who should put as high value upon a fifty cent piece as one of the New Yorkers. While a New Yorker would perhaps pay five or ten dollars for a dinner at Delmonico's, you cannot find one of my constituents who would be verdant enough to pay more than fifty cents.

Mr. WALSH. That is dodging the question. I was not speaking of the relative value set upon money in the country and in the city.

Mr. OLDS. If the gentleman intends to make a comparison by considering the city press as worth ten dollars, while he would put the country press at fifty cents, I will take issue with him directly. I would rather have one of your fifty cent country presses, speaking the honest sentiments of the country, where public sentiment ought to originate, than to have your ten dollar Tribune, and papers of that class, to circulate all over the country at the expense of the Government, for the purpose of creating public sentiment for the country press.

Mr. WALSH. The Tribune produces no effect whatever in the city of New York. It only affects country people. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Ohio is evidently speaking for his constituents.

Mr. OLDS. Then my argument is legitimate. It is for the country I am speaking, and not for the city. It is to protect the country against the baleful influence of that ten dollar paper of New York, that looks as big as an eagle in the eyes of the gentleman from New York, that I speak upon this occasion. I should have no fear for the intelligence of the people. I am not afraid of the effect the Tribune, Herald, Express, or any of the city papers, will produce in my district; but I do not want they should have the advantage of sending and circulating their papers in the country districts at the expense of the Government for one fourth of what it costs the Government to take them there.

Mr. WALSH. Judging from the result in Ohio, I should say that the Tribune produced more effect in Ohio than in New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLDS. Well, sir, I do not know. The Tribune does not circulate any more in Ohio this year than it did last year; and at our last gubernatorial election the Democratic ticket received a majority of seventy thousand. Where was New York at her last gubernatorial election?

Mr. WHEELER. Is the gentleman from Ohio in order in alluding to the merits or demerits of a single press.

Mr. WALSH. My friend from New York is perhaps sensitive.

Mr. WHEELER. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. OLDS. I did not rise to discuss the merits or demerits of the city press. My friend from New York instituted the comparison.

Mr. WALSH. My friend from New York [Mr. WHEELER] is a little sensitive about this matter, as the Tribune advocates his reelection. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move, then, that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield the floor for that purpose?

Mr. OLDS. I do.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I desire to submit a motion which, I suppose, takes precedence of the motion submitted by the gentleman from Alabama; and that is, to proceed to business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—the gentleman from Alabama having obtained the floor for that purpose—is first in order.

Mr. DAVIS. If I remember correctly, the Speaker decided differently upon a former occasion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is mistaken. It is true that there are a number of highly privileged motions recognized by the rules. The gentleman from Ohio having the floor, and being engaged in speaking during the morning hour, and the morning hour having expired, under the rules he can be arrested by a motion to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table. But there is another rule which declares that a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, shall always be in order. Now, to make these rules as consistent with each other as possible, the practice of the House has been, that when the gentleman speaking is arrested by this motion to go to the business on the Speaker's table, the other motion may be made by any gentleman who can obtain the floor. And this latter motion takes precedence of the one to go to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. DAVIS. I submit to the ruling of the Chair, and I ask the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw his motion for a moment, in order to enable me to submit one to go to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOUSTON. Several gentlemen around me say they will renew the motion if I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The majority of the House, in this case, can determine, and do what they like in relation to these several matters.

Mr. ORR. Before the question is put, I ask the unanimous consent of the House—at the instance of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. DENT,] who has been called away by indisposition—to enable me to withdraw certain papers, that they may be referred to the War Department.

General consent having been expressed, it was, on motion by Mr. ORR, Ordered, That the papers on the files of the House in the case of Captain Jerry Runnels be withdrawn, for the purpose of reference to the War Department.

On motion by Mr. NICHOLS, it was Ordered, That the papers on the files of the House in the case of James Pool be withdrawn, for the purpose of reference to one of the State courts of Ohio, in a case to be litigated there.

On motion by Mr. MAXWELL, it was Ordered, That the papers on the files of the House in the case of Elliott Smith and Nathan Farnsworth be withdrawn, for the purpose of being referred to the appropriate committee of the Senate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether, if the House vote down the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it will not be then in order to go to the business on the Speaker's table, with a view to refer the bills that are there?

The SPEAKER. Certainly; it will be in order.

The question was then taken on Mr. Houston's motion; and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. McMULLIN in the chair.)

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the Committee to take up House bill No. 336. It is a bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department. And I suppose that on its being read through, the committee will agree to lay it aside for the purpose of reporting it to the House. It is a bill to which I think there will be no amendments proposed. It is a short bill, and will not probably take more than five or six minutes to dispose of it.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Why not take up the business in its order upon the Calendar? I hope it will be done. The next bill is one making appropriation for the support of the Army.

Mr. HOUSTON. I propose to take that up next. It will not take ten minutes to dispose of this matter.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I give notice that if the motion of the gentleman from Alabama shall be voted down, I shall move to take up the general appropriation bill, (No. 392,) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law; and gentlemen in favor of completing these works will vote down the proposition of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. ROBBINS demanded tellers on Mr. Houston's motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS, of Alabama, and Cox, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 82.

So the motion was not agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I now move to take up general appropriation bill, (No. 392,) "making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law."

Mr. MILLSON. I can never agree to the proposition that a bill making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors is a general appropriation bill. I therefore raise the question of order, that this not being an appropriation bill, it can only be reached by laying aside, by a separate and distinct vote, every bill upon the Calendar preceding it.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I will make a single suggestion to the Chair, if he will allow me. It has been customary to consider bills of this character as general appropriation bills. It is to carry out and to complete public works already authorized by law. There are no provisions for the commencement of new works.

Mr. MILLSON. My understanding of general appropriation bills is, that they are such, and only such, as are necessary to carry on the various departments of the Government. This is not a bill of that character, and, therefore, it is not a general appropriation bill.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to call the attention of the Chair and of the committee to the 79th and 80th rules, which have always been considered to govern the consideration of general appropriation bills. The 79th rule enumerates the bills which are to be considered as general appropriation bills. They are for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government; for the Army; for the Navy; and for the Indian department and Indian annuities." This requires that the Committee of Ways and Means shall report these bills within thirty days of the time when that committee is appointed, and then distinctly enumerates what those bills shall be. I therefore submit, that if this bill is not embraced in that category, it is not a general appropriation bill, and cannot be so considered by the committee.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I will inquire of the gentleman whether the Post Office appropriation bill, the Indian appropriation bill, and the fortification bill, are enumerated in that rule, and whether the gentleman will contend that they are not general appropriation bills?

Mr. PHELPS. The Indian bill is enumerated there.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I would like to have the 80th rule read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the rule, and then he will decide the point of order.

The rule was read, as follows:

"80. General appropriation bills shall be in order in preference to any other bills of a public nature, unless otherwise ordered by a majority of the House."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides in this case that the bill which is now before the House is a general appropriation bill, according to the course which has heretofore been adhered to in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. If it were for appropriation of money to any particular river, it certainly would not be a general appropriation bill. As the Chair understands, the bill is general in its character, and makes appropriations for the continuation and completion of works already commenced. The Chair will further remark, that the post office bill is an appropriation bill, although not mentioned in the rule to which attention has been called. The Chair decides the motion of the gentleman from Illinois in order.

Mr. MILLSON. Holding a different opinion, I appeal from the decision of the Chair; and on that question demand tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was taken on the appeal, viz: "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I now ask the unanimous consent of the committee to substitute for the bill before us the one which I hold in my hand, out of which is left the appropriation for the removal of the obstruction in the mouth of the Cape Fear river, passed yesterday. I make the motion to save time.

Mr. WALSH. This is out of order, and, rising in my place, I object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition of the gentleman from Illinois is objected to by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir, most unequivocally. [Laughter.]

The question was then taken on Mr. WENTWORTH's motion; and it was agreed to.

So the river and harbor bill was taken up for consideration.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move to dispense with the first reading of the bill, which is for information, and that the Clerk proceed to read it for amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk accordingly proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs, for amendment.

Mr. COBB. I offer the following amendment:

At the end of the clause, "for continuing the improvement of the navigation of the Tennessee river, $35,000," insert the following:

Provided, That $10,000 of said sum shall be expended below Kelly's ferry, in the State of Tennessee, and above Decatur, Alabama.

The object of the amendment will be apparent to every gentleman. At the last session of Congress $250,000 was appropriated for the improvement of the Tennessee river, and an appropriation of $35,000 is now asked to continue the improvement already commenced. I propose now to apply $10,000 of this amount to the improvement of the river below Kelly's ferry. The mails are carried in steamboats on the Tennessee river from Chattanooga to Decatur, but there are obstructions in that river below Kelly's ferry that render it almost impossible for the boats to pass. I am confident that there cannot be any objection to the amendment I have offered, for it only asks that $10,000 of the $35,000 appropriated by the clause for the improvement of the river shall be appropriated below Kelly's ferry, so that the obstructions in the river which now sometimes obstruct the passage of the mails may be removed. I could give various reasons showing the necessity that exists for the adoption of the amendment, but I will not trouble the committee now.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I wish to make a few general remarks in answer to the gentleman from Alabama, because there are several applications of the kind made by him. Allow me to say that the custom is, after these general appropriations are passed, for members of Congress from the States in whose favor they are made, to go to the Secretary of War, and his chief engineer, who has full discretion over this subject, in order to know where the appropriations shall be expended to the greatest advantage. Fortunately for us at this time, we have at the head of the War Department one of the most distinguished engineers in the United States. Long before I knew him as a politician I knew him as a distinguished engineer upon our lakes and rivers at the great Northwest. When he was here as a member of Congress, he displayed more knowledge upon the subject than any public man. I think it is better to leave this matter to the Secretary of War and the engineers, who understand it, than to members of Congress.

Mr. COBB. If the gentleman from Illinois will look at the wording of this appropriation, he will see that it is for a continuation of the improvement. Of what improvement? Of the one commenced and carried on under the appropriation of $50,000. Does he not see clearly that, without some proviso of this kind, the Secretary of War will be bound to lay out the $30,000 in the same place in which the $50,000 was expended? He must certainly see that that is the construction that would be put upon it unless this provision is inserted.

Mr. WENTWORTH. The gentleman from Alabama will allow me to say that there are precedents for the regulation of this case.

Mr. COBB. But what harm can be done in making the matter so plain that no difficulty can arise about it? What harm can result from making it so plain that there will be no necessity to go to the War Department in order to have it construed according to the conception we have put upon it? I am sure that no gentleman in the House, not even the gentleman from Tennessee, who has as much interest in it as anybody else, can object to this.

I will state this, further, that during the time that this bill was under consideration, I repeatedly called on the Committee on Commerce, who had charge of it, and they assured me, that before they would report any appropriation in respect to the Tennessee river, I should be called upon by them to give my reasons why a small appropriation should be given for the purpose of carrying out the object which I am now in favor of. But I suppose they overlooked the promises they had made to me. I called on them three or four times, and they assured me that I should be notified to come and explain my reasons for what I desired. But, unfortunately, my modesty being so great as to forbid me pressing myself upon them, the first intimation that I had with respect to the matter was the reporting of the bill appropriating $35,000 without stating anything, except that it was for the continuation of the improvement. I have no more interest in it than every man of the West has. But unless some portion of the money is expended in the manner I designate, there are seasons during the year when the boats cannot get along there, and when there will be serious obstacles to the expeditious carrying of the great western mail. But with a little labor, and the expenditure of some money, these obstacles will be removed, and the mail can be received regularly.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I would ask the gentleman from Alabama whether, in the appropriation of last year, there was any limitation of the work? Did it embrace the whole river, or was it limited to a portion of it?

Mr. COBB. The limitation was, that the appropriation should be expended above Kelley's ferry. And what I contend for now, is, that a portion of it should be expended below Kelley's ferry.

Mr. HOUSTON. I propose—if my colleague will allow me—to offer an amendment which, I presume, will meet the approbation of gentlemen on all sides. It is as follows:

Provided, That such part of said sum shall be expended below Kelley's ferry, on said river, as the Secretary of War may direct.

Mr. COBB. I have no objection to that, because the Secretary of War will perceive the necessity of appropriating a portion of the sum to that part of the river.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think that there ought to be more than $10,000 given for that purpose; and I think the Secretary of War will give more.

Mr. COBB. I withdraw my amendment, with the view of letting that of my colleague [Mr. Houston] be voted on, with the understanding, however, that I originated the proposition. [A laugh.]

Mr. WENTWORTH. I have no objection to the amendment as modified.

Mr. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania. I supposed that the bill was being read through, and was not aware that it was being read by sections, for the purpose of amendment. I have an amendment which I desire to introduce at the end of the twenty-fourth line, and I ask now to present it.

Mr. COBB. This one comes in first.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania can only be granted by unanimous consent.

Mr. RITCHIE. Well, I ask the consent of the committee for that purpose. I was entirely unaware that the bill was being read through by sections, for the purpose of amendment, and therefore did not offer my amendment at the place where I desire it to come in.

Mr. WALSH. I object, unless I can understand how the matter is; and I do not.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. The Chair had better dispose of the other question first.

The question was taken on Mr. Houston's amendment; and it was agreed to.

Mr. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania. I ask the consent of the committee to allow me now to present my amendment, as there was so much noise in the Hall that I did not hear the part of the bill read to which I designed to offer the amendment.

No objection being made, the amendment was reported, as follows:

Line twenty-fourth strike out "$90,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$190,000, $100,000 of said sum to be expended in the improvement of the said river above the falls."

Mr. RITCHIE. I wish to state, briefly, the reasons why I ask to increase the appropriation for the improvement of the Ohio river from $90,000 to $190,000, $100,000 of which is to be expended for the improvement of the navigation of that river above the falls of the Ohio.

For some years past the appropriations which have been made for that purpose have been expended upon that part of the river between the falls of the Ohio and the mouth of the river, particularly about the Cumberland dam; and during that period obstructions have been accumulating in the river above the falls, and they should be removed. Shoals have accumulated from the floods, and they require removal.

I have a letter in my hand from Mr. Crawford, who is the inspector of steamboats, under the law of the United States, and who has in charge the matter of the safety of navigation generally of steamboats upon the western waters, in which he states that from ninety to one hundred thousand dollars will be necessary to clean out the Ohio river above the falls. This gentleman is better acquainted with the channel of the Ohio river than any other man. He is in continual communication with those who transact business on that river, and with the pilots and captains who are constantly navigating it; and he is better acquainted with the wants of the river than any other man.

He says in this letter:

"My impression is, that the $90,000 proposed by this bill to be appropriated for the Ohio river, would all be expended about the Cumberland dam, and other places below the falls, in about the same way that the last appropriation was spent, and that the river above the falls would receive but little benefit from it. I should think there ought to be not less than ninety or one hundred thousand dollars appropriated for the river above the falls. My opinion is, that it will require that amount to repair the dams, remove snags, and clear out channels. Some of the places are very bad, and it is not an uncommon thing to see fifteen or twenty steamers detained and sticking fast at a single snare or dam."

I wrote to him in reference to this matter as soon as the bill was reported by the committee, and printed, and this is the reply I received; and it is in pursuance of that reply that I offer the amendment.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. In justice to the friends of this bill, who assisted us in taking it up this morning, I think the friends of the bill ought to drive it ahead as fast as we can, yet doing nothing to obstruct debate on the part of those who are opposed to it.

In reference to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, there is not a solitary gentleman upon this floor who cannot rise and show to his friends reasons why a certain and specific appropriation should not be increased. But, in framing bills of this kind we must have landmarks; we must have some basis to stand upon, and it is no good reason that, because we have the estimates of the engineer of the Government, we may introduce the estimates of other engineers, not in the employ of the Government, in regard to the same work.

I know the fact that the Secretary of War is not over and above friendly to these works, and that he has constitutional scruples as to the power to carry them on. Therefore, when he comes forward and makes these estimates, I know that they are the estimates of a safe engineer; and I think the best course we can pursue is to follow the estimates of this engineer throughout, and adhere to them. Besides, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has not shown to the committee any good reason why we should not follow the estimates of the engineer. I do hope that our friends will stand by these estimates; for if we break away from them, there is no telling where we shall land.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to amend the amendment by increasing it five dollars. I am surprised at the position which has been assumed by the honorable gentleman from Illinois, who represents the Committee on Commerce, in reference to this bill. I understand him, in substance, to say that we are sent here merely to follow in the wake, in the track of the War Department, and to act only upon the estimates sent here from that Department.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I suppose if the gentleman from Ohio were a railroad contractor, and sent his engineer to examine a work, and to make estimates in relation to it, that he would be very likely to follow those estimates.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If I were a railroad contractor, and had sent an engineer to look at a particular line of railroad; if I were conversant with that line myself; if I knew there was a mountain which needed to be tunneled, in order that we might have facilities for transportation; and if I found that the estimates of the engineer made no provision for tunneling that mountain, I should be very likely not to follow them. I should make my own calculations for having the work done, and should conduct my operations accordingly.

Now, sir, what are the facts stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania? He has read a letter from a gentleman who is well acquainted with all the circumstances connected with the wants of the rivers for which he asks an appropriation. But we are not to heed such representations; and why? An engineer has been sent by the Department to ascertain what appropriations are needed. He has visited the Ohio at a particular stage of water, and reported accordingly, knowing but little of the difficulties which obstruct the immense commerce upon the upper Ohio at other seasons of the year. Such has been the course of the Government heretofore. Engineers have been sent to visit the river at particular seasons of the year, and thousands, tens of thousands, yes, sir, hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of commerce have been obstructed in consequence of the neglect of the Government to make the necessary improvements. The Government have neglected to make these improvements, because the engineer has not done his duty in making the examinations upon which his estimates were to be based at the proper time. Does not the honorable gentleman from Illinois know very well the extent of the commerce upon that river? Does he not know that appropriations of money are absolutely necessary for the improvement of the navigation of the upper Ohio? And yet there is not one dollar appropriated by the bill which he has reported from the Committee on Commerce.

Sir, I wish to set the seal of my disapprobation upon this system of passing laws in this House, based exclusively upon the information which we get from the Departments. I hope the Representatives upon this floor, coming from the interior of the country, who know better from actual observation what are the wants of commerce in the regions of country from which they come, than any of those engineers, will not adhere to these estimates from the Department, but will vote for furnishing the proper facilities for commerce without reference to them.

I did not propose to say anything upon this subject. But, sir, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is so just that I felt some surprise that the gentleman from Illinois should have thrown any obstacles in the way. If there is any stream in the whole valley of the Mississippi which has a just demand on Congress at this time, it is the Ohio river above the falls; and as there is no provision for it in the bill before us, I hope the committee will adopt the amendment submitted by the honorable member from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Chairman, I fully concur in the remarks uttered by the gentleman from Ohio, in support of the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. There are provisions made in this bill for expenditures on the Ohio river, without directing the appropriations to any particular locality, and it is probable that most, if not all, of the money would be applied for ameliorating the navigation below the falls, while there is no guarantee that any of the appropriations would be used for the upper Ohio.

I would remark, for the information of the members of the House who are not familiar with the topography and commerce of the western rivers, that the first great interruption in the navigation of the Ohio, occurs at the falls at the city of Louisville, where the river descends twenty-five or thirty feet in two or three miles, creating rapids that are impassable at low or ordinary stages of the water.

This impediment separates the navigation of the Ohio into two sections, each of which requires a different class of vessels; the boats plying between Louisville and Pittsburg are smaller and of lighter draught than those employed between Louisville and New Orleans. The obstacle at Louisville is partially overcome by a canal, where boats are to pass through its locks; but a large part of the cargoes are transhipped and carried in drays around the falls. The States of Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi, Tennessee, and those bordering on the western tributaries of the Mississippi, have the vessels almost exclusively employed below Louisville, while the States of Ohio, Indiana, Virginia, and Pennsylvania, have their boats engaged in the commerce of the upper Ohio. I have not the statistics at hand, but I feel confident that the trade between Louisville and Pittsburg, including the commerce of Cincinnati, Wheeling, Madison, and the country bordering on the Ohio, must exceed a hundred millions a year. Any one who has traveled upon the river can appreciate the magnitude of the trade, and cannot fail to have observed the delays and difficulties it encounters from sand bars and shallows in the channel, which might very readily be removed. Boats are frequently delayed, and cluster idly at Buffington bar, Blannerhasset's Island, and other points, where a little expenditure would remove every difficulty.

For these reasons, and, as I have been informed by competent engineers, that the past appropriations for the Ohio have been entirely inadequate, I think we should grant the appropriation embraced in the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Ritchie,] and improve the upper Ohio so as to afford proper commercial facilities to the States upon its shores.

I will not protract these remarks; but before I take my seat it is my intention to move an amendment to appropriate a sum not exceeding $25,000, for the purpose of making the Louisville and Portland canal free to navigation and commerce. In this connection I desire to explain the circumstances attending the amendment, and which may influence the House to adopt it.

In the course of the ensuing year the Government of the United States will be the sole owner of all of the stock and property of the Louisville and Portland canal; and it is absolutely necessary to make some provision for the appointment of the necessary officers to take charge of and control and manage it. In 1825 the Legislature of Kentucky granted a charter to the Louisville and Portland Canal Company, and, in order to facilitate the work, Congress several years afterwards subscribed two thousand three hundred and thirty-five shares, which individual owners of stock forfeited from apprehensions of the failure of the work. The work itself cost about $1,000,000, and its capital stock is composed of ten thousand shares, of which the Government owned at the annual report made on the first of January, 1854, nine thousand eight hundred shares. Anterior to the year 1842, the Government had actually paid out $233,500 for the stock she subscribed, and had received in tolls $257,778, as a stockholder, which was paid into the Treasury of the United States.

In 1842, an act was passed by the Legislature of Kentucky authorizing the Government of the United States to become the sole owner of the stock, by applying the dividends on her stock to absorbing and buying up the private stock in the canal, with a view of making the same free. This process has been in operation ever since that time; and before the meeting of the next Congress the United States will be the sole owner of the canal. She will be the proprietor of a property worth more than a million and a half of dollars, which never cost her one dollar. The immense burdens which have been imposed upon western commerce, will be understood from the simple fact that having advanced $233,500 in 1829 or 1830, she has not only received back from the tolls—or I should rather call them fines —on western trade, all, and more than all, she ever paid, but with the remainder owns a property which produced, last year, $178,869 39, by an exaction levied on the trade of the Ohio and the West.

From 1831 to 1853, the commercial and navigating interests of the West have been subjected to enormous tribute by direct tolls at that canal, amounting to $2,699,032 20, and boats carrying five hundred tons passing through it, and paying the established rate of fifty cents a ton, are compelled to pay $250 a trip for the privilege of transit. This is a matter of national, and not of merely local interest—a matter in which every State that borders upon the river Ohio or the affluents of the Mississippi, are interested; and although some have represented that the break of gauge made by nature at Louisville, might render her people and her Representatives disinclined to remove the barrier to the river trade, yet I desire to acquit her citizens, as well as myself, of such suspicions, and to say that we desire, in common with our other fellow-citizens of the West, the free, uninterrupted, and untaxed navigation of the Ohio.

It is our duty, Mr. Chairman, before this session terminates, to make proper provision for the custody and management of the canal, so that it may not fall into decay or bad repair; or by a neglect to appoint the requisite officers, obstruct the navigation of the river. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his annual report, suggests the necessity of passing a law for this purpose. He says:

"Attention is called to the Louisville and Portland canal. The ten thousand shares of capital stock in that company, under the provisions of the act of the Legislature of Kentucky, have been reduced to three thousand seven hundred and twelve, of which two thousand nine hundred and two belong to the United States, and eight hundred and ten to individuals. These eight hundred and ten shares will be reduced by the earnings of the canal for the year 1853, of which the company will furnish a report, and the earnings of 1854 will complete the purchase, and leave the United States the sole stockholder and proprietor of the canal, and entitled to possession of it on complying with the condition of the act of Kentucky under which the private stock has been purchased. That condition requires that no more tolls shall be collected than will be sufficient to keep the canal in repair, pay the necessary cost of superintendence and custody, and make all the improvements needed, fully to answer the purpose of its establishment, and to protect and guard the interests of commerce. An appropriate act is wanted at the present session, to provide for the superintendence of the canal and the carrying out of the provisions of the act of the Legislature of Kentucky, in order to make the canal free, as far as practicable, to the commerce of the Ohio."

Now, sir, it will be seen by the facts stated that this provision should be made; and I will now ask, if it be in order, that the amendment I propose to offer to that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITCHIE] shall be read.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order.

Mr. PRESTON. Then I send it to the Clerk's desk to be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is just now informed by the Clerk that there is already an amendment to the amendment pending.

Mr. PRESTON. Then I will offer it hereafter, if there is an amendment to the amendment pending.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If there is no objection, I will withdraw my amendment.

There being no objection, the amendment to the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. PRESTON. I now offer my amendment.

The amendment was reported, as follows:

For defraying the necessary expenses of the custody, control, and management of the Louisville and Portland canal, so as to make the Ohio river free to navigation, $25,000.

Mr. PRESTON. The adoption of this amendment, and the appropriation of the $25,000 for which it asks, will make the navigation of the Ohio free. This sum will be sufficient, as shown by the experience of the past, to pay for all the labor necessary in opening and closing the locks of the canal, and for dredging it, and keeping it in order. No toll, charge, or tribute can be exacted on the Ohio. It will be perfectly free from Pittsburg to New Orleans to every boat and vessel. I trust, sir, that every Representative from every State in the valley of the Mississippi will appreciate the importance of abolishing the onerous tax of $180,000 a year, to which we have been so long and unjustly subjected; and I do not conceive that any right-minded man will consider this appropriation unnecessary or unwise. Last year the expenses of its administration were $21,569, and, with some incidental expenses, between $24,000 and $25,000.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question, in order that the committee may understand the position of the Government in reference to this matter. I ask him whether the United States Government, by this indirect mode, do not impose a tax upon the people of the twelve States of the Union which are interested in the navigation of the Ohio?

Mr. PRESTON. I will answer the gentleman, that the Government of the United States now own about ninety-eight hundredths, or more than nine tenths of this canal. Out of ten thousand shares, the Government is the owner of nine thousand eight hundred.

Now, sir, the people of the West, during the last year, paid $178 869 39 tax for the privilege of passing this barrier to the navigation of the Ohio. Under the existing arrangement, the Government is the tax-gatherer, the Government compels the people of the West to pay this amount of taxes; and the sum of $25,000 a year would make the canal free to the navigation of twelve or thirteen western States.

Sir, no gentleman need vote against this appropriation, however constitutional his views on such matters may be. No such question can be raised. There is no objection that can be offered to this amendment which cannot be brought against the appropriation which has annually been made for the bridge across the Potomac at this place ever since that bridge has been in the possession of the Government. It is for nothing more than to defray the expenses of opening the gates of the canal, and to allow boats to pass through free of toll. It is for removing obstructions in the navigation of the Ohio in the management of the United States precisely as we provide for opening the draw of the Long Bridge to remove the obstruction to the navigation of the Potomac. The appropriation for which we ask is to open and close the locks in the canal, to keep a dredge boat, and to dredge the canal.

A MEMBER. Is not the appropriation to purchase the private stock still remaining in the canal?

Mr. PRESTON. Not one dollar of it. The private stock has been purchased, or will be before Congress meets again. The Government owns the work. It is the property of the United States, and I propose simply to abolish the tolls, and defray the expenses of its superintendence and control. In this I ask the assistance of those who are willing to free the commerce of the western States from this onerous burden, strike the shackles from our trade, and vote a very small sum for the accomplishment of a very great national object. This is all I desire to say.

Mr. HAVEN. If the gentleman from Kentucky has concluded his remarks, I desire to make a short speech which, I think, will be in favor of this bill. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing the debate upon this bill in five minutes after its consideration shall be again resumed in committee. I will then immediately move that we go into committee again.

The question was taken on Mr. HAVEN's motion; and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman, (Mr. McMULLIN,) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the river and harbor appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HAVEN. I offer the usual resolution to close the debate on the river and harbor appropriation bill within five minutes after its consideration shall be again resumed in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HAVEN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAVEN. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly again resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. McMULLIN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in the five minutes left for the discussion of the bill, I wish to make a few remarks in reference to the suggestions of my colleague [Mr. WENTWORTH] as to the course we ought to pursue on these appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors, reported by the Committee on Commerce. I understand him to recommend that we should take the bill just as it has been reported by the committee, and discourage all amendments. Now, I shall briefly state my reasons for not adopting the suggestions of my colleague. There are amendments which I think ought to be made to the bill, and which I am sure this committee will make, on a knowledge of all the facts.

In the first place, let me direct attention of gentlemen to the appropriations recommended by the Committee on Commerce for the improvement of the rapids in the Mississippi river, and ask if they be commensurate with the importance of the object? That is an improvement, one not only of vast importance to the Mississippi valley, but to the whole country. Now, what is the appropriation recommended by the Committee on Commerce for the improvement of the Des Moines and Rock River rapids? Why, sir, the insignificant and pitiful sum of $18,000 is recommended for the Des Moines, and the same sum for the Rock River rapids! Here is an improvement which everybody knows, who knows anything of the subject, to make it available will cost half a million of dollars, and which is a work of great national importance. And, in addition to the little sum of $100,000 heretofore appropriated, it is now proposed only to add $36,000 in all.

In my recollection, the first appropriation for the survey of these rapids was $4,000; and it was made in 1837, and it was with a view to some adequate improvement of them. The survey was made under the direction of a most skillful and accomplished engineer, Colonel Lee, and it is the opinion of persons familiar with the character of improvements needed, that his plan is the only one which can be adopted to effectually carry out the object the Government had in view. The survey was made by this engineer, and it was approved by the Engineer Department here in Washington, and literally nothing has been done since. To be sure, two years ago there was an appropriation of $50,000 or $100,000 made for each of these rapids. What has been done with that appropriation? Have the people who live on the border of that great father of waters derived any benefit from that appropriation? No, sir. Not one rock has been taken out of the channel, and not a single obstruction has been removed. But, instead of that, we see the appropriations likely to be all frittered away by a resurvey, and by new experiments, all to no purpose, according to my judgment in this regard. It is acknowledged by practical men, by the steamboat men of that river, a class of men distinguished everywhere for their intelligence and their practical common sense, men who know every rock over which they pass, from Keokuk to Galena, that the original plan of Colonel Lee was the best and most practicable mode of improving these rapids. Why not, then, carry that plan out in letter and spirit, and make your appropriations to do so? Why these delays, and why this great injustice to the people of the Mississippi valley? Why, sir, this appropriation was made two years ago, and literally nothing has been done, and it would seem that nothing is to be done. We come here now from this great valley, and ask for a proper and adequate appropriation, and this Committee on Commerce give us the pitiful sum of $18,000 for each of these rapids. What kind of an appropriation is that to remove such obstructions from a river like the Mississippi, upon whose magnificent current floats millions and millions of the commerce of this great nation, the product of the enterprise and industry of the people of that valley? I shall move to increase this amount—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. It is very easy to find fault with the estimates of engineers in general; but to come right square up to the mark, and say wherein those estimates are wrong, is quite another matter.

Mr. HENN, (interrupting.) The debate was to close in five minutes after we were in committee again, and we have already had one five-minute speech.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to another question of order, and it is this: that the bill is not in a shape to be amended, and therefore it is not debatable until it is read over.

Mr. WENTWORTH. The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do I understand that there is already an amendment to the amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to the amendment pending.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I submit, then, that, no further amendment is in order.

Mr. ENGLISH. Before the vote is taken upon this amendment, I feel it my duty to submit a few remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must inform the gentleman from Indiana that remarks are not in order until the amendment is disposed of.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. KERR. I demand tellers on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.]

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SMITH, of Tennessee, and KERR, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 47; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN. The roll must be called.

The roll was then called, the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having found itself without a quorum, had ordered the roll to be called, and had directed him to report the facts to the House, with the names of the absentees.

The following is the list of the absentees:

Messrs. Ashe, David J. Bailey, Ball, Banks, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Bissell, Chase, Chastain, Colquitt, Craigie, Crocker, Cullom, Dean, Dent, De Witt, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, John M. Elliott, Etheridge, Ewing, Fuller, Gamble, Goodrich, Green, Grey, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Hibbard, Hunt, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lindsley, Lyon, Macdonald, McNair, Mace, Maxwell, May, Meacham, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Morrison, Olds, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pringle, Reese, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Seydard, Shannon, Simmons, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Alexander H. Stephens, David Stuart, Thurston, Tracy, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, and Wright.

Mr. ENGLISH. I have in my hand a proposition which I desire to submit as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] and which I hope will meet with his approval. I should like to submit some general remarks upon the question of a canal at the falls of the Ohio; but as that is not now in order, I will content myself with making a brief statement of facts explanatory of my proposition.

Prior to the year 1831, the United States, under acts of Congress passed in 1826 and 1829, became a stockholder to the amount of $230,000, in a company chartered by the Legislature of Kentucky, in 1825, known as the Louisville and Portland Canal Company. This canal was completed about the year 1831, and from that time to the present has been under the management of a private company, who have levied upon the commerce of the West taxes, in the shape of tolls, amounting in the aggregate to near the sum of $3,000,000, or about three times the original cost of the work. If I am correctly informed, the dividends prior to 1842, upon the $230,000 of Government stock, went into the Treasury of the United States, and fully reimbursed the amount originally subscribed; but in that year the Kentucky Legislature passed an act amending the original charter, and providing that the United States, with the dividends accruing upon her portion of the stock, might purchase all the stock, and become the exclusive owner of the canal.

The dividends have been so applied, and now we are officially informed that the United States will be the sole owner before the next meeting of Congress. If no other action be taken than to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, the canal will be left under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, or the present management, unless, indeed, it will, as some contend, become forfeited to the State of Kentucky. Now, sir, there are reasons why I prefer the matter to be turned over to the President, instead of the Secretary of the Treasury, (who represents the stock of the United States, under the present law) and, also, other reasons why I prefer my proposition to that of the gentleman from Kentucky; but I will not trespass further upon the indulgence of the committee, but will ask that it be read by the Clerk. I am decidedly in favor of abolishing all tolls, not only because I want to take the burden off of the commerce of the river, but also to cut off the possibility of tolls being levied and applied to the enlargement of the present canal. I ask that my amendment may be read.

Mr. PRESTON. I hope the amendment will be read, as in some respects it is better than my own.

The substitute was reported, as follows:

And that so soon as the President of the United States is notified by the board of president and directors of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company that all of the capital stock of said company is owned by the United States, and that the said company is free from all debts and liabilities, then the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint the proper officers to take possession of said canal on the part of the United States, and to take control of the canal and canal property aforesaid, so that the same may not fall into decay or obstruct navigation; and the expenses attending the custody and management of said canal and canal property shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not exceeding the sum of $25,000 per annum; and from and after the 1st day of January next the navigation of said canal shall be free from all tolls and charges whatsoever.

Mr. PRESTON. I would state that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ENGLISH] asked me to accept that as a modification of my amendment. I would say that the gentleman's substitute, which I accept, is far more full than the amendment which I hurriedly drew up; and in order to harmonize these interests I am willing to accept it.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I rise to a point of order. I wish to ask the Chair if the amendment having reference to the purchase and taking possession of the canal has the pertinency to this bill now under consideration as to entitle it to be considered in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman that it is too late to raise the question of order. The amendment or substitute has already been received by the committee in lieu of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.]

Mr. ENGLISH. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, that this is not a new proposition. A law of Congress was passed many years ago in reference to that canal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the amendment is in order.

The question then being upon the amendment of Mr. PRESTON, as modified by the substitute of Mr. ENGLISH,

Mr. PRESTON called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MACE, and SMITH of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 43.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment, as amended.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Is not the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ENGLISH] separate and distinct of itself?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offered his amendment as an amendment to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Indiana submitted his proposition as a substitute, which was accepted by the gentleman from Kentucky as a modification of his proposition.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Then I understand that the amendment carries an increase of the appropriation some $100,000. Is this to be done when we have no estimates?

[Cries of "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion is not in order.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I demand tellers on the amendment as amended.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. COX and FLORENCE were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 49.

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee. I wish to remark that I expect to vote for the bill as it now stands; but I cannot do so if many amendments are adopted. I therefore move to strike out the enacting words of the bill, in order to test the question whether there shall be any more amendments made to the bill.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. Upon that motion I call for tellers.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a point of order. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. SMITH. The enacting words of the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I make the point of order that was made before—pending the civil and diplomatic bill, I believe it was. I intend, so long as I am a member of this body, to raise this question of order, that the Committee of the Whole—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio has no right to debate the question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will not debate it, but I will state the point of order, and it is this: That the motion to strike out the enacting clause of a bill cannot be made in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the reason that it nullifies and destroys the force of the very rules that are prescribed for the government of the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio is not well taken, and that it is competent for the gentleman from Tennessee to move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I take an appeal from that decision; and I propose to state the reasons on which I found my position.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I refer the Chair to the fact that but a few days ago, when this same point was raised, it was decided to be debatable.

Messrs. BOCK and HOUSTON. In that case debate was not limited.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will state, in reply to the gentlemen, that the debate was limited before the point was made by me.

[Cries of "Oh, no! no!"]

Mr. ORR. The gentleman from Ohio is mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the question is not debatable—debate having been closed on this bill; and the question now before the committee is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee. I merely wish to remark that, inasmuch as the friends of the bill seem to desire it, and as I do not wish to throw any impediment in the way of the bill, I will withdraw my motion. But I wish, at the same time, to give notice that if these amendments are put upon the bill I shall vote against it. In deference, therefore, to the wishes of the friends of the bill, I withdraw my motion to strike out the enacting words.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I renew that motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And from that decision I take an appeal.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. May I inquire of the Chair, whether he decides that it is in order to go back to the first section of the bill, for the purpose of entertaining the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the Chair rules that it is competent for any member to move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill, debate having been closed upon it, and, according to the recollection of the Chair, this decision is in accordance with the decisions heretofore made on that point.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand tellers on the appeal.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MILLSON and Cox were appointed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to correct a statement that has been made here, for the information of the committee. That is in relation to the point which I raised being debatable. It has been said here by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. Houston,] and also by the gentleman who then occupied the chair, that on the occasion which I referred to, debate had not been closed on the bill when the same question was raised. Now, I am informed by the Clerk, and for the correctness of that information, I refer to the Journal, that debate had been closed at that time, and that the case stood then just as it stands now.

Mr. ORR. I think the gentleman from Ohio is mistaken as to the fact in reference to debate not having been closed at the time to which he refers.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I call for the question. This discussion is out of order.

Mr. DISNEY. A reference to the Journal will show the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to call gentlemen to order. Debate is clearly out of order.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 69, noes 60.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. PECKHAM. I object to that decision. The tellers announced the vote as fifty-eight in the affirmative.

The CHAIRMAN. It was first so announced, but the tellers afterwards reported nine more in the affirmative.

Mr. PECKHAM. It is precisely that to which I object. I hold that, after the affirmative vote has been once announced, it is not in order to increase that number by any additional votes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that he had a right to receive the votes to which the gentleman objects, and that the vote, as announced by him, is the correct one.

Mr. PECKHAM. I appeal from that decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers reported sixty members in the affirmative, and after the negative vote had been taken, they reported nine more in the affirmative; and the Chair then announced the votes as sixty-nine in the affirmative, and sixty in the negative. The gentleman from New York objects to the announcement of the tellers. The Chair overrules the question of order. The gentleman from New York appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. RICHARDSON. Why, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman cannot appeal from an objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Chair has made no decision, but merely stated the facts. The gentleman has raised no question of order. He has merely objected to the announcement of the vote by the Chair.

Mr. PECKHAM. What I objected to, and the point upon which I raised the question of order, was, that the tellers had no right to announce an additional affirmative vote after the negative had been taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that no appeal can be taken from the announcement of a vote.

Mr. PECKHAM. I should like to know of the Chair—

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. PHELPS. What is the question on which we are now called to vote?

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the proposition of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. Perkins,] to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. McNAIR. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ZOLLICOFFER and HILLYER were appointed.

The question was taken on Mr. PERKINS's motion; and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 72.

So the committee refused to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Are amendments now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. They are now in order.

Mr. WASHBURN. I offer, then, the following amendment:

For the survey of Galena river and harbor, $100,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would inquire of the Chair whether that amendment is in order? I understand this bill to be one to continue works which have been already commenced.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to provide for the commencement of a new work, and therefore rules that it is not in order.

Mr. WASHBURN. It says for the survey of the river.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. WASHBURN. Upon what ground do I understand the Chair as deciding the amendment out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Because there is no existing law authorizing the extension and completion of the work; and the amendment is not in accordance with the general character of the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN. I did not understand that to be the case with regard to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Preston.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question of order was not made upon the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WASHBURN. As this decision precludes all amendments of this nature, I desire to obtain the sense of the committee upon the ruling of the Chair, and therefore I must take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. LETCHER. I would ask to have the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky read.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not now before the committee. The Chair decides that the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois is not in order, upon the ground that it is not germane to the general bill, and because it is a proposition making an appropriation for a new work not provided for by law. The gentleman from Illinois takes an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and the question now is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I offer the following amendment:

For the improvement of the navigation of the White river, Arkansas, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $50,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is for a new work.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to know if there is any existing law authorizing an appropriation?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think not. I think the amendment I have offered will come within the decision just made by the Chair. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to several items in this bill which do not purport to be for works already commenced. I take it, from the reading of the bill, that it is not what it purports to be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must remind the gentleman from Arkansas that discussion is not in order.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I am aware of that; but I simply desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact—

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The Chair would beg to state to the gentleman from Arkansas, that, in the opinion of the Chair, the proposition submitted by him is not in order.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Then I must again ask the vote of the committee on that decision. And I do so for this reason—

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The Chair would most respectfully ask the committee to attend to the reading of the rule on which the decision of the Chair is based.

The Clerk read the 81st rule, as follows:

"No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several departments of the Government."

Mr. GREENWOOD. I was well aware of the existence of that rule; but I was about remarking to the Chair and the committee—

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The Chair must again remind the gentleman that discussion is out of order. Does the gentleman take an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I do; and I will state the grounds of my doing so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has no right to debate the question. He has a right to state the grounds of his appeal, but without argument.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The question was taken, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I offer the following amendment:

For continuing the improvements on the raft on Red river, $100. And be it further enacted, That the joint resolution entitled "a resolution explanatory of the act appropriating money for the removal of the raft on Red river," approved January 7, 1853, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and that the Secretary of the Department of War be authorized to expend the appropriation in reference to the Red river raft in such a way, and for such purposes, as he may approve, having in view the improvement of the navigation of said river in and around the said raft.

It will be seen at once, Mr. Chairman, that the object which I had in view in proposing this appropriation of $100 was to bring this amendment within the rules of the House, and to make it in order. Some two years ago—it will be two years in August next—the Congress of the United States made an appropriation of $100,000 for the cleaning out of the raft on Red river. That appropriation authorized the Secretary of War to advertise and let out this work to contractors. In 1853 Congress modified that law and required that the person who took the contract should agree to clear out the river, and keep it open for a series of years. The Secretary of War has, time and again, offered this contract to the public, but no one has offered to bid for it for the reason, as I understand it, and as I have no doubt is the fact, that no one was willing to clear out the raft and keep the river clear for the sum appropriated by Congress, because it would require an expenditure of $25,000 or $30,000 to procure the machinery necessary to clear out this raft, if the contract were to be taken by private individuals.

But the Secretary of War has stated, in a communication to the House at this session of Congress, in answer to a resolution of inquiry, which I submitted myself, that he had no doubt that the Government of the United States could remove that raft; or, in other words, that the Government could make the navigation open in the region, of the raft of the Red river for $100,000, for the reason that the Government has already the appropriate and necessary machinery for such work in its possession.

It will be observed that the object of this amendment is to relieve the law, which has already made this appropriation of $100,000, from those onerous obligations and conditions attached to it, and to leave the Secretary of War to do the work, either by contract or by his own hands, through the agency of such engineer as he may choose.

Now, Mr. Chairman, allow me to say that the amendment which I have submitted is verbatim et literatim the Senate bill which has been sent down to this House, and that the main features of this same Senate bill have been submitted to the Committee on Commerce—for I drew up the bill and submitted it myself—and the Committee on Commerce have reported that bill to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

My object, therefore, is to get this matter before the House; for I feared that if I should be compelled to wait until the Senate bill should be called up, or the House bill either, I might be deprived of an opportunity of bringing forward this subject at all, unless I put it in here.

Let me say to the House, that I believe it is the opinion of the Secretary of War—and surely such is my opinion—that unless this law is modified during the present Congress, the appropriation will lapse in August next, the period of two years since the appropriation was made then expiring.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I would inquire of the gentleman if this is the identical proposition reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES. It is the identical proposition which came down from the Senate. But I will say to the gentleman that the difficulty in regard to the other appropriation was, that some of the committee had objections because they were not willing that the Government should pass through the State lands. I would remark that the Legislature of Louisiana, at its last session, passed a law by which the United States were authorized to pass through the Territory of Louisiana, for the very purpose of meeting this objection.

Mr. WENTWORTH. The Committee on Commerce have agreed to something like this proposition; and if it involves no appropriation, and if it is identical with the committee's proposition, the committee would all be in favor of it. But if it is a modification of their proposition, I am not prepared to speak for them, but only for myself.

Mr. JONES. It is identical with the Senate bill. It involves no appropriation, except the $100.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I suggest to the gentleman that he should withhold his proposition for the present, and move it as an additional section, and in the mean time allow the Committee on Commerce the opportunity to investigate it.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I have no doubt Judge Dunbar will concur with me in anything I may desire in reference to this matter, as his movement in the matter at all was to carry out my wishes.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Was the appropriation contained in Judge Dunbar's bill?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; and no further appropriation is necessary. My sole object in moving to appropriate $100 was to make the amendment in order.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Then I ask the gentleman to strike out the appropriation, and I presume there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. JONES. If I were satisfied that the amendment would be in order without, I would strike it out with great pleasure; but, it seems to me, it would not be in order.

Mr. WENTWORTH. An amendment in reference to the Red river raft is in order. Appropriations have been made over and over again for its removal. It is a work, therefore, that has heretofore been authorized by law, and any amendment in reference to it is in order to this bill. If the gentleman will strike out the appropriation, there will be no earthly objection to his amendment.

Mr. JONES. If that is true, I will strike out the appropriation.

Mr. HAVEN moved a pro forma amendment, and said: I very much dislike to interpose at all in reference to a matter that is within the jurisdiction of gentlemen from another section of the country; but when I can be of use to the House, there will be no impropriety in it. I will state, in brief, the history of this appropriation. At the first session of the last Congress, an appropriation of $100,000 was made for the removal of the raft in Red river. During the last session of Congress a joint resolution was passed in reference to the disposition of that appropriation, which it is now proposed to repeal. The object of it was to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to let out the job of removing this raft to the individual who would remove it and keep the river clear for the longest period. That is according to my recollection of the matter.

Now, I am opposed to the repeal of this joint resolution. I am opposed to taking upon ourselves, under the supervision of the Secretary of War, the responsibility of removing the Red river raft, without any limitation as to the extent of expenditure which is to be incurred, because, if I am not mistaken, we have heretofore had some assurance in reference to that same raft. Congress have, in years gone by, appropriated I do not know what amount of money for its removal. I admit that there is a necessity for further legislation in reference to it. I have heard the suggestion made, and it seems to me very reasonable, that a canal might be cut around it. The soil is of such a nature that it might conveniently be done, and the navigation of the river opened by that means for a sum less than $100,000. Now, under these circumstances, it seems to me that it would hardly be worth while to repeal this resolution, and to open an unlimited expenditure for the purpose of removing this raft, until we can have more definite information upon the matter.

Mr. JONES. I will state to the gentleman that the object of this amendment is to authorize the Secretary of War, if, in his judgment, it should be desirable, to cut a canal around the raft in this river.

Mr. HAVEN. If my friend will allow me, I would suggest that there should be a limitation fixed in the amendment, that the amount to be expended should not exceed $100,000.

Mr. JONES. Certainly. But there is no need of any such limitation. I ask for no additional appropriation beyond the $100,000 which was appropriated two or three years ago. Mr. Chairman, let me say, in addition to what I have said, that I have information before me from the Secretary of War, which was furnished to the House in answer to a resolution offered by me early in the present session, showing that the existence of this raft in Red river costs the Government annually some $45,000. There are some forks up the river which must receive supplies. Steamboats cannot run up in an ordinary stage of water. Red river steamboats are therefore chartered, and kept waiting sometimes for five or six months for a flood to enable them to ascend the river.

The object of the amendment is to authorize the Secretary of War to open the navigation of the Red river by contract, or otherwise. And let me say, in addition, that there was a gentleman from Red river, Colonel Gilmore, here the other day, of great wealth, who is prepared to give bonds in any sum the Government may require, not only to open, but to keep open, the navigation of the Red river for $100,000.

Mr. HAVEN. The gentleman is clearly right in reference to the importance of this communication. I have learned from the documents here, that the closing of the navigation of Red river is equal to a detriment of at least $40,000 to the Government each year.

Mr. JONES. Forty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. HAVEN. I have no doubt about that. Now, what I desire is, that the joint resolution shall stand, but amended so as to have the work let out to the lowest bidder, and who will keep the river navigable for the longest period of time.

Mr. JONES. Let me add that that proposition has been made time and again. It has been made two or three times by the Secretary of War, but nobody is willing to take the contract, because the necessary machinery will cost $25,000 or $30,000. Nobody can take the contract who has not already that machinery in his possession. It is now in the possession of the Government.

Mr. MILLSON. I move to add the following proviso to the amendment:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize the cutting of any canal through the soil of any State.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Louisiana has just now stated that the object of the amendment he offered was to authorize the cutting of a canal around the Red river raft. When this same question was before the Committee on Commerce, some months ago, I supposed that the object contemplated in the repeal of the restriction contained in the joint resolution, was to get around the raft, by cutting a canal, and wishing to bring the committee to a vote on the question of the right of the General Government to construct works of internal improvement, such as roads and canals within the limits of a State, I offered an amendment, perhaps in the very words which I have now sent up to the Chair, which was adopted by the committee; though I believe it was at a subsequent meeting reconsidered and rejected.

Mr. JONES made a remark, which was quite inaudible to the reporter.

Mr. MILLSON. I do not think that the constitutional powers of Congress can be enlarged by any consent the States may give. I wish to bring the Democrats of the House to an expression of their opinions in reference to these appropriations. I want to see how many will stand by their ancient principles on this subject. I am afraid they are but few, indeed. In regard to the appropriation for the Red river raft, as near as I recollect, the original amount named was some $50,000. It was raised to $100,000 at the instance of certain gentlemen in the Senate, who said that $50,000 was not enough, but that the whole work could be done for $100,000, and even for less; and that contracts could be entered into to complete the work for that sum. The joint resolution was then passed, limiting the appropriation to $100,000, and declaring that no portion of the sum should be expended unless a contract was made for the completion of the work. It seems that the work cannot be done for $100,000, and now the proposition is to remove the restriction—

Mr. JONES. There is no such proposition. I do not ask a dollar.

Mr. MILLSON. You do not ask a larger appropriation, perhaps, than is already made, but under the present law no portion of the money can be expended until a contract is made for the completion of the work. I have offered the amendment I sent up to the Clerk's desk for the purpose of seeing whether the Democratic portion of the House are willing to make appropriations which are to be expended in cutting canals within the limits of a State.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I am very much obliged to my friend from Virginia, for making this poor little appropriation for the Red river raft, in my district, a test of the Democratic spirit of the House in regard to the constitutional power of Congress to make appropriations for internal improvements. I am as good a Democrat as my very able and astute friend from Virginia. I do not pretend to say that I am as capable of splitting hairs on constitutional questions, as the gentleman from Virginia, [laughter:] but surely I do believe in the main, that upon the great principles of the Democratic party, I am as good a Democrat as even that gentleman.

Now, sir, I do not doubt—and I never heard the fact doubted by Democrats—that the General Government may make improvements within the limits of a State, especially if that State has assented to such improvements. Why, sir, it has been the practice of the General Government from its institution to the present time to make such improvements. Look at the whole of this bill now before the committee; look at every bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors that has been enacted by the Congress of the United States, and you will find that such has been the practice of the Government from the beginning to the present time. And I should like to know how the position I have taken is to be controverted. I do not profess to be a better Democrat than others.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. JONES] allow me to correct him?

Mr. JONES. Oh, no; excuse me now.

Mr. SMITH. I only wished to remind the gentleman that it is only within the last thirty years that the Government has made improvements within the limits of a State.

Mr. JONES. It only shows that we understand the Constitution a little better than they did in the early times. [Laughter, and cries of "good," "progressive," &c.]

I was going to remark that I did not profess to be a better Democrat than Mr. Calhoun; and did he not sanction this power? I concur with him, and I hope I never shall become a more strict constructionist of the Constitution than Mr. Calhoun was. But it seems that, at the present time, we have gentlemen here who are trying to "out-Herod Herod," as it were—going further than Mr. Calhoun in the strict construction of the Constitution. Now, his notions of the constitutional power go far enough for me. I do not choose to go beyond them; I do not choose to limit them more. Now, the very object of this amendment, I say, is to authorize the Secretary of War either to remove the raft, or, if he deems it more expedient, to cut a canal round the raft. The very object of this appropriation is either to improve this communication by the means which nature has already provided, or else to remove the raft, if that course should be deemed more advisable. Now, let me say that this canal, if cut around the raft, would go directly through the Government land. There are no private lands there. They belong to the General Government. Let me add further, that the Legislature of the State of Louisiana passed a law last session authorizing the General Government to cut the canal.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON.]

Mr. LETCHER. Let us have tellers upon it, that we may see how many Democrats we have got here. [Laughter.]

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HUGHES and CAMPBELL were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 75.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to amend by striking out $100 and inserting $102,400. I propose this amendment because I want to make the two sides of the line equal in expenditures. By this bill you have appropriated for works north of the Potomac $242,400, which is more than we have had down South, by precisely the amount I have named in my amendment. By the States' rights bill of my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. ASHE,] which passed the House yesterday, we received $140,000; and if this amount is increased to $102,400, it will make the entire amount for the South $302,400, the same as that received on the other side of the line.

Now, sir, I have heard some strange notions advanced here to-day. I thought it had been a well settled doctrine in this House for a long time past, that the constitutional powers of the General Government to construct roads and canals would permit you to begin at the boundaries of civilization, and go into the wilderness to any extent, but that you could not begin at the seat of Government and travel to the boundary line of civilization.

Mr. COBB, (interrupting.) Is the gentleman from Virginia in order? It seems to me that we had better begin right at the outset. Suppose we have the resolution of yesterday read?

Mr. LETCHER. I am talking about improvements; and it strikes me that if anybody is out of order, it is the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. COBB. Oh, no; I am clearly in order.

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman from Alabama, if I mistake not, is one of those who believe in the doctrine I just alluded to, that it was proper for the Government to take money from the Treasury, or to donate alternate sections of land to build roads or canals from the outside line—from the furthest side of Arkansas, at least, on to the western side of the continent.

Now, sir, I do not hold to any such doctrine. I hold that, if you can, at the public expense, make roads from the western border of Arkansas to the Pacific ocean, you can begin here at the seat of Government, and build a railroad to the western border of Arkansas, and then you would have a continuous line of improvements.

But my friend from Louisiana advances a still more strange doctrine. He says it is in the power of the Government to make this canal, with the consent of the State in which it is located. Now, sir, will he tell me how the consent of a State can enlarge the powers of the General Government? If the General Government has no power to do it without the consent of the State, will that consent confer any constitutional power upon the Government? This seems to me a stranger doctrine than any I have heard yet.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. The gentleman misunderstood me. I did not say the Government of the United States had no power to improve any river or any harbor within its limits, without the consent of the States, but I said that, with that consent, surely there could be no doubt upon the subject.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, sir, my friend from Louisiana is a real hair-splitter in earnest.

[Laughter.] Now, sir, if the General Government has the power to construct these works of improvement without the consent of the State, then what do you want the consent of the State for; of what value is it in any way?

[Here he hammered fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe if the gentleman from Virginia will refer back to a statesman from his own State, who was presumed to understand the Constitution of the United States tolerably well, he will find that that statesman laid down the very doctrine which the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. JONES] planted himself on this morning; I allude to Mr. Madison. And there, I apprehend, is the origin of this doctrine of the necessity of obtaining the consent of a State, to construct works of improvement within her borders.

Mr. LETCHER. Will the gentleman be good enough to give us the reference?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I shall try to furnish you with the reference and the document itself. It will afford me much pleasure to give the gentleman information on the subject, as I think he needs it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LETCHER. Thank you!

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman makes another point to which I wish to allude for a moment. He can see no difference between making improvements outside of the States and making them inside. Nobody, I believe, has as yet questioned the right of the Government to construct roads and make other improvements across territory, over which she has full and entire jurisdiction. So far as these points are concerned, I admit they are not germane to the subject now under consideration, but I deemed it necessary to make the reply which I have.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, the Chairman (Mr. McMULLIN,) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 392, the river and harbor appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled the following bills and joint resolutions, which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

H. R. No. 130. An act for the relief of Samuel W. Brady;

H. R. No. 291. An act for the construction of certain military roads and wells in the Territory of New Mexico;

H. R. No. 191. An act for the relief of George W. Gibson;

H. R. No. 119. An act to provide for the continuation of the military road from Myrtle Creek to Scottsburg, in Oregon;

H. R. No. 129. An act for the relief of Cornelius H. Latham;

H. R. No. 294. An act for the payment of the civil officers employed in the Territory of New Mexico while under military government;

H. R. No. 375. An act to provide a pension for Sergeant W. Torrence;

H. R. No. 341. An act to refund to the Territory of Utah the expenses incurred by said Territory in suppressing Indian hostilities;

H. R. No. 339. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to settle and adjust the expenses of the Rogue River Indian war;

Joint resolution (No. 28) to correct a clerical error in the act approved June 22, 1854, to authorize a register to be issued to the steamer El Paraguay by a new name;

Joint resolution (No. 21) explanatory of the second section of a resolution to establish certain post offices, approved July 12, 1852; and

An act for the relief of A. B. Roman.

Mr. CRAIGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ORR. I hope my friend from North Carolina will withdraw that motion. Let us go into the Committee of the Whole again and finish the river and harbor bill.

Mr. CRAIGE. I decline withdrawing the motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman will withdraw it, I think we can get through one of the small appropriation bills to-day.

Mr. ORR. If the House does not adjourn, I shall make the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan, demanded tellers on the motion to adjourn.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HUGHES and KERR were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 52.

Mr. ORR. I ask for the yeas and nays. It is now only twenty minutes after three o'clock.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 74, nays 72; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Benson, Benton, Bliss, Brooks, Campbell, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chrisman, Corwin, Cox, Craig, Cumming, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dickinson, Disney, Edgerton, Edmonds, Edmundson, Elison, English, Farley, Faulkner, Flager, Florence, Franklin, Goode, Green, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Hastings, Hiester, Hill, Johnson, Kelt, Kittredge, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, Lindley, McCulloch, McNair, Matteson, Maurice, Maxwell, Middlesworth, Morrison, Nichols, Mordecai Oliver, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Powell, Puryear, Thomas Ritchey, Rowe, Subin, Shannon, Shaw, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, Solters, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Vansant, Wade, Walley, Walsh, Israel Washburn, Daniel B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—74.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Appleton, Barksdale, Barry, Boccock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Caruthers, Caskie, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cutting, Dawson, Dowdell, Eddy, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Fenton, Giddings, Greenwood, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Haven, Henn, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Roland Jones, Kerr, Knox, Lindsey, McQueen, Macy, Millson, Morgan, Noble, Norton, Orr, Packery, Pennington, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Preston, Reese, Richardson, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Russell, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, George W. Smyth, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—72.

The House thereupon (at three o'clock and thirty-five minutes, p. m.) adjourned till tomorrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 11, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. EVANS presented a petition of inhabitants of Lower Salem, South Carolina, praying a reduction of the present rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I present the petition of J. Horsford Smith, United States consul at Beyrout, Syria, requesting an increase of his compensation. He states that he has been consul at that place since 1849; that the Treasury of the United States has received more than $100,000 from the trade opened between that place and the United States, and that his compensation is utterly inadequate, and ought to be increased. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROCKWELL also presented a petition signed by five hundred citizens of Massachusetts, praying the repeal of the fugitive slave law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNER. I present the memorial of Joseph Goddard, a merchant of New York, in which he sets forth that the fugitive slave act has been adjudged, by the ablest writers and the plainest rules of construction and common sense, to be unconstitutional, and he prays that it be repealed. I also present a memorial of members of the Unitarian Church, at Cambridgeport, Massachusetts, headed by their pastor, asking for the repeal of the fugitive slave act. I move their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK presented documents relating to the claim of James L. Collins, for money expended in the purchase of furniture for the Government house, at Santa Fe, New Mexico; which were referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. CHASE presented a petition signed by inhabitants of Oberlin, Ohio, praying a reduction in the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. JOHNSON presented a petition of citizens of Pope and other counties, in Arkansas, praying the establishment of a rail route from Norristown to Fort Smith, in said State; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. BELL presented the petition of J. P. Chase, asking compensation for clerical services performed in the Pension Office; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a bill from the House of Representatives, to create and provide a pension for David Towle, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. CHASE, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred the petition of Adolphus Allen, praying an extension of his patent for a water-wheel, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Mary W. Perrine, widow of William E. Perrine, for herself and children, praying the payment of whatever amount shall appear, upon investigation, to be due said Perrine, as one of the contractors on the Louisville and Portland canal, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals; which was agreed to.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill to aid in the construction of certain railroads in the State of Missouri, by a grant of a portion of the public lands, reported it back with an amendment, and with a recommendation that it pass.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. SLIDELL asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill for the relief of A. G. Penn; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

POST OFFICE IN PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. BRODHEAD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General inform the Senate whether a suitable site can be obtained for a post office in the city of Philadelphia, and if so, at what price; and also to communicate to the Senate any proposals which he may have received for the sale of lot or lots, and the erection of suitable buildings thereon for a post office in said city; together with any suggestions or recommendations he may think proper to make in relation thereto.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills:

An act for the relief of the Utica Steam Woolen Company; and

An act to establish the offices of surveyor general of New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes.

Which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill from the House of Representatives to change the name of the American-built brig Halowell to that of James Rose, and to grant her a new register, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

The bill authorizing the construction of a line of telegraph from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean, was read a third time, and the question was, "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. WELLER. The Senate was about to proceed yesterday to vote, by yeas and nays, on the passage of the bill. Before the vote is taken, however, I wish to have an amendment made which I think is necessary in order to make the meaning of the bill more explicit. It is to insert in the last proviso in the sixth section after the word "telegraph," the words "before said patent shall issue;" so that it shall read:

Provided, That in the event a railroad to the Pacific ocean shall be located on or near said line of telegraph, before said patent shall issue, the grant of land, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The bill has been read a third time, and is now on its passage, so that it will require the unanimous consent of the Senate to make the amendment. If there be no objection, it will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to ask one question of the honorable Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] who reported some of the amendments to this bill, as to the probable effect of one of those amendments; I refer to an amendment in the second section. After providing for the construction of the line of the telegraph, the section goes on to say:

"And the same shall be completed and put in operation within two years from the passage of this bill, and after such State legislation shall have been secured as may be necessary to authorize its construction in the States through which it may pass."

If I read that provision rightly, the effect may be that the parties may hold off in the obtaining of the necessary State legislation until a railroad line is made, and then it will be a very simple matter indeed to construct a telegraph line along the course of the railroad. There is, therefore, in my view literally no limitation, except the discretion of the parties as to the time within which they are to complete this line. That is my construction of this language, because the line is to be completed in two years from the passage of the bill, and also after such State legislation has been secured as may be necessary to authorize its construction in the States through which it may pass.

It will necessarily follow that legislation will not be procured in the States without the application and exertion of the parties; and, if they find it to their interest to make no exertion for that purpose, or to delay, they may put off the completion of this line as long as it suits their purpose to do so. It is, therefore, I say, without limitation. If I had been favorable to the bill otherwise, I should have preferred, in this respect, that the period of three years should be given absolutely, so that we might know the time. That would have given requisite time for applying to the State Legislatures. I mention this as an objection, in my judgment, to the bill as it now stands.

The question being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Benjamin, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Douglas, Fessenden, Fish, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Rockwell, Rusk, Shields, Stuart, Sumner, Wade, and Weller—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bayard, Bright, Brown, Butler, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Johnson, Mason, Pratt, Sebastian, Slidell, Thompson of Kentucky, and Williams—19.

So the bill was passed.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the title was amended so as to read "a bill authorizing the construction of a subterranean line of telegraph from the Mississippi or Missouri rivers, to the Pacific ocean."

WASHINGTON AND ALEXANDRIA RAILROAD. Mr. STUART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the homestead bill.

Mr. CLAY. I suggest that the hour of one o'clock has not yet arrived.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion, to allow me to call up a bill which will not take ten minutes.

Mr. STUART. I certainly will withdraw the motion for the Senator from Texas.

Mr. RUSK. Then I move that the Senate take up for consideration the bill authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question pending is on an amendment submitted yesterday by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MASON,] to strike out all the bill after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company, incorporated by the Legislature of Virginia, on the 27th February, 1854, to construct a railroad from Alexandria, in the State of Virginia, to the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, be, and are hereby, authorized to extend their road from any point on the Virginia side of the Potomac river to which said road may be constructed, at or above the aqueduct of the Alexandria canal, into the District of Columbia, connecting with the Baltimore and Washington railroad depot by the most convenient and practicable route or routes, passing through and along such streets or avenues of Washington and Georgetown as the corporate authorities thereof may respectively approve, subject to certain provisions hereinafter expressed.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company are hereby authorized to construct a bridge over the Potomac river, on, or above, or west of the aqueduct of the Alexandria Canal Company: Provided, Said bridge shall only be built on or over the piers of the aqueduct, with the consent of the Alexandria Canal Company: And provided further, In constructing said bridge, and crossing the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, said bridge and railroad shall be so constructed as not to injure or obstruct the use or navigation of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal: And provided further, That this act shall not prevent Congress from giving like privileges to any other railroad company, or any other person.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company are hereby authorized to establish depots in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, at such points as the corporate authorities thereof may respectively approve, and to lay their track or tracks to such point or points within said cities, and through and along such streets and avenues of said cities as may be respectively approved of by the corporate authorities of said cities, and to make all necessary turnouts; the said railroad company being subject to such terms, conditions, restrictions, and taxation, and to such rules and regulations relative to the construction, repairs, and working of their road, within the cities of Washington and Georgetown, as the corporate authorities of said cities may from time to time respectively prescribe, so far as it may lay within their respective limits: Provided, no higher rate of taxation shall be imposed upon said railroad company than is prescribed by the respective charters of said cities; and said railroad company shall keep an office within the city of Washington or Georgetown, and shall have power to sue and be sued, to make contracts, and to purchase and hold lands so far as may be necessary for carrying on the operations of the company, and the service of process on the president or any director of said company, or on the chief clerk in attendance at the office of the company, shall entitle any party complaining to proceed against said company as authorized under the laws of the District of Columbia to proceed against chartered companies within its limits.

Mr. BRIGHT. I shall vote for the amendment for the reason that it settles the contest which has existed so long between the two cities of Georgetown and Washington. I am authorized to say that it embraces a provision mutually acceptable to both cities. It gives to the railroad company the privilege of building a bridge, at their own expense, at or above the aqueduct, which removes the objection which has heretofore existed in reference to the Long Bridge, and provides that the road shall go through Georgetown and Washington at such points and through such streets as may be designated by the authorities of the two cities. I conceive there can be no objection to the bill if amended as proposed, and I therefore withdraw all that I have hitherto made to it, and am willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MASON. I wish to state, that the amendment now before the Senate is one merely intended to meet the views of the honorable Senator from Indiana, who has just spoken; and although I am to be made responsible for it on the Journal, I am not responsible for it in fact, as the Senator is aware. I want to clear my skirts of it, because I have never read or examined it. What its effect will be, I am not prepared to say. As far as I have examined it, I think it will do no harm; certainly it can do no good, because, without further legislation on the part of the State of Virginia, the Washington and Alexandria railroad will not be benefited by it. I shall not object to the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. There is one point in the amendment to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator who has charge of it. I observe it gives the corporate authorities of Washington power to allow the railroad to run through the avenues of the city. The avenues, I believe, and especially Pennsylvania avenue, are under the control of Congress; and for one, I do not think that the city of Washington ought to have authority to permit this railroad to run over them. I know there has been a scheme on foot all the winter to run some railroad up Pennsylvania avenue; but I have been opposed to it from the first.

Mr. RUSK. An application of that sort has been made to the authorities of Washington, and they have refused to grant the permission. I have no idea that they would do it; but if the Senator desires an amendment to that effect, it might easily be made.

Mr. BROWN. I should rather have the word "avenues" struck out of the bill. Pennsylvania avenue is the only one, I suppose, through which it would run, and I should be very much opposed to that. The present city authorities might not grant the permission; but we do not know who may be in authority twelve months hence.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am sorry that the Senator makes that objection; but if he insists upon it, I am willing to except Pennsylvania avenue from the provision. I do not believe that the authorities of Georgetown or of Washington would make a grant to prejudice their city in any respect. I think the trust is entirely safe in their hands; and, therefore, I should prefer that the honorable Senator would not press his amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I have no idea that the city authorities of Washington would do anything which, in their judgment, would prejudice the interests of the city; but I know that some very high in authority have been in favor of running a railroad through Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then put in an amendment excepting Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. BROWN. With that amendment I have no objection to the proposition.

Mr. BADGER. The corporate authorities ought not to be allowed this power. Although it may be perfectly safe now, there may be danger in the future.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. Mr. Mason's amendment, as amended, was agreed to; and the bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. BADGER. I desire to ask, for I was not listening to the reading of the amendment, and I wish to ascertain exactly how it is, whether it confines the passage of the cars through the streets of the city to horse power, or whether it is to be by steam?

Mr. PRATT. That is not decided by the bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. That depends upon the city authorities. It vests in the city authorities discretion to control that matter.

The amendment was concurred in, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

RAILROAD AT PENSACOLA.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill granting to Jasper Strong, George Terrill, and their associates, the right of way for a railroad through the reserved lands near the navy-yard, Pensacola, in the State of Florida.

It proposes to grant the right of way one hundred feet in width, through the lands, reserved west of the navy-yard, Pensacola, to the parties mentioned, for the construction of a railroad from the Perdido river, on the most direct and practicable route, to the waters of Pensacola bay, and the use of any timber or other materials along the route of the road and within half a mile on each side, which may be necessary in its construction; and at its terminus on Pensacola bay, they are to have the privilege of erecting a wharf and of establishing a depot for lumber and other articles, not more than one acre in extent; but the line and the terminus are to be approved by the Navy Department; and the bill is not to be so construed as to authorize the parties to use or destroy any timber which the Navy Department may direct to be preserved for Navy purposes.

Mr. STUART. I only desire to inquire of the Senator from Florida, if this question has been submitted to any Department, and if there is any statement from the Department on the subject? That has been usual in all these cases.

Mr. MALLORY. This bill was prepared under the eye of the Department, and was then sent to the commodore commanding the station.

He recommends its passage, as also does the Secretary of the Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk; announcing that they had passed the bill from the Senate making further appropriation for the improvement of the Cape Fear river, North Carolina, with an amendment.

Also, a joint resolution to fix the compensation of the employees of the legislative department of the Government, and to prohibit the allowance of the usual extra compensation to such as receive the benefits hereof.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. It is absolutely necessary for the public service that the Senate should proceed to the consideration of Executive business this morning. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will agree to the motion to do so. I make this statement to the Senate, and I hope that my request will be granted. I therefore move to proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. HUNTER. I believe there is a necessity for an Executive session; and I hope the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs will be agreed to.

Mr. BADGER. I ask the Senator to withdraw the motion in order that we may dispose of the amendment, just received from the House, to the bill in relation to the improvement of Cape Fear river, North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw the motion?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I prefer to have an Executive session now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas insists on his motion.

Mr. BADGER. I hope it will be voted down. The motion of Mr. Sebastian was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly proceeded to the consideration of Executive business. After some time spent therein the doors were reopened.

REVENUE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 19th of January, 1853, a copy of the revision of the revenue laws.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the communication, and bill, and papers, and maps accompanying it, were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that one hundred additional copies of the bill be printed for the use of the Treasury Department.

The motion was referred to the Committee on Printing.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. BROWN. Some time ago I gave notice that I should move a substitute for the homestead bill. I now ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to present the amendment, informally, and have it printed.

There being no objection, it was received informally, and ordered to be printed.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 12, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

INCREASED COMPENSATION TO EXECUTIVE OFFICERS.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire the House to give me permission to have an order made for the printing, for the use of the House, of a communication from the Treasury Department. It is a recommendation in relation to the increase of compensation of heads of bureaus. It has been sent to the Committee of Ways and Means, and all I ask now is, that it may be printed.

It was so ordered.

CLERK TO SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. LETCHER. I have been instructed by the special committee appointed to investigate Colt's patent case, and other things, to ask the House to allow a clerk to be appointed to aid the committee in taking testimony, at the usual compensation.

It was so ordered.

Mr. ROWE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Rowe] is late in his objection.

Mr. ROWE. I was on the floor for the purpose of objecting when the motion was made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York insists that he was upon the floor, and addressed the Speaker before the question was taken, and objected to the appointment of a clerk. The Chair did not hear the gentleman at all, certainly not until he was in the act of putting the negative vote. The Chair thinks the gentleman is too late in his objection. He can attain his object, however, by a motion to reconsider.

CHARLES CHRISTIG.

Mr. GREENWOOD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, made an adverse report upon the petition of Charles Christig, praying indemnity for loss of property sustained by him in California, destroyed by the Indians; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON COLT'S PISTOLS.

Mr. CUTTING. I rise for the purpose of asking the indulgence of the House, by excusing me from serving upon the select committee of investigation of matters connected with the Colt's pistol, which was appointed a few days since. My reason is this: I am already on the select committee which has under investigation charges arising out of the Gardiner matter. The duties of that committee exact a great deal of time from me, and will require much attention on the part of the members of the committee in order to enable them to report during this session. I presume that when the Speaker placed me upon that committee, it was done without recollecting the fact that I was already charged, as one member of a committee, with this other investigation. It appears to me that the labors of investigating one matter of this description is sufficient to impose upon one member of the House, and I think I ought not to be put upon another committee. I ask, therefore, that some one may be put upon that committee who can devote more time to it than it is possible for me to do.

The question upon excusing Mr. Cutting was then put, and he was excused.

ROBERT C. THOMPSON.

Mr. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania. I ask the unanimous consent of the House, that a bill from the Senate, which is upon the Speaker's table, may be taken up and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. It is a private bill, and the individual to whom it relates is now in the city upon expenses, and he wishes to have an opportunity to appear before that committee on Friday next.

No objection being made, the following bill was taken up and read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims:

An act for the relief of Robert C. Thompson, legal representative of William Thompson, deceased, formerly a brigadier general in the army during the revolutionary war.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HARRIS, of Mississippi. I ask the consent of the House to make a personal explanation.

There was no objection.

Mr. H. proceeded: Mr. Speaker, when the bill making an appropriation for carrying into effect the recent treaty with Mexico was under consideration some days ago, I indulged in language unnecessarily severe, and, I am free to say, not merited by the parties against whom it was directed. I desire, sir, to recall that language, or, at least, modify it.

The acquisition of territory from Mexico, and especially such territory, was not, in my judgment, demanded by the interests of the nation. But the abrogation of so much of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo as made this Government responsible for the Indian depredations was an object of very great importance. To this extent, then, the treaty had something of a substantial basis to rest upon; and although the acquisition of such territory may be no recommendation, yet it certainly constitutes no valid objection to the treaty.

I desire to say, therefore, that I regret that I should have employed language upon that occasion which, whatever I may think of the recent negotiations with Mexico, was too sweeping in its character, and not altogether fit to be used. What I said in regard to the discussion which was elicited upon the subject of the treaty was provoked by a strong impression on my mind that there was really nothing in the question of privilege, as connected with the proposition before the committee, made upon any gentleman participating in it. The speeches of those who participated in the discussion are now in print, and will, I have no doubt, amply vindicate themselves from any insinuation contained in my remarks.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

The House then proceeded to consider, as the first business in order, the bill reported yesterday by Mr. OLDS, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, "to amend an act entitled an act to amend an act entitled an act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States," approved August 30, 1852.

Mr. OLDS. In the remarks made yesterday by me, I endeavored to illustrate the effect of the present rates of newspaper postage upon the country and city press. I may, perhaps, from those remarks, have left the impression resting upon the minds of members of the House that I entertained a hostile feeling towards the city press. Such, sir, is not the fact. I have nothing to say against the city presses. I am willing they should have all the benefit of all the circulation they can obtain, which is not incompatible with the public good. What I desire to accomplish is, that the newspapers of the country shall pay to the revenues of the Post Office Department what it actually costs the Government to transport those papers through the mails of the United States. I desire, then, that the city press may have every advantage of their local position, and of their commanding influence, but that they shall not have it at the expense of the National Treasury.

In order to illustrate the bonus which the Government is now actually paying to increase the circulation of the city press, let me merely institute a comparison between the postage upon newspapers and that upon letters; and let me institute, also, a comparison between what the postage now is and what it will be under the bill before the House, if the bill shall pass. The charge now upon any newspaper not weighing more than three ounces, carried to any extreme point in the United States, is one cent postage; but if prepayment is made at the office where mailed, or delivered quarterly, or yearly in advance, there is a reduction of fifty per cent., which, in fact, makes the postage on any newspaper not weighing more than three ounces, to any point of the United States, one half cent.

Take, for illustration, a New York city paper, not weighing more than three ounces—say the New York Courier and Enquirer. Perhaps by taking that paper I will prevent treading on the toes of those gentlemen which I would do were I to take the Tribune or Herald. The Courier and Enquirer weighs three ounces, on which the postage for the daily paper the quarter to any point of the United States is forty-five and a half cents. Then there is carried through the mail the quarter to any point of the United States, ninety-one papers, each weighing three ounces, at forty-five and a half cents postage. One half that goes to the postmaster, and the other half to the Government. Twenty-two and three quarter cents the Government gets for the transportation of ninety-one papers, each weighing three ounces, to any part of the United States. Multiply ninety-one by three, and the weight of newspapers carried for that amount the quarter is a little over fifteen pounds. We transport then through the mail of the United States more than fifteen pounds weight from New York to San Francisco, at a revenue, after paying the commission of the postmaster, of twenty-two and three fourth cents. You cannot send a package by Adams & Co.'s express, from Baltimore to Washington, for the same sum that you receive for carrying ninety-one papers, weighing fifteen pounds, from New York to New Orleans, or New York to San Francisco. To send a package by express from New York to New Orleans, you would have to pay the company three, perhaps four times as much as is received by the mail of the United States for transporting the same weight, in newspapers, an equal distance. Now, I ask is this just, is it right?

Well, sir, we are told, and Mr. Greeley refers to it in his paper, that if we were to make everything passing through the mail pay its tribute according to the cost for transportation, we would derive sufficient revenue to sustain the Post Office Department, without necessity for further increase of postage. I admit the fact. I admit that if we make everything passing through the mail pay the actual cost for transportation to the Department, we shall need no increase of postage.

But I have been charged by the city press, in my attempt to raise letter postage from three to five cents, with an effort to impose a tax on the correspondence of the country. Let me make a comparison between postage on letters and that on newspapers. A letter from New York for New Orleans, weighing one half ounce, pays three cents postage. It pays six cents the ounce, ninety-six cents the pound, and $14 40 the fifteen pounds. The New York Daily Courier and Enquirer weighs fifteen pounds the quarter, and pays forty-five and a half cents postage. The same rate of postage on newspapers as now exists with reference to letters would require the payment on that weight of $14 40 postage.

Now, I would ask, what reason is there to charge $14 40 postage on fifteen pounds of letter from New York to New Orleans, and only forty-five and one half cents for the same weight of newspaper? Is it just? Is it right? Is it justice to the Treasury and Government of the United States? Is it justice to the Post Office Department, when you desire to extend and grant mail facilities to every section of the country, to compel them to transport these newspapers at one fourth less than what it would cost to send them as freight by any of the express companies of the United States?

In the effort which I am making to do away with the provision of the law of 1852 which makes a reduction in postage of fifty per cent. upon the prepayment of newspapers, I feel that I have no private interests to subserve. I am not connected in any way with the newspaper press of the country; and my only desire is, that you should do justice to the revenues of the Post Office Department, and that you shall make this paper circulation pay something like its cost of transportation in the mails of the United States. I call upon gentlemen in this House—the guardians of the public Treasury—who are willing to do and to exact justice in all things, to exact justice from the city press which is benefited by this reduction of fifty per cent. to the tune of a great many thousands of dollars annually. If your Government must pay a bonus out of the Treasury of the United States indirectly in the way of postage to sustain the city press, why, do the thing openly and fairly, and make these papers pay their cost of transportation in the mails of the United States, and then say, if you choose, that every newspaper published in a city shall receive in money from the Treasury of the United States what you now give it in the form of reduced postage. A proposition of that kind before the Congress of the United States would not obtain a single vote, not even from gentlemen representing the city of New York or Philadelphia; and you could not get them to pay to the newspapers out of the Treasury of the United States what you are now giving them by way of a reduction of postage.

Taking in connection the fact that you have always required prepayment of postage on newspapers, and the fact that this little proviso crept in unawares into the law of 1852, which only carried out what was a regulation of the Department before, and I ask what reason is there, in justice and in truth, that we should retain this provision of the law of 1852 making this reduction of fifty per cent. for prepayment? There might be some kind of justice in making a distinction between prepaid and unpaid letters, from the fact that if you require prepayment, you do not lose anything on account of dead letters. But I ask, what substantial reason is there, more than a bonus to the city press, why you should make this reduction of fifty per cent.?

Believing that I have explained this matter at sufficient length, and that I have made myself clearly understood by members of the House, I shall yield the floor to any gentleman who wishes to oppose this bill. I hope, however, that the bill may receive the favorable consideration of the House.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio if the effect of the bill will not be to increase the rates of newspaper postage?

Mr. OLDS. I will answer the gentleman. The rates will remain just as they are now by law.

Mr. WASHBURNE. Does it not take from the subscriber the privilege of paying his postage in advance, and getting a discount of fifty per cent.?

Mr. OLDS. Yes, sir; I will inform the gentleman and the House of the rates on newspapers, as they will be if this bill should become a law. The schedule has been made out by the Department.

On daily newspapers weighing not exceeding three ounces, circulating in the State where published, the postage per quarter will be forty-five and a half cents; for papers published six days in the week, thirty-nine cents; for tri-weekly papers, nineteen and a half cents; for semi-weekly, thirteen cents; for weekly papers, six and a half cents; for semi-monthly, three cents; and for monthly papers, one and a half cents. For a daily paper weighing not exceeding three ounces, and circulating out of the State where published, the postage per quarter will be, should this bill become a law, ninety-one cents; for six-day papers, seventy-eight cents; for tri-weekly, thirty-nine cents; for semi-weekly, twenty-six cents; for weekly, thirteen cents; for semi-monthly, six cents; and for monthly, three cents.

These will be the rates of newspaper postage, should this bill become a law.

Mr. WASHBURNE. I think I understand the gentleman. This bill proposes to take away from the subscribers the right of making this discount; and it is to that extent a tax on the intelligence of the community; and, consequently, I am opposed to the gentleman's bill.

Mr. CHANDLER took the floor.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURNE] a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield the floor to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. I will put the question to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I desire to hear some reason assigned why the Post Office Department should not support itself? I have not heard any reason for it yet.

Mr. CHANDLER. It would require me to go into an argument to answer the gentleman's question. And I propose, in the few remarks I have to make, not to occupy more than three or four minutes in replying to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS.] But, I will, in one word, reply to the question of the gentleman from Virginia, as I know he never puts a question unless in good faith.

Whenever the Government of any country assumes to exercise its sovereignty and interfere with private enterprise, that Government has no right to assert its power to enrich itself by such interference with private enterprise.

Mr. SMITH. How does the Government interfere with private interests, when it charges no more than is necessary to defray the cost of transportation, &c.?

Mr. CHANDLER. I answer, that the Government does charge more—two or three times more—for carrying one half of the letters than individuals would carry them for. And this it does with the view of spreading the benefits of its interference over every portion of the country. The theory is, that those who pay the most postage by sending most letters pay the higher postage in order that the benefits of the system may be general.

But, sir, I did not rise to enter upon any defense of the city press, which has been assailed by my friend from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS.] nor to enter upon any invidious comparison between the press of the city and of the country. We all know that the press is regarded as the palladium of our liberties. We all know that the information necessary to initiate men into statesmanship is that which they acquire day by day as the daily pabulum of their political life. And we all know that connected with that, there goes forth with political sentiments the moral sentiment, which, while it sanctifies, pervades the whole. If all the press has not come up to that standard of excellence, it is not the fault of the press generally, but it is an error which has crept into it. And when any portion of it may have deserved the censure of the honorable gentleman from Ohio, it is a happy circumstance that this portion is the exception and not the rule.

If we are occasionally called upon to blush for the use of language, and for the utterance of sentiments inconsistent with our views as republicans and moralists, we are more frequently called upon—if we would praise as willingly as we would blame—to laud the lofty sentiments and the pure principles which pervade almost all our newspapers. But the question before us is, whether the price for conveying newspapers shall be reduced in case of prepayment.

Were it not for that, I should be able to go on, and run a parallel between the two newspapers. I should consider the sentiment once uttered upon this floor by a member of this House, as felicitating himself upon the fact that there was not a single newspaper published in his district. I wondered at the remark, because that man was a politician. But my friend from Accomac [Mr. Henry A. Wise] told us that it was not because there was not a newspaper there, but because there was none printed there. He glorified himself upon the sound and pure principles which prevailed in his district, because they lived upon the newspapers of Baltimore, Richmond, and Philadelphia. [Laughter.]

Another thing: The gentleman makes an argument upon the amount of reduction. He declares that so much is paid for that large blanket sheet, the New York Courier and Inquirer, and that one half of that, if prepaid, is to be deducted; and he argues that the conveyance of that sheet is onerous, burdensome, and costly to the Government. That is not so. No man undertakes to convey freight generally upon which he could not say that he would lose by the conveyance of any single article. He would lose by the conveyance, if only the single article were to be paid for. But the income of the Post Office Department is not derived from the conveyance of one newspaper, but it derives it from what it carries generally.

But the honorable gentleman says there should not be a deduction for prepayment. Now, let me say to him, that the moment you change the policy, the receipt from those papers will cease, and they will no longer occupy the mails. Now, he says that if they do not pay, the sooner they leave the mail the better. I say they do pay; for you will never pay a cent less for the transportation of the mails between New York and Washington, merely because one newspaper or publication is omitted from the mail. You pay for conveying the whole mail; you pay for a whole mail car, and for a mail agent and deputy postmaster in that car, and you will pay the same whether there is one or a thousand newspapers in the mail.

Now, there arrived in this city last night, from New York, copies of the Times, and of the unfortunate Tribune—unfortunate in incurring the displeasure of my friend on the other side of the House—upon which postage was paid. But another publisher, keener in his calculations, took care to send his publication by the express, and hundreds of them were distributed throughout the city last night, and paid for; but they paid no tax to support our Post Office Department; no tax by which to assist in redeeming the credit of that Department. This will always be the case so long as you tax them beyond what it would cost to carry them in the private expresses from one large city to another. These newspaper publishers are shrewd in their calculation of cost of publishing and transportation—gifted to make money, and a little more given to spend it. And so true as they find that they can send their papers through the express for a quarter of a cent a piece, so true as they find that they can supply their customers by express at a cheaper rate than through the mails, so true will they make use of the expresses, and laugh at the appliances of the Post Office Department; and that is the reason why I say the rates of postage should not be increased.

"But," says the honorable gentleman from Ohio, "why should they pay only half a cent postage upon a newspaper, when a letter would cost six or seven times as much? Why should we make this discrimination?" Mr. Speaker, my answer to the honorable gentleman is, that this question involves the whole question of the liberty and protection of the press—that in all countries where it is deemed desirable that the people generally should be informed upon public measures—in all countries where the respect of popular opinion has prevalence—there is, and always has been, legislation in favor of the circulation of the public press.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the expresses will carry letters and papers cheaper than they are carried through the mails?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH. Will the gentleman then be good enough to inform me why it is that the expresses do now charge so much more?

Mr. CHANDLER. They charge more perhaps upon a single paper, but not when they are sent in packages.

Mr. SMITH. But why do they charge more upon letters?

Mr. CHANDLER. They do not.

Mr. SMITH. The gentleman is mistaken in that statement. When I was in California, I paid as much as fifty cents for a single letter sent by express, when, if it had been sent through the mail, it would have been forty cents under the then high rates of postage; and afterwards, when the postage was reduced to ten cents a letter, the express still charged fifty cents.

Mr. CHANDLER. I say that the expresses would carry letters and papers between any points upon the Atlantic coast for less than it costs to send them through the mails.

Mr. SMITH. But it is a great mistake to say that the expresses do now carry letters for less than the cost of sending them through the mails.

Mr. CHANDLER. The expresses would carry them cheaper between points upon the Atlantic coast.

Mr. SMITH. The gentleman says the expresses will carry the newspaper mail cheaper than the Government now carry it. How does he reconcile this statement with the argument he is now making against this bill, upon the ground that it will increase the burdens upon newspapers? Why does not the statement that private expresses will now carry them cheaper than the mails, supersede the other argument against this bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. For the reason that the other argument, that the Post Office Department should sustain itself, supersedes the argument in favor of carrying papers by private expresses at all. My argument is, that the cheapness of the article will increase the supply, and thereby increase the receipts. For instance, wherever the fares upon railroads have been reduced, the amount of travel has been increased. Wherever the prices of newspapers have been diminished, the number of subscribers has been increased. That has been the effect of the reduction of postage upon newspapers.

The honorable gentleman from Ohio undertook to remove the force of that argument, so far as England is concerned, by saying that newspapers there pay a tax to the Government. Well, sir, it is now well understood that newspapers pass free through the mails in England. Gentlemen are also aware that the tax upon newspapers has of late been very greatly reduced, and that every act of legislation in England has been to reduce the burdens upon newspapers, and for the encouragement of an increased circulation.

Mr. SMITH. But the Post Office Department in England pays a revenue into the general Treasury.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir; £200,000 per annum.

Mr. SMITH. That makes a very great difference. The fact that the Post Office Department in Great Britain pays a revenue into the Treasury, and that in this country it is a tax upon the general Treasury, furnishes a very good reason why we should not adopt the same policy in reference to our postage laws.

Mr. CHANDLER. It furnishes a very good reason, it seems to me, why we should adopt a like policy.

Mr. OLDS. I will state to the gentleman that the revenue arising from the Post Office Department in England is $6,000,000 more than the expenses of that Department.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am under very great obligations to the gentleman for a statement which adds strength to my argument. I confess that I was slow to admit it at first; but, sir, it adds much strength to my argument. The British Government now receive $2,000,000 revenue from their Post Office Department, as the effect of adopting their penny postage system, and of keeping down the rates of postage. It is the effect of sending their newspapers free through the mails. So much, then, for cheap postage.

Mr. SMITH. Six millions of dollars.

Mr. CHANDLER. So much the stronger.

Mr. SMITH. If the gentleman wants to make a regular argument, I should dislike to interrupt him. But I would ask whether the gentleman does not recognize a wide difference between a small, densely settled country, and one like ours?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do, sir; and a very great difference. Therefore it is that I submit to a postage on newspapers, and an augmented postage on letters. That makes the difference.

I did not rise to make an argument, but a short explanation in favor of the public press; and to say that this attempt to augment the postage by repealing that part which enables the postmaster to receive one half, if paid in advance, has a tendency to injure the very object we ought to have in view.

And there is another thing. Year after year we are beset here with changes; year after year we are asked to conform to some new regulations; year after year the friends of public information are called on to defend their position; and year after year the Government appeals here for some alteration. All I ask is, that we may be allowed to try what we have got. Do not alter it. It is doing pretty well. But we are like the boy who planted the bean, and, morning after morning, pulled it up to see whether it had taken root, and was likely to produce anything. Let us wait a little. Let us plant in some faith. Let us look for the wholesome dews of public patronage, and increased information among our people, and then we shall have what we want. Then the Post Office Department may get back to a paying one, and, more than that, a contributing Department to the Treasury when we need it.

Gentlemen always seem to talk of the Post Office Department. Well, the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads is right then. He has a right to look after the mail, because it is his business to do so. But I wish to say that there are other persons who have rights, and that the reduction of the postage is in behalf of the mass of readers, all of whom are the readers of newspapers, all of whom ought to be enabled to take and pay for some newspaper in the country. All, I believe, do. Reduce the postage, then, encourage prepayment, and consider that, if there is no prepayment, the loss of each quarter and year is to be deducted, and that inconvenience will result. If there is prepayment, there ought to be an advantage resulting to the prepayors.

I do not wish to press this matter further. I merely wish to say, not as the advocate of a public press, though I ought to be, not as the defender of any rights of publishers, though I have been of the number, not out of any desire to laud the character or condition of editors, though I have needed that laudation, and tried to give it; not at all, sir; but I simply ask that we may have one stable law among us; that we may run on one year longer with this experiment, and see whether we cannot, as they have done in England, raise the revenue from a deficiency to a surplus. There, sir, they have, in a few years, increased it from millions of deficiency to six millions of profit. It is all I ask. No country paper can or will find fault. No country paper in which my friend feels an interest will mourn over it. There is not a country paper in the world that does not know that its circulation is increased, vastly increased, by the effect on the public mind of the better informed city press. Who does not know that every paper which comes into his county creates an appetite for further reading? Increase of appetite for newspaper reading is like that which the poet inspires. It certainly grows by what it feeds on. And let us have an opportunity of circulating, at as low rate as possible, that species of pabulum which, instead of palling on the public appetite, vitiating public morals, goes to strengthen and establish true principles among us.

Give us intercourse between the North and South, the East and the West, and then every press becomes a means of public good, and every newspaper becomes a point of union between different sections of the country. A common sentiment and sympathy of feeling between all parts of the country are of infinite consequence in political ethics. I will not trouble the House any further, as I have already gone beyond the time to which I had designed limiting myself.

Mr. BARRY. One of the propositions to which I object, connected with this subject of postages, is, that the Government is bound to carry any man's letters for less than the actual cost of transportation. The idea seems to be prevalent that it is the duty of the Government to transport the mails for nothing; but you might as well say, in my opinion, that it was the duty of the Government to deliver the merchandise of the country for nothing. The system of postages originated at a time when the Government desired to make money out of it, and it was a means of levying taxation upon the people. This is one extreme of the system. The other extreme is, that the Government shall carry letters, and that the tax payers shall supply the Treasury with the money to pay the cost of transportation. One extreme is as equally wide of the truth as the other. The true medium is, that the individuals who enjoy the benefits of the postal system shall pay its expenses. If I receive a letter which costs me three cents, but which it costs the Government five cents to deliver, there is no obligation resting upon any other man, or set of men, to pay the additional two cents. There is no obligation upon others to pay for that which I receive as private property. If a letter comes to me it is for my benefit, and it comes at my desire. Is it fair or just that any other man who does not receive the benefit shall be called upon to pay a share of the expense? Extend this principle, and after a time you will require letters and newspapers to be carried for nothing; and then, in one form or another, the post office system will become a mere "Adams's express," running into every town and village of the country, for the delivery of private property free of expense.

There is a common sense limit in this thing, and that is, that the Post Office Department should pay its expenses. If you send a letter from one end of the Union to the other, and it costs the Government five cents, you ought to pay five cents, and not call upon your neighbors to share the burden. If you take either extreme you depart from what I conceive to be sound principle. Another position assumed here is, because individuals may carry mail matter between the great cities cheaper than the Government does, that, therefore, mail matter all over the country should be carried at the same rate. You can carry letters and papers between large cities at a cheaper rate, for the simple reason that there is a large amount carried there. If you should leave the carrying of mail matter to private enterprise, as has been advised, nine tenths of the post offices of the country would be unsupplied, because those who monopolize the lines between the great cities that pay, would not take the lines going to the small towns and villages through the country, which would not pay. If you continue the present number of mail routes and the present number of trips, and individuals bind themselves to deliver the mails just as they are delivered now, then they can make no more profit than the Government, because they will have to save the profits of the main lines between the larger cities to make up the losses in carrying on the lines between the small towns and villages. This proposition of reducing the postages between the large cities is throwing the whole burden of the Post Office Department upon the shoulders of the people. The long and short of this whole matter is, that the tax upon letters and papers should be paid by those who receive them.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will my honorable friend from Mississippi allow me to make a remark?

Mr. BARRY. With pleasure.

Mr. CHANDLER. I believe that my desire was to express that opinion. I have said on a former occasion, when I am sure I had not the pleasure of having my friend for an auditor, that the conveyance of all the letters between the mercantile portions of the Union—for instance between Baltimore and Boston—can be done for one cent each letter. But, that the system of mails may be kept up, I have said that the mercantile portion of the community should submit to this tax of two hundred per cent. The gentleman will perceive that this is our argument: that for this purpose the man who sends a thousand letters per week would have to pay three cents on each of them, in order that persons who send only one or two letters may have the benefit of having them conveyed for three cents each.

Mr. BARRY. I think that, as the Post Office Department is a system regularly established for the benefit of the whole country, we cannot change it, in the manner proposed, without destroying it; that we cannot allow one line, which pays well, to be monopolized for individual enterprise, and leave other lines of less importance to be entirely dependent on themselves.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the gentleman excuse one other remark?

Mr. BARRY. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is this: that when we go one grade over beyond this tax we speedily induce the system of private carrying of letters along the coast for the purpose of saving postage. Besides, all the express companies deliver the packages sent by them sooner than the mails do. We should be cautious, therefore, not to tax too much, lest we drive the people to resort to other means, and lest we thus break down the whole system of the post office. This is my doctrine.

Mr. BARRY. The position assumed is this: that on lines where the postage is more than the expenses, the rate of postage should be reduced; and that the minor lines, where they do not collect postage enough to pay the expenses of carrying the mails, should be left to themselves. Why do not the gentlemen who advocate this system endeavor to apply it to the other branches of the Government? Why do they not extend the doctrine to the tariff of the United States? If it were extended to the tariff, the customs paid by Mississippi, which are perhaps between $500,000 and $1,000,000, would be spent within her borders, and not lavished on the Atlantic and other States, by whom the tariff duties are not paid. Notwithstanding the State of Mississippi contributes largely to the Treasury of the United States, the pay of her members of Congress is, perhaps, more than all the money annually expended by the Federal Government within her borders. If it be unjust that any State should pay more to the Post Office Department than is spent for mail facilities within her borders, it is equally unjust that any State should pay into the Treasury more than is spent by the Government in her limits. Somewhat more is charged to Mississippi for mail routes in the State—whether correctly or not I shall not now inquire—and we are advised that we should be thankful that we are allowed so much more from the Department than we pay into it.

This thirty or forty thousand dollars, by which the expenses of the Department in our State are said to exceed the postages, puts us under weighty obligations; but no account is made of the half million or more we annually pay into the Treasury, of which we do not have $25,000 spent in the State. The cities are anxious to dissolve the post office partnership with us, upon the slightest suspicion that they pay a sixpence more than their absolute proportion, but quite willing to keep up another connection by which we pay and they spend. They do not desire that the States should contribute to the Federal expense in the degree in which they receive the disbursements, for that would quadruple their burdens, and diminish even more signally the Federal patronage on which they thrive. If the gentlemen from Boston, New York, and Philadelphia desire, upon what they esteem principles of justice, to monopolize all the profits of the Post Office Department, and receive from it every cent they pay into it, let them mete out to Mississippi, and other consuming States of the West and South, in the way of Federal patronage, all that those States pay into the National Treasury.

Mr. CHANDLER. Do we not pay twenty per cent. on all the sugar and molasses we consume?

Mr. BARRY. Notwithstanding the much we pay and the little we receive from the Federal Government, if we ask a weekly horse mail, we are told that the Department spends more in our State than the postages amount to, and the revenues of the Department are appropriated to mails once, twice, and thrice, and four times a day upon the Atlantic sea-board. It is now proposed to make us pay for this monopoly, by which justice is denied us, in addition to paying the expenses of the Federal Government. These expenses come out of the consuming States in the form of a tariff, and if any addition to the expenses of the Government is made, it is paid in the same way, and by the same persons.

If the Post Office Department is a burden upon the Treasury, it is simply adding to the burdens of those who now support the Government for the benefit of those who are exempt from them, and thus, those who shuffle off upon others their due share of the national support, desire also that their postage should be paid by others. There is no limit to the burdens which power and selfishness will impose upon the submissive and the weak. As soon as the idea is recognized as true, that a part of the postage of individuals should be paid by the Government, the same argument by which that fallacy is made popular will support with equal plausibility the doctrine that the Government should pay all the postage, and that no tax should be allowed to fetter the unlimited diffusion of knowledge. This plan is most agreeable to those who have the largest correspondence, and who will contribute least to the Treasury to pay for the expenses of the Post Office Department. It is a system devised to monopolize all benefits and escape all burdens.

The gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] in discussing the subject the other day, boasted that New York paid into the Post Office Department $350,000 more than her mail expenditures. But the gentleman forgot to tell you there was a line of mail steamers from New York to Liverpool, for which $850,000 are paid out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. HAVEN, (interrupting.) I beg my friend from Mississippi to bear in mind that I took that fact into due consideration; and every letter which the State of Mississippi, or Louisiana, or any other southern State sends abroad, finds its exit through the port of New York; and every return letter which comes back in reply, also finds its terminus at that place. That line, then, is established not for our letters alone, but for yours also; for the letters of the whole Union.

Mr. BARRY. Yes, sir; but where we get one letter, you get ten thousand; and, in addition, you have the benefit of the terminus of the line at that port. That is a great benefit to New York; if it is not, make the terminus at some other city. Propose this, and you will soon see a "civil insurrection" there. I repeat, propose to make any other port the terminus, and listen if New York does not complain that the change would deprive her of a great benefit. Transfer it to Baltimore, Philadelphia, or New Orleans, and you will quickly hear the argument that the line is of more importance to New York than to all the Union besides.

The gentleman forgot also to tell you that the San Francisco line terminates at New York, and therefore one-half of the cost of that line ($850,000) should be charged to New York, and to that the Bremen and Southampton line, also starting from New York, at a cost of $400,000 or $500,000, and it seems to me that the gentleman's boast of the New York surplus is disposed of. Four hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars for the California line, $850,000 for the Collins line, and some $400,000 (the precise amount I do not remember) for the Bremen line, make a total of $1,675,000, which is to be charged to New York, and from which the vaunted surplus of $350,000 is to be deducted, leaving $1,325,000 deficit in the post office account of the State of New York. They all add to the wealth and commerce of New York, and foster that centralization of trade there which, hardly less than the marvelous facilities of her position, has contributed to her unrivaled growth and prosperity. If justice were done, the benefit of these lines would be divided, and other cities permitted to share advantages which are appropriated by one at the expense of all.

In discussing the subject some days since, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] ascribed to New York and New Orleans the postage paid at those two places upon through letters and papers, though there are not five miles of that whole line, fifteen hundred miles or more in length, in either of those States; and all the expense of transportation is ascribed to the intermediate States. So New York collects the ocean postage, and it makes a part of her surplus. When you come to deduct those New York ocean contracts from the surplus which the northern States pay to the Post Office Department, and which the southern do not pay, it is almost absorbed; and the State and city of New York, which have yielded such a surplus, and on account of which they are clamorous for cheaper postage, are the State and city of the Union which enjoy the preëminence of being more deeply indebted to the Post Office Department than any other.

This system of ocean steamers, and postage reduced below the actual cost of transportation, is unjust in the last degree; we ought to come back to sound principles, that we may escape the scourge of taxation to supply the demands made upon the Treasury for post office expenses, and that millions may not be annually squandered upon foreign mail lines, while there are portions of the countries denied the most indispensable mail facilities. Information must fly through the commercial sections on wings of fire and lightning, while it creeps through the agricultural regions so sluggishly and periodically as hardly to preserve vitality.

Let extremes be avoided; neither make the Post Office a source of revenue, nor make it the cause of taxation; let each man who receives a letter or paper through the mail pay his full share of the expense of transporting it; let the Department be administered with rigid, yet wise economy; let the postages of the country be reduced as low as will pay expenses, and let the burden of the Department fall on those who make use of it, and not upon the citizen who shares none of its benefits.

The argument that the reduction of postage is lightening the burdens of the masses is most fallacious, if the amount of the reduction is to come out of the Treasury. You only change the object of taxation; you shift the burden from one citizen to another; you abandon the simple, natural mode that he who gets a benefit shall pay for it at the time, and transfer the payment to a department of the Government which must use the expensive and dilatory machinery of tariffs. Who write most letters, and receive most newspapers? Not the poor and needy, but the rich and opulent? For one letter written by a man to whom the postage is an object, hundreds and thousands are written by those to whom postage is an insignificant item. Correspondence is mainly used by those to whom it is an instrument of lucrative business, or a luxury of social leisure. The merchants of New York write more letters than all the "servant girls," whose joys and sorrows are described as finding relief and vent in epistolary intercourse, in the whole Union.

But the taxes by which you will pay for this postage are levied upon the poor of the country. The tariff, we know, collects its impositions from the labor of the country rather than from its property. No citizen so humble as not to consume those articles on which revenue has been raised, or whose price has been enhanced by excluding the competition of the foreign manufacturer. Some men write no letters, and receive no papers; but all, even the paupers in the poor house, consume those articles which are taxed. While those who use the mails pay all the expense of carrying them, the weight falls mainly upon the wealth of the country; but when the Government pays the postage, it falls chiefly upon the labor of the people. For one dollar of relief afforded to the poor, ten will be afforded to the rich. The scheme is the offspring of the wealthy commercial classes, not of the poor or the agricultural. It is favorable to the manufacturer and merchant, but unjust to the farmer and the laborer. It tends to enrich the town and impoverish the country. It fosters centralization by making the General Government the dispenser of national bounty. It affords an excuse and a necessity for continuing a higher tariff than would otherwise be requisite; and perhaps all the advocates of a protection tariff will be found supporting the doctrine for that reason.

I recapitulate: there is no obligation upon the Government to transport the letters and papers of individuals at less than the actual cost; and it is unjust to cast upon all, the expense of that which is a private benefit to a smaller number; that it is unwise to spend millions on ocean mail lines while portions of the country are denied necessary facilities; that the Post Office Department should be economically conducted, and the postages should be graduated to the lowest price that will meet the expenses of the Department.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, obtained the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is the morning hour out?

The SPEAKER. There are about five minutes remaining.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman will give way for us to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH. I would prefer to go on now. The first question for this House to consider in connection with this bill is, "Shall this Government bear the expenses of the Post Office Department?"

It comes to that at last; and gentlemen will have to look at it, in my judgment, in that view alone. Now, will this Government undertake to pay the expenses of the Post Office Department, or will it require those who use that Department to do it? I shall not undertake to discuss that proposition at this time. The time is short, and I am not disposed to enlarge on the point, because every gentleman who hears me is as competent to pass on it as myself.

The particular proposition before us is for the increase of newspaper postage, and that object only. The express companies have the power to transport newspapers, and there is, of consequence, a direct issue between them and the Government. The gentleman on the other side says that expresses can, and will, transport the public mails cheaper than the Government. Then, here is a trial between them. The expresses now have the power to transport the newspaper mail. This bill proposes to increase their strength by augmenting the postage. Here, then, is a fair issue and fair test. If the expresses can carry the newspaper mails cheaper than the Government, the conclusion is plain that the expresses will have all the carriage. By the passage of the bill, the gentleman will have the direct experiment made.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Government will lose then so much more revenue by the loss of the revenue from newspaper postage; and, according to the gentleman's argument, we must augment letter postage.

Mr. SMITH. No, sir. The effect would be to establish the superiority of private expresses, and help to do away with Government agency. I want to see the demonstration, and this measure will help gentlemen's theories to their proper trial. Now, the question with the committee is, whether it will adopt this proposition when the important result is a test of theory. Why, sir, if I had no other reason for voting in favor of this bill, it would be for the fact that it is calculated to present the issue strongly to the country, whether the Government or private expresses can transport the public mails cheapest. Why not support it then? We ought to go for it. It contemplates nothing in the world but an increase of the rates of postage on the newspapers of the country. If private expresses, I repeat, can carry the mails cheaper than the Government, they will have the carriage of the whole of the mail matter. Then there will be no burden on the people.

The gentleman manifestly has reference to the city circulation; but I tell him that, even according to his view of the subject, he ought to go for the bill. If his position be correct, that private expresses can carry the mails cheaper than the Government, then by increasing the rates of postage on newspapers he will get the monopoly in the hands of those expresses, and the increased circulation of the city press is secured.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to state that the gentleman does not misrepresent my argument at all as regards the carrying by express cheaper than by the Government; but if we do away with the prolific and profitable operations, you dry up the resources of the Government towards aiding the extremities, and thereby greatly help to destroy the whole mail system, which the gentleman seems desirous to sustain.

Mr. SMITH. We dry up the resources, according to the gentleman, on newspaper transportation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. OLDS. Let me explain this point. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point, that in consequence of the increase of the rate of postage on newspapers, the expresses of the country would carry the newspapers. Now, the fact is precisely this: You have no law prohibiting the carrying of newspapers outside of the mails as you have prohibiting such carriage of letters. The expresses carry newspapers now when it is profitable to do so; but the moment the transportation of newspapers becomes unprofitable, it is turned over to the Government. The Government does not carry the newspapers from New York to Washington. They do not come through the mails, but they are delivered to readers here in this city by the express, and why? Because the Government charges just as much for a newspaper from the city of New York to Washington, as it does from New York to San Francisco. The express finds it profitable upon the short routes to carry newspapers, but upon those routes where it becomes unprofitable the Government must step in and take the burden. It is that of which we complain. Now, the gentleman makes an argument of this kind, that in consequence of carrying these newspapers you do not get anything more for the transportation of the mails. It is not true in fact, although it is true for the time being. Every four years you have a reletting of the mail service, and those who are employed are paid for the amount of service to be performed. If they take a contract for transporting six tons of mails, and you take five tons of newspapers out, they will not charge for carrying one ton as they do for six. It only operates for the time being, and therefore the argument of the gentleman does not hold good.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHANDLER] objects to the passage of the bill because it increases the burden upon the newspaper circulation. Is that the ground of the gentleman's objection? The gentleman turns round and says that private expresses will carry the newspaper mail cheaper than the Government. Private expresses have now the power to do it. How does the gentleman from Pennsylvania reconcile these inconsistent propositions?

Mr. CHANDLER. Easily. Private expresses carry newspapers between the large cities, and thus absorb a great amount of income from this source, leaving the burden upon the country press alone.

Mr. SMITH. I thank the gentleman for his care of the country. I represent a rural district to some extent, and I am happy to say that I am willing to take the burden proposed by this bill. I do not apprehend any difficulty. The gentleman may have private expresses to carry his mail if he chooses; but I support this bill because it embodies a great truth, and puts the burden for the carrying of newspapers where it ought to be placed.

Mr. WENTWORTH. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] has some considerable time left yet, I would suggest that he defer finishing his remarks till to-morrow, so that we may go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMITH. As it is a question touching newspaper postage, I had some desire to speak still further upon the general question, and run a parallel between this country and England, showing the error of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER.] But I will not do it now, under the circumstances. I will reserve what I desire to say further until to-morrow.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move, then, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. McMULLIN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill (No. 329) "making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law."

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] to the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. JONES], which is to strike out the appropriation of $100 in the amendment, and insert in lieu thereof $102,400.

Mr. RICHARDSON took the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inform the gentleman from Illinois that debate is not in order on the proposition now before the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to explain remarks made by me yesterday. It will take but half a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I ask the unanimous consent of the committee to allow me to make the explanation I desire.

General assent was expressed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I misunderstood the extent of the remarks of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. JONES] on yesterday. The extent to which the doctrine of Mr. Madison went to which I referred, was this: That the Government could not construct works of improvement inside of a State without the consent of the State.

Mr. LETCHER. I beg leave to remark, that that proves conclusively we have one more Democrat among us. [Laughter.]

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois, took the floor.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield me the floor for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs leave to inform gentlemen that debate is not in order.

Mr. JONES. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a single remark.

General assent was expressed.

Mr. JONES. I merely desire to state, that what I meant to say yesterday, was precisely what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] has stated this morning. It was, that when the General Government has power to make internal improvements in a State—and I believe it has, in some cases—it should certainly make them with the consent of the State.

Mr. LETCHER. I now withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. JONES's amendment; which was read, as follows:

For continuing the improvements on the raft on Red river, $100. And be it further enacted, That the joint resolution entitled "A resolution explanatory of the act appropriating money for the removal of the raft on Red river," approved January 7, 1853, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and that the Secretary of the Department of War be authorized to expend the appropriation in reference to the Red river raft in such a way, and for such purposes, as he may approve, having in view the improvement of the navigation of said river in and around the said raft.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I call for tellers on the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS, of Alabama, and Cox, were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 42; no quorum voting.

The roll was then called, the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 392, and having found itself without a quorum, had ordered the roll to be called, and directed him to report the facts to the House, together with the names of the absentees.

The following is the list of absentees:

Messrs. James C. Allen, Appleton, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Ball, Bell, Benton, Bissell, Bocock, Breckinridge, Caskey, Chase, Chastain, Chrisman, Clingman, Cook, Culion, Cumming, Curtis, Dawson, Dent, De Witt, Dowdell, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Etheridge, Ewing, Faulkner, Flagler, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Goodrich, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Hendricks, Hunt, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kurtz, Lane, Lyon, McNair, Mace, Maxwell, Meacham, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Peck, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Pringle, Riddle, Simmons, Singleton, William R. Smith, Alexander H. Stephens, Tracy, Walbridge, Warren, Witte, and Hendrick B. Wright.

One hundred and sixty-eight members having answered to their names, the House again resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. McMULLIN in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the river and harbor bill; the pending question being upon the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. JONES, of Louisiana, upon which tellers had been ordered.

Mr. HAVEN. I rise to inquire whether it is in order to offer a substitute for the pending amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

The question was taken on Mr. JONES's amendment; and the tellers reported—ayes 74, noes 59. So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to amend the fifteenth line of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That part of the bill has been passed, and it is not now in order to revert.

Mr. WASHBURN. I thought that it was in order to amend any portion of a section before we have passed to the section succeeding.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to turn back to amend any portion of the bill which has been passed. The Clerk is reading the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move an addition to the section, as follows:

For the improvement of the Des Moines rapids, in the Mississippi river, $232,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there in existence any law authorizing the appropriation?

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is. In the bill now under consideration there is an appropriation of $18,000 for the same improvement. I wish the appropriation to be increased to the estimates of the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. In what portion of the bill is the $18,000 appropriation?

Mr. RICHARDSON. In the twelfth and thirteenth lines.

The CHAIRMAN. That portion of the bill having been passed, the amendment is not in order.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The Chair misapprehends my motion. I do not move to strike out the $18,000 appropriation, but only to add to the section an appropriation for the improvement of the Des Moines rapids of $232,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will confine gentlemen, in submitting amendments, strictly to the provisions of the rule.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I shall not go outside of the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I offer, then, the following amendment:

For continuing the improvement of the Des Moines rapids, in the Mississippi river, $232,000.

I understand it was the avowed purpose of the committee to report such appropriations as the Department and officers in charge of the works recommend for the continuation of those works. The officers in charge of the work in question estimate the amount necessary for its completion at $250,000. I ask the attention of the committee while I read an extract from the report of Colonel Long, who, I believe, is the officer in charge of this work. It is to be found in the third part of the message and accompanying documents for 1853 and 1854:

The cost of improving the Des Moines rapids by the adoption of the method of sluice navigation, as estimated by Colonel Lee, is as follows, viz:

Blasting and removing 94,811 cubic yards of rock, at $2, $191,622.

I am inclined to think that the estimated quantity just stated, is somewhat short of the amount required for a sluice having a clear width of 200 feet, and would accordingly assume for the amount in round numbers, excavation required, 100,000 cubic yards, which would give for the probable cost of the work of blasting, &c., at $2 per cubic yard,

To which should be added, on account of hindrances and unavoidable interruptions, including buoys, chains, anchors, &c., at least twenty-five per cent, viz. 50,000

..... $250,000

I desire to say that it is utterly impossible to benefit the navigation of that portion of the river by an appropriation of $18,000. If the Government is to make the improvement so as to benefit the navigation of the river at that point, they ought to have the money asked by the officer having the work in charge. I do not undertake, nor shall I undertake, to say, that $25,000 will complete the work; but, unless we have that amount, the officers in charge of the work can do but little good there.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Page 228 gives the entire estimate as my colleague gives it. But if you turn to the 220th page, you will there find what the Department thought necessary for a single year. In that page the Department calls for $18,000 for this purpose.

Mr. HENN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois, whether or not that estimate of $18,000 contemplated working only on one place at the rapids, and whether it is not competent for the engineer to work at half a dozen or a dozen places at the same time?

Mr. WENTWORTH. It is left entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of War and the engineer. The work was begun under one Administration, and we propose to complete it under this Administration. It is understood that the topographical corps does not belong to any political party, or to any local party, and they have no object in view except to carry out the services confided to them.

Mr. HENN. That is not the point to which I wished to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois. It is this: that if a sufficient amount be appropriated the work can be carried on along the whole line of the obstructions, and thereby the work can be performed in one year instead of its consuming ten years.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I propose to amend the amendment of my colleague, as follows:

Provided, That said sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in prosecuting said improvement according to the plan of Colonel R. E. Lee.

When I was cut off in my remarks yesterday, I said I should move to increase the appropriation for the rapids in the upper Mississippi river, and I now desire to explain to the committee the precise situation of matters connected with this work. The first appropriation under which the survey of these rapids was made, was made in 1837. The survey was made by Colonel Lee, one of the most accomplished engineers in the United States service. He prepared his plans and made his estimates, and in an official document, which I hold here, he made a report which was approved by the engineering department of the Government for the improvement of the Des Moines and Rock Island rapids. His estimates, prepared after a most thorough survey, are put down in his report which I have before me. He estimated $189,000 as the sum necessary to improve the Des Moines rapids, and $154,000 for the Rock River rapids, according to his plans and survey.

This report has never been called in question; these estimates have never been invalidated, but the work has not been done as the engineer proposed it should be done. Two years ago there was an appropriation of $100,000 made for the improvement of both these rapids. That appropriation, as I stated yesterday, has been partially frittered away by a resurvey. One third of it—$33,000—as shown by the report here, has already been spent, for what purpose I know not, leaving $66,000 to be expended.

Now, my colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] has referred to the estimate of one of the officers of the Government—an engineer—showing that this plan of Colonel Lee should be adopted; and showing the amount that Congress should appropriate for the accomplishment of this object. My other colleague [Mr. WENTWORTH] states here, in opposition to this, that there is another part of the report which calls for the appropriation of $18,000. That appropriation of $18,000, sir, I contend, is utterly inadequate to any useful purpose as connected with the completion of the work in accordance with the original estimates, and in accordance with what common justice demands should be done, but it is for the purpose of making these new surveys which, I believe, are useless, and which may defeat the objects of the appropriation. We have surveys here made by accomplished men; and we have appropriations here recommended to us very recently, and by competent authority, and why not adopt them?

But let me say, as I said yesterday, that this plan of Colonel Lee is pronounced by all the steamboat men upon the river as the best which can be adopted. I have in my hands a letter from one of the most experienced navigators upon that river, going to show that it should be adopted. His letter is as follows:

GALENA, ILLINOIS, December 12, 1853.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiries in relation to the improvement of the rapids of the Mississippi, I can only say, that I know of no feasible plan other than that reported by Lieutenant, now Major R. E. Lee, to General Gratiot, Chief Engineer United States Army, in 1838. It is comprised in a report of the Secretary of War, Senate Document, No. 139, of the Twenty-Fifth Congress, second session. Five years constant employment, in all stages of water, over this part of our river, has confirmed me in the opinion, that it is the only mode by which efficient and permanent "improvements" can be made. There is not a single change from the plans submitted by Major Lee that I could suggest. The channel requires the same work now that it did then. There has been no change, or likely to be for the next fifty years, as on both rapids the river flows over a bed of limestone, cut up into pools. No better idea or description of the nature of the obstructions, or what work is necessary to remove them, can be found than in Major Lee's details and maps. The improvements, if made as he has suggested, would place as great a depth of water over the channel as has been over many of the sand-bars above and below them this season, say four feet. The surveys made this year are generally looked upon as being as useless as a resurvey of the Capitol would be, in order that members might ascertain its location. Time and money both wasted—cui bono. It has always seemed to me, that the plan of operating on both rapids at the same time, was injudicious. The character of the work, submarine blasting, removing the debris, boulders, &c., being the same, similar boats, materials, tools, &c. are required; consequently double the expense would be incurred in thus operating, and the ultimate loss to the Government or contractor, after the completion of the work, (which, if prosecuted in accordance with Lee's plan, would be permanent, requiring no repairs or alterations,) would be in the sale or disposal of two sets of boats, &c., instead of one. And should the Department persist in its present course, and attempt to operate by contract, would, as you will readily perceive, greatly increase the expense. We cannot expect to see much greater progress made than has been effected in the past two seasons. Unless the Department determines to take the work in hand, and place it under charge of some efficient officer of the engineer, or some competent civilian, I do not believe much more will be done than what has already been accomplished—defining the position of rocks and chains, the locality of which we are perfectly familiar with. If Major Lee, for instance, could be placed in charge of these improvements, I believe they would be more effectually and economically prosecuted than by adopting any other course. I name Major Lee, (having no personal acquaintance with him,) as, in my opinion, far better acquainted with the character of the obstructions, and the requisite means to be taken to remove them, than any other officer. It has ever been my opinion, that operations should be commenced on the upper or Rock Island rapids, for the following reasons: It will require a much shorter time to improve them; the "chains" are shorter, and the average of water deeper, there being generally twelve inches more water in the upper than in that of the lower rapids.

From this state of things arises the fact that there are no facilities, other than those used by the steamboat and belonging to her used in transporting freight, consequently any steamboat freighting from a port above them can only transport the quantity of cargo in her hull and barges as will permit her safely to cross them. But so soon as she arrives at Rock Island or Davenport she can then commence taking in additional cargo, and frequently to a much larger amount than all she could cross the rapids with, and after taking in a full load proceeds on to Montrose on the head of the lower rapids, the master being well assured that he will find a sufficient number of "rapids lighters" to transport his whole cargo to Keokuk. Should the water be so low on the "rocks so high" as to prevent him crossing with his steamboat, he can reship his freight and send forward his passengers to St. Louis on boats that are engaged in the "Keokuk trade." Now, apply this state of facts to freight destined for ports above St. Clair, (head of upper rapids,) say a large part of Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, and all of Minnesota, and what is the result? A steamboat cannot take in for any port in the section above named, a larger quantity of freight than she is enabled to cross the upper rapids with, although this may not be one fourth of her actual capacity, while on the lower rapids from facilities there offered, she has passed over to her all she can swim under, and which she may transport to the foot of the Rock Island rapids. Here, if she has more freight for ports above than she is enabled to go over with, she must either "double trip it," or store her freight. The removing of the obstructions on the upper rapids would open up for us uninterrupted navigation from Montrose to St. Anthony, a distance of six hundred miles, whereas, now a boat cannot transport her full tonnage but one hundred and fifty miles, say from Montrose to Davenport, and from thence to St. Anthony, four hundred and fifty miles, she can only transport the quantity she can "go over" the upper rapids with. You are, however, too familiar with all these facts for me to enlarge upon them, and give in detail all the inconveniences that we who reside above the rapids are subjected to. Any person familiar with the commercial usages of the country above the rapids, is aware that "I have as much freight as I can cross the rapids with," is a sufficient and valid reason for not taking freight, although it might be in a situation where it would be totally lost or destroyed were it not shipped upon the boat then "refusing" it for this sole reason. It is estimated, (and I think it not high,) that no less than $15,000 has been lost during the present season by sinking, grounding, and detention of boats. On the upper rapids last year, I should think $30,000 would not more than cover the losses. When I assure you that thirty dollars per ton has been paid on merchandise from St. Louis to Galena this fall, which had the rapids been improved, would have been transported for from eight to ten dollars; you can readily understand that it is a matter of some importance to the whole country above the rapids to see this work progressing, the obstructions removed, and a free highway opened up to a southern market for our products at a cost for transportation of something less than its full market value.

Yours, respectfully, E. H. BEEBE.
Hon. E. B. WASHBURN, Washington City.

Now, sir, unless we go forward and make this improvement, every dollar which has been heretofore expended may be wasted and frittered away in the manner I have suggested, by new experiments and resurveys. Let us make this appropriation, as estimated for by Colonel Long, and that, according to the proviso, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk, this work shall be done according to the plan of Colonel Lee, and then we will have an improvement so long neglected and which the interests of the West and of the whole country imperatively demand.

Mr. EASTMAN. In reference to the expenditure of this money, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois if there has been a single rock removed?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would answer the gentleman by stating what I yesterday said on this floor, that not a single rock has been removed from the channel, nor a single obstruction taken away.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I will only say, in reply to the remarks of my colleague, that if we adopt the course he proposes, in order to do justice to every other work in this bill, we should go back and revise the whole estimates, and all the appropriations; and add to them the total amount of all the works in this bill, so as to complete them all in one single year. The same argument, which the gentleman uses in reference to this work, in which I feel as much interest as my colleague does, will equally apply to every item in the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN. Does not the gentleman know that this amount of money can be expended in one season, and that every dollar of it should be expended in one season? Does he not know that there is no use in going to great expense in obtaining machinery suitable and necessary for this work, one year, and letting it rot down, before another appropriation can be made by another Congress? Why not make the whole appropriation now, while it is wanted, and not render it necessary to come and ask for another appropriation?

Mr. WENTWORTH. I will answer the gentleman's question by asking another. Why not give at once, for the improvement of the whole Mississippi river, all the money that is necessary for that purpose? Do it now, the gentleman would say, and not come to Congress again, asking appropriations for that great river. Why not take all the harbors, and finish them now, this year? The same argument applies to the one case that is applicable to the other. That is all I have to say.

The question was then taken upon Mr. WASHBURN's amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon Mr. RICHARDSON's amendment.

Mr. MILLSON. I move to reduce the amount contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] to one dollar. I think, sir, after the vote just taken, that it is evident the House will not adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. But I take this occasion to say a word or two in relation to this bill, and the general system of appropriations embodied in it. As a member of the Committee on Commerce which reported this bill, it is perhaps my duty to do so. I do not mean to present any constitutional difficulties. That would be but a waste of ammunition. But I do desire to call the attention of the committee, and of the whole public, if I could, to some of the details—the objects sought to be accomplished by this bill. Really, sir, it would seem to be a scheme by which men undertake to remedy the imperfections of Providence. Every little stream cannot be converted into a wide and deep river. Every little town cannot become a great commercial emporium.

But, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] in urging his amendment, asked, why not appropriate the whole amount estimated by the Department? The gentleman seems to have fallen into two errors. No larger amount has been asked for as proper to be appropriated at this time than that stated in the bill; and, in the next place, the Department has made no estimates upon the subject.

This bill is not founded upon any estimates submitted to us by the Administration. Let the friends of the Administration remember that, in voting for this bill, they cannot shelter themselves under any recommendation from the Department. I repeat, that the Secretary of War has submitted no estimates for river and harbor improvements. It is true that certain officers in charge of these improvements have made certain reports to the War Department, and that these reports have been transmitted to this House by the Secretary of War. But the Administration have asked no appropriation for river and harbor improvements; nor has the Department sent any estimates of its own for that purpose. We have nothing before us but the reports of the officers in charge of these works. And yet gentlemen constantly refer to them as the estimates of the Department.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Do I understand the gentleman from Virginia to say that the Department has sent us no estimates for the improvement of rivers and harbors?

Mr. MILLSON. The gentleman understands me correctly.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then I would suggest that if these are not authorized estimates of the Department, we have nothing but the reports of those officers to depend on, and that we had better judge for ourselves what appropriations are necessary to accomplish the objects of this bill.

Mr. MILLSON. It is true that these officers estimate the whole cost of this work at $250,000, but they do not recommend that this whole amount should be appropriated at once. All they suggest as proper to be spent on this work during the coming year is $18,000. This bill would swell to most enormous proportions, if the whole sum necessary to complete each of the works for which appropriations are asked should be voted at once.

But, sir, my chief object was to show how many of these appropriations had grown from very small beginnings, and how utterly disproportioned are the vast sums now ascertained to be necessary for the completion of the work to the insignificant amounts first granted. But my time has so nearly expired that I cannot now do so.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. The honorable gentleman from Virginia threatens us again with the Administration. He notifies this House that if they make these appropriations, they will place themselves in conflict with the position assumed by the President.

Mr. MILLSON. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, sir, the gentleman said that we need not expect to shelter ourselves under the authority of the Administration. Now, I think we have had enough of intimations of this kind; from time to time threats have been thrown out of Executive vetoes. Sir, I deem it the duty of this House to do its legislation without being influenced by the fear of vetoes, and without being controlled in any way by any objections of the White House.

The first question for us to decide is, whether these improvements are necessary. Ought they to be made? Secondly, we should inquire what amounts of money, under all the circumstances surrounding the case, ought to be appropriated now. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars is the amount which has been estimated as necessary to complete the work of clearing out the rapids in the Mississippi for eighteen miles in length, so as to make a channel two hundred feet wide, of a sufficient depth to answer the purposes of navigation. This is the amount estimated by the Department.

But it is intimated by a gentleman of the Committee on Commerce that you cannot expend more than $18,000. By what authority does the gentleman assume that you cannot expend more than $18,000 on the rapids, which are eighteen miles in length?

Now, as to the matter of economy. Does the gentleman undertake to say that if he wanted to construct a house, and had plenty of money to do it, that if it were important to have a place in which he and his family could reside, he would begin by this year putting out money enough to dig the cellar and build the foundation walls, then the next year get the materials on the ground, and allow three, four, five, or six years to go by before he had completed it? Would he not rather, in the management of his individual affairs, if he had the means, build his residence at once? Does he not know that to make an improvement of any kind, when you have the means, the most economical mode is to push it at once to completion? We have a Treasury full to overflowing. It was but a few days ago we voted $10,000,000 for the purpose of securing the right of way for a southern railroad. That was the great purpose of the appropriation, and all must admit it. Yes, sir, $10,000,000 was appropriated; yet, when $232,000 is asked for an important improvement in the Northwest, to aid in the development of its great resources, we are told that it is not proper to appropriate that amount.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLSON, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. HENN. I offer the following amendment:

For continuing the improvement of the Rock Island rapids, §123,620.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any existing law authorizing the appropriation?

Mr. HENN. There is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that, for the purpose of saving time, he will expect every gentleman offering amendments, when called on, to exhibit the law authorizing appropriations asked for.

Mr. HENN. I refer the Chair to the river and harbor bill of 1852 for the authorization of this amendment.

The amount of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, is what has been estimated by the report which I have in my hand for the completion of the improvement of the upper rapids.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order. I would inquire whether single appropriations for certain purposes, without a previous law authorizing the improvements, are laws within the rule?

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. The amendment is merely a duplicate of the appropriation now in the bill for the same improvement.

Mr. HENN. If the original item be in order, my amendment is also in order.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Having passed that appropriation for the improvement of the Rock river rapids, is the gentleman's amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that propositions for appropriations authorized by existing law are in order. In this case the Chair understands appropriations have been made for these rapids.

Mr. HENN. My amendment stands on precisely the same footing as the original appropriation.

Mr. SMITH. I shall distinctly state the point of order I raised for the decision of the Chair. I understand that the Chair decided that no appropriation was in order to this bill, unless authorized by previous law. Am I right?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so decides.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Does the Chair decide that this amendment is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SMITH. Then I raise the question of order in this case, for the reason that there is no law legitimate to this case.

Mr. HENN. The Chair has already decided the amendment to be in order. It stands precisely upon the same footing as the original appropriation in the bill for the same object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would request the gentleman from Iowa to turn to the law under which this appropriation is asked.

Mr. HENN. I would refer to the act of 1852, "making appropriations for the improvement of certain rivers and harbors," in which an appropriation of $100,000 was made for the improvement of the Des Moines and Rock river rapids.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides, that as a previous Congress has made an appropriation for this work, the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa is in order.

Mr. SMITH. I desire to understand the effect of the decision. Do I understand it to be the ruling of the Chair that an amendment to this bill, asking an appropriation for the first time, would be out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH. But if, through inattention, it should be entertained and adopted, it would legitimate any future appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. Such is the practical effect of the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HENN. I offer this amendment for the reason that I wish to complete the improvement of these rapids immediately. It is well known to all western men that there are upwards of fifty steamers plying up and down these rapids. Not one man out of a hundred in the eastern States is aware of the immense amount of commerce at this point. Last year there were no less than three steamboats wrecked upon these rapids; and estimating that the ships and their cargoes would be worth $50,000 each, we have here a loss in the aggregate of $150,000. If we go on and appropriate only $18,000 a year, it will take ten years to complete the improvement at these rapids, and, in the mean time, we shall have a loss accruing to the community, judging from present experience, of a million and a half of dollars at least.

The people of the western States interested in commerce upon the Mississippi river have been denied for twenty years the same benefit that the people of the eastern States have enjoyed from the improvements made in their rivers and harbors. The losses which have accrued at these rapids, for which an appropriation is now asked, have been more than enough twice over in amount to have completed the improvement so necessary at that point of the river. I hope that when we are making appropriations we will make them to some effect, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHEBURNE] very justly remarked a few minutes ago. You just appropriate enough to support a certain class of officers to make surveys, and do nothing more. There is one place in the rapids where I am confident a good practical man would clear away the obstructions in less than twenty-four hours. There are nothing but big boulders in the way; and a single flask of powder would improve the navigation materially. I hope there will be a liberal disposition upon the part of the committee to give us what the wants of that section of the country demand. We ask for nothing more than what is right and just in this matter.

Mr. MILLSON. The objection which I just now urged, applies as well to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. HENN.] as to that offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.] They both stand precisely on the same footing, the estimated cost being the same in both cases. But in rising to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, my chief purpose is to reply to the remarks made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL.] who supposed that I wanted to menace the House with the influence of the Administration. Why, sir, I said nothing like it, and it is strange that any gentleman here, with the memory of the Nebraska controversy still fresh and recent, should fancy that I desire to affect the votes of members by appeals to the supposed views and wishes of the Administration.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I did not mean to intimate that the gentleman from Virginia could himself be driven from any position which he thought correct. But I did not understand how it was that he should throw out that menace, knowing that his position in relation to the Nebraska matter was so very good. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLSON. I threw out no menace. I stated that gentlemen who voted for this bill, could not shelter themselves under the authority of the Administration. References had been repeatedly made to the estimates of the Department. All that I stated in regard to them was, that these papers were not the estimates of the Department. I would not stand here, and seek to influence the opinions of gentlemen by urging the supposed wishes of the Administration. I wish I did know what the sentiments of the Administration are upon this question. It may, perhaps, be doing the President some injustice to doubt what they must be, but I should be glad to know that this bill would receive his veto if it should pass both Houses of Congress.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Just pass this bill, and you will see whether it will be vetoed. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLSON. Sir, I have been a member of three different Congresses: and their names are Malus, Pejor, Pessimus. [Laughter.] The Thirty-First Congress was nearly divided between the two political parties; but there was then only a small majority in the House in favor of the river and harbor bill. Now that we have, as is commonly supposed, an overwhelming majority of Democrats here, we have reason to believe that there will be an overwhelming majority in favor of this bill. The public may put its own construction upon this.

Mr. HENN. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] is speaking against my amendment, I would ask him whether he considers the improvement of the Mississippi river to be within the constitutional power of the General Government?

Mr. MILLSON. If I were to answer that question, without giving the reasons for my opinion, I would be doing myself injustice, and I would not be giving the gentleman satisfaction. I will say, however, that so far as the powers of Congress are concerned, I see no difference between the great inland sea, as it has been called, and any other river. But I am not discussing the question of constitutional power. Had I no such objection to this bill, I should find abundant cause for opposition in the evils which belong to the system itself, and which doubtless prevented it from being made constitutional. If the system were one proper to be administered by this Government, control over it would probably have been given to Congress by the Constitution. And even if such control had been expressly given, it does not follow that it should continue to be exercised, after its injustice and wastefulness have been shown.

Mr. MILLSON. I wish to offer a pro forma amendment, for the purpose of concluding the remarks which I intended to make.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment now pending to an amendment. That of the gentleman from Virginia is therefore not in order.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. MILLSON. I now move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, by reducing the appropriation to five dollars.

I merely want to get an opportunity of saying now what I have been so far diverted from saying. I have not yet had an opportunity of showing how greatly the cost of many of these improvements will exceed the small amounts appropriated.

Let me take the case of the harbor of Oak Orchard Creek, New York. The appropriation in the bill last year for this work was only $10,500. The present bill appropriates $14,500, and the estimated cost of the work is $77,656.

For Grand Haven harbor, Lake Michigan, only the trifling sum of $2,000 was appropriated last year. This bill proposes to appropriate $20,000, and the estimated cost is $162,126.

For Black Lake harbor, Lake Michigan, the sum of $8,000 was appropriated last year. This bill proposes to appropriate $20,500, and the estimated cost is $97,225.

For New Buffalo harbor, Lake Michigan, the sum of $8,000 was appropriated last year. This bill gives $16,000, and the estimated cost is $104,267.

For Michigan City harbor, $20,000 were appropriated last year. This bill proposes $19,000, and the estimated cost is $77,619. But, according to the plan of the agent having charge of the work, and he is highly complimented in the official reports upon his skill, the cost will be $321,000.

Rockland harbor, Maine, is to receive by this bill $15,000, and the estimated cost is $179,183.

For the Hudson river, there was appropriated last year $50,000. This bill proposes to give $50,000 more, and the estimated cost is $450,986.

For New Castle, Delaware, $15,000 was last year appropriated, and $15,000 more is proposed by this bill. The estimated cost is $56,000.

For Patapsco, Maryland, $20,000 was appropriated by the last Congress. This bill proposes $50,000, and the estimated cost is $390,000.

For the Appomattox river, in Virginia, $22,500 was appropriated last year, and this bill gives $50,000. The estimated cost is $115,000.

For the Breakwater across Croatan sound, North Carolina, $50,000 was appropriated last year, and this bill proposes $50,000 more; and yet General Totten reports that unless the plan is changed it will cost two millions more than the one which he suggests for accomplishing the desired object of reopening the communication between Albemarle sound and the Atlantic ocean.

Mr. SHAW, (interrupting.) I desire to say to the gentleman that, so far as that particular work is concerned, there is a report in the Department which shows that the work can be accomplished for $500,000.

Mr. MILLSON. I was about to state that fact, and had commenced stating it, when the gentleman interrupted me. But, General Totten declares that the construction of the work on the plan prescribed by Congress would cost $2,000,000 more than the plan which he recommends, the cost of which he estimates at $500,000. He says the plan which has been sanctioned by Congress will cost $2,500,000; and from what I have heard, I think I may say there is scarcely a practical man who believes that the object can be accomplished at all, upon any plan, or at any cost.

Mr. SHAW. I will say to the gentleman that the Department does not propose to construct this work according to the plan which the gentleman says will cost $2,500,000. It is not proposed to expend the money already appropriated in that particular way.

Mr. MILLSON. I know that. But I am showing how poor a judge Congress is upon these subjects, and that it has twice proposed to effect this object of reopening a communication between Albemarle sound and the ocean, by appropriating on two several occasions $50,000 for the breakwater across Croatan sound, and that, according to General Totten's report, it will require for its construction $2,500,000. It is now proposed, however, to abandon that scheme altogether, and to adopt a new plan.

The five western improvements that I have referred to, and for which, in the commencement, only the modest aggregate sum of about $48,000 was appropriated, are now estimated to cost upwards of $500,000, while the six Atlantic improvements for which only about $200,000 have as yet been appropriated, are now estimated to cost, if constructed upon the plans contemplated by Congress, nearly $4,000,000.

Mr. HAVEN. For the purpose of enabling me to make a few remarks, I move to increase the appropriation in the amendment five dollars.

Mr. Chairman, I will not trouble the committee again to-day while they are engaged upon the items of this bill; I desire to say to the friends of this bill, and also to the enemies of the bill, who are in favor of forwarding the business of the House, that, in my judgment, the only wise course they can pursue is to vote upon the items contained in the bill as reported by the Committee on Commerce, and allow nothing to induce them to give a vote that shall change the items as reported, or in any way alter the bill. I will remark to the committee, that this is rather a hard bill in reference to the section of country from which I come, particularly in reference to the northern lakes and rivers; but, nevertheless, I shall not trouble them with any proposition to amend. I feel the only chance for the bill is to refrain from doing so. It is a pretty liberal bill for the valley of the Mississippi, and I am glad that it is so. But let me say to the friends of the bill again—for it is advice that cannot be too often repeated—that if they desire to carry it through this House, they had, in my opinion, better vote upon it now, as reported by the committee, with the few amendments already voted in, and not encumber it with additional appropriation or provisions.

The bill as it now stands appropriates about $2,500,000, perhaps a little less. I am ready to vote for it as it is. If it had appropriated a slightly larger sum, I should still be willing to vote for it. Under the existing circumstances, $3,000,000 would not be too much, if judiciously expended. But, sir, I appeal to the friends and to the enemies of the bill, to those who wish it to pass, and to those who are opposed to it, but are desirous to have it out of the way for the benefit of other pressing business, to allow it to come to a vote at the earliest possible moment. There are but twenty-two days of the present session of Congress left; and with the sultry weather that prevails, we shall find it difficult to get through with the necessary business of the session. While, therefore, I am a strong friend of these internal improvements, and while I would be willing to vote for a bill somewhat more liberal, yet, inasmuch as this bill has undergone the mature consideration of the Committee on Commerce, which has reported it, I am willing to vote for it as it is, and I hope gentlemen will not undertake to press amendments upon it. Sir, amendments, I am sure, will ruin it; the true friends of judicious and proper internal improvements, I think, may well justify themselves in foregoing all efforts to amend under the circumstances, and vote at once and directly upon what the bill contains.

I shall desire to offer an amendment to the second section when the items are disposed of; but until then I am content to vote without debate, and with entire constancy to keep the bill as it is.

Mr. MILLSON, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to amend the amendment of my colleague [Mr. Richardson] by increasing the appropriation $5,000.

I desire to say to the committee that I concur most cordially in the remarks which have just fallen from the gentleman from New York. I, too, am a sincere friend of this bill, and I desire to see it disposed of at an early moment; and I do not intend to again trouble the committee; but in the passage of the bill, I also am anxious to see justice done to the Mississippi valley; and I believe that the amendment offered by my colleague is founded in justice and in right; and I am glad that the subject has been brought to the consideration of the committee by him. I want the bill passed, even if I cannot get all I desire, for various reasons. There is one reason why I desire to see this bill pass upon which I will say a word. In the sixteenth line of the first section of this bill I see there is an appropriation of $15,000 to improve the harbor of the village of Dubuque, Iowa, which has been agreed to by the committee. That item establishes a very important principle for us on the Mississippi, and, if sanctioned by the House and by the President, I hope we shall hear no more about the unconstitutionality of appropriations for rivers and harbors in contradistinction to harbors of refuge. I believe in the constitutionality of all such improvements, whether the harbors be on salt water or on the fresh water of the Mississippi. I want to see the principle which we have incorporated in this bill sanctioned by an approval of the item for Dubuque harbor, so we can avail ourselves of it hereafter, as applied to other river harbors of more importance.

Now let me refer for a moment to the position taken by my colleague from the Chicago district, [Mr. Wentworth.] He tells this committee that the estimates sent us from the Department of $18,000 are sufficient to carry out the purposes of the Government in reference to these improvements of the Mississippi rapids.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I said no such thing.

Mr. WASHBURN. Well, sir, my colleague at least said this amount was sufficient to satisfy him for the present. He thinks that sum enough to appropriate for the present session of Congress. I am surprised that he, representing a district bordering the Rock river rapids, should make such a statement in reference to this improvement.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WASHBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I did not say that $18,000 was sufficient to complete the improvement of the Rock river rapids. But I think my colleague and myself had better leave our Buncombe at home.

Mr. WASHBURN. There is certainly no necessity for my colleague to leave any Buncombe at home; he has enough there already. But, sir, I will not speak for Buncombe, but I will speak here and elsewhere for justice to my section of the country, even if there be no other person to raise his voice. Living, as it were, on the banks of the Mississippi, and knowing the wants of the people there, I intend that they shall be heard through me. If my colleague wishes to take issue with me as to the justice or the propriety of this increase of appropriation for the improvement indicated, let him say it.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I take the responsibility of standing by the estimates.

Mr. WASHBURN. My colleague speaks about "estimates." Why, sir, if he will turn to page 227 of the documents accompanying the President's message, third part, he will see an estimate of Colonel Long, which gives $250,000 for each of these rapids. Those are estimates founded on the report of Colonel Lee, and I contend they should govern here. The gentleman refers constantly to the "estimates," and says we ought to stand by them. If good in one case, they ought to be good in all. How is it in reference to the estimates for improving the harbor of Waukegan, in my district? The local agent of the Government to construct that work, Mr. W. W. Gamble, a very competent man, as I understand, asked an appropriation of $32,000 to complete the work; and he says in his report "that it would be very desirable, both for economy and utility, to have this amount appropriated by Congress at its next session." Have the "estimates" made by this officer, the officer proper to make them, been adopted by the Committee on Commerce? No, sir, the amount of his estimate has been cut down one half—to $16,000. Why this neglect to come up to the proper estimate for an important work on the lake upon the shores of which my colleague lives? Why deny a harbor to those brave men who face the perils and dangers of our hazardous lake navigation, those courageous and hardy tars

"Whose march is on the mountain wave, Whose home is on the deep?"

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LETCHER. I have sought the floor with a view of trying to keep the peace. I am apprehensive that something serious will grow out of the difficulty between the two gentlemen from Illinois. Probably it may lead to bloodshed. [Laughter.] It will certainly lead to a personal explanation. Let me suggest to gentlemen one thing worthy of consideration, and that is, it is pleasant to see brethren dwelling together in unity. [Renewed laughter.]

I regret very much to see these two gentlemen from Illinois wooling each other in the most approved fashion. The gentleman over the way [Mr. Washburn] complains that his part of Illinois has not got ample justice. The other gentleman says that his part has not got justice, but he is for standing by the Government estimates. He says that patriotism requires he should do so. Now, sir, I pity the poor fellow in this body who avows his purpose to stand by the Government estimates. I really, sincerely, and devoutly pity him, and particularly if he has to defend all the Government estimates when he goes home. [Laughter.] I do not know how it would do in Illinois. I do not know how it would do in Waukegan, but I apprehend that if they got all that was recommended by the Government they would be pretty well satisfied. But, I take it, when he got to the county of Scott, State of Virginia, where the chairman resides, he would find some difficulty in demonstrating that Government estimates were exactly such, in all instances, as ought to be sustained. So it will be, I apprehend, with a good many others who now hold seats upon this floor.

What patriotism has to do with an adherence to Government estimates, I do not exactly know. It strikes me that patriotism, as understood now-a-days, consists in getting out of the Government all you can for your own particular district. [Laughter.] That seems to be the definition as settled by the gentleman behind me, [Mr. Wentworth.] He goes for getting all he can; but he tells the committee it is better to take what is in this bill. Do not attempt to amend it. Do not be adding here and there, for if you do you may probably sink the bill. "I want," says the gentleman, "to get the President committed to the policy. I want him to sanction the bill, and to recognize the principle that the harbors on the Mississippi can be improved." I do not know what the President will do; but I am persuaded that his action, as President, will conform to his action as member of this House.

I hope that the President will do the country the service of sending in a veto here to check this system. I imagine that he will do with this bill as he did with the indigent insane bill, and I do not know any more suitable time when a veto could come in. I think it would be of vast service to the country, and to the Democratic party, at this particular moment, to veto this bill, and to veto some of these railroad bills, and especially that States-right Cape Fear bill which passed here the other day. [Laughter.] He should then get back to something like first principles.

Mr. HAVEN. How about the $10,000,000?

Mr. LETCHER. So far as the ten million bill is concerned, we have ample consideration for the appropriation. The President has signed that, and he has acted wisely in doing so. I hope that he will continue to give evidences of wisdom, and that he will veto this river and harbor bill, which conflicts with his States-right course as a member of this House, and the Senate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to amend the amendment by increasing the amount five dollars.

I offer it for the purpose of saying a word in reply to my friend from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] who seems to have taken the principles of the Administration and the Democratic party under his especial keeping. I know that my friend is very sincere, and that he advocates his propositions with a great deal of ardor. He denies the constitutional power of Congress to make improvements for rivers and harbors, those great natural arteries of commerce, and one would think from the number of speeches he makes to illustrate his point, and from the manner in which he alludes to gentlemen of the Democratic party who do not believe with him, that he never supported a proposition of this kind. I ask the gentleman, and I would like to have him answer it, whether he was not a member of the committee of conference, a few days ago, which reported to this House in favor of allowing an appropriation of $40,000 to pay for the survey made by Governor Stevens for a line of railroad to the Pacific? I ask him whether, on the call of the yeas and nays, he did not vote for that report taking $40,000 out of the Treasury—to do what? To pay the engineers for carrying their levels over the wilderness, and to pay Irishmen for driving stakes into the soil, marking upon them with red chalk the amount to cut away and the amount to fill. Having voted for that proposition, I now put the question to him, if it be constitutional to pay Irishmen for driving stakes, out of the Treasury, why is it not constitutional to vote money to pay them for shoveling the gravel on the road itself, and why is it not constitutional to take the snags out of the great Mississippi river, and improve rivers and harbors?

It will be full time for the gentleman from Virginia to read members out of the Democratic party, and claim to be the exponent of the principles of party, when he can show himself to be consistent upon the record. Until then, for one, I object to hearing his lectures, and I object to his reading any man out of his own party who votes for these appropriations, especially after the vote he has given in favor of an appropriation of $40,000 for driving stakes upon that Pacific railroad. I hope the honorable gentleman will explain this thing to the satisfaction of the committee, or at least cease this thing of reading gentlemen out of his own party because they support this bill.

Mr. LETCHER obtained the floor; but yielded it to

Mr. CRAIGE. I desire to say but one word. As to the appropriation for the Cape Fear river, to which the gentleman from Virginia has alluded, I consider that it stands upon a totally different footing from the bill under consideration. I voted for the improvement of the Cape Fear river, for the reason that the Government put the obstruction there, and I hold that if the Government puts an obstruction in any place, it is our duty to remove it.

Mr. LETCHER. I have no doubt that the Democratic party of this House, particularly those gentlemen who have been read out of the party, will be under lasting obligations to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] for his volunteer defense of them upon this occasion. It occurred to me if there was one particular act for which a member of this House should be entitled to especial thanks, it would be that he has read out of the party a portion of those who are nominally connected with the Democratic party, and had turned them over to the Whig party, which party at this present moment, seems to be in a distressed condition, not strong enough to make an impression upon the country. When I undertake to lay down my views, and read gentlemen out of the party, he says, it gives him pain and makes him rather uneasy. He regrets to hear such language coming from me. Why? What is there in all this that particularly disturbs him? Is it not a source of pleasure to him at all times, to receive recruits, come from whatever quarter they may?

But the gentleman wishes to know if I was not on the committee of conference in the early part of the session in regard to the deficiency bill. I was a member of that committee, and if the gentleman will take the trouble to inquire he will find that upon the proposition relating to the surveys made by Governor Stevens for a route to the Pacific I opposed it, and my vote was given in opposition to it. At the same time, the gentleman will also ascertain this fact, that, after having shown my hostility to this appropriation, I then voted for the deficiency bill, in order that debts justly due by the Government to her creditors might be paid.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The whole amount of what I said is, that the gentleman opposed it first as he does now, very warmly, but when he came to a tight place, to wit, on the question, in the House, of the adoption of the report of the committee of conference, he caved in.

Mr. LETCHER. I voted against the appropriation on the committee of conference.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I have been doing the gentleman an injustice. But did he vote "no" on the question of its adoption by the House?

Mr. LETCHER. I tell the gentleman that when the question came before the House, I did vote for the adoption of the report, and I gave him my reasons for "caving in," as he calls it.

Mr. PRESTON. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. LETCHER. I have no doubt that the Democratic party will be under special obligations to my friend in front of me, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] and to my friend on my right, [Mr. PRESTON,] who seem to be coming to the rescue, for the interest they have shown on behalf of that party just now. The latter gentleman wants to conciliate gentlemen of that party, I suppose, in his anxiety for the carrying out of the appropriation for the Louisville custom-house. [Laughter.] I do not know how else to account for the interference of the gentleman at this particular time. But it seems that these gentlemen hunt in pairs on this occasion.

The question was taken on Mr. CAMPBELL's amendment to an amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I desire to make a motion for the purpose of getting this bill out of committee.

The CHAIRMAN. What proposition does the gentleman make?

Mr. GREENWOOD. The proposition which I desire to make is a motion to strike out the enacting clause of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair informs the gentleman there is still an amendment pending to the bill.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Well, I hope the vote will be taken on it at once.

The question was taken on Mr. RICHARDSON's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I now make the motion that I have indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must inform the gentleman that this motion has been submitted, and decided in the negative.

Mr. GREENWOOD. That was on yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot entertain the motion to-day.

Mr. EASTMAN. I offer the following amendment:

For completing the improvement of Grant river slough, on the Mississippi river, at Potosi, Wisconsin, which was commenced under the act of June 15, 1844, $20,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman whether there is an existing law directing appropriations for this purpose?

Mr. EASTMAN. By the act of June 15, 1844, a section of land was granted by Congress for the improvement at this point on the Mississippi river. And that has been expended, I presume, therefore, this amendment is in order.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I contend that the amendment is not in order. There was merely a section of land appropriated to this object.

The CHAIRMAN. While the Chair confesses that the point is rather doubtful, still he is of opinion that the amendment is not in order.

[Cries of "Read on!"]

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think the Chair has misunderstood the grounds on which I desire to make the motion to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chair will hear the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I understand the Chair to have decided just now, on my announcing the character of the motion which I desired to make in reference to this bill, that the motion to strike out the enacting clause could not be renewed?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so decided.

Mr. GREENWOOD. For the reason that on yesterday the Chair had decided that motion in order, and it was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will allow the Chair, he will state the facts as they occurred. The Chair entertained the motion, and put the question to a vote. The committee voted the proposition down, and therefore the Chair must conform to that judgment of the committee.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Then I was laboring under a mistake. But I desire to understand the facts; for I think I am correct, and that the Chair misunderstood me. The Chair was sustained upon the appeal, and the question was put to the committee, upon the motion to strike out the enacting clause of the bill, and it was lost. If I am correct in this, I have a right again to make the motion to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair again repeats that he entertained the proposition yesterday to strike out the enacting clause. The motion was put, and it was voted down by the committee; and now the Chair cannot entertain a question which conflicts with the former decision of the committee.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to inquire of the Chair if I understand him to decide that, inasmuch as the motion to strike out the enacting clause was decided adversely yesterday, it cannot be renewed to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so decides.

Mr. HENN. I would inquire of the Chair if the committee may not have changed their opinion, and may not vote differently to-day from what they did yesterday?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chair cannot say as to that. They may or they may not. The Chair decides that it cannot consistently again entertain the same motion.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. GOODE. Allow me to say to the gentleman from Arkansas, that it is not in order to go back upon the bill. The enacting words are in the first lines of the bill; and it is not in our power to go back to them now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must call the gentleman to order. The question is not debatable. The question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. GREENWOOD. I withdraw the appeal.

Mr. WALSH. If an amendment is now in order, I offer the following:

For the completion of a light-house at Chittenango, Madison county, New York, $5,327 39.

[Laughter.]

Mr. PRESTON. I rise to a question of order. The light-house bill is not under consideration yet; and further, there has been no previous appropriations for that work. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. It is a work of internal improvement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman from New York if there is any law providing for the construction of this work?

Mr. WALSH. I have not looked into the matter yet; but if there is not, it must have been a gross oversight. [Laughter.] A light-house there is quite as democratic and quite as necessary as two thirds of these log-rolling appropriations. If it is not necessary to protect the many valuable lives navigating the turbid waters of the Erie canal, it will, at least, put money into the pockets of some contractors. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment to be out of order, unless the gentleman can show that there is an existing law authorizing the work.

Mr. SKELTON. I offer the following amendment:

For the continuation of the system of protecting human life from shipwreck, as heretofore established by life-boats on the New Jersey coast, $20,000.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. That amendment is clearly not in order.

Mr. SKELTON. I will say that it is in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury. This is to continue the system for the protection of human life heretofore established by law.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I make the point of order that the appropriations in this bill are to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War. The estimates the gentleman presents are from the Secretary of the Treasury. I submit, further, that the amendment is not germane to the bill. The title itself shows that it is not.

Mr. SKELTON. If a question of order is raised, I desire to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the amendment is not in order, for the reason that it is not germane to the bill; and he further decides that the question of order is not debatable.

Mr. SKELTON. Well, sir, I desire to say to the House, that it is not in order to protect the New Jersey coast by any bill.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. JONES, of New York. I move to amend by inserting after the words "extra expenses," in the forty-third line of the first section of the bill, the words "and so forth," so that the paragraph will read:

For the preservation of public property, and contingencies of western river improvements, and for commutation of transportation of baggage, and of quarters and fuel of officers in cases no longer provided for by the quartermaster's department, and for allowances to meet extra expenses, and so forth, under the special direction of the Secretary of War, $10,000.

Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment in all good faith. Though I have read the section over and over again, I have not been able to determine in my own mind what it exactly means. There is nothing in it of importance, if we except the provision of $10,000 for the transportation of the baggage of those selected by the Government for the superintendence of these improvements. I suppose that it is intended for the winter service; and everybody knows that that service, instead of being at these works, is in attending balls, parties, and concerts, in the western cities and towns. I understand that the item of baggage transportation is a very large one in the expenditures of the War Department. This, then, is placed here so that the engineers of the Army may get $10,000 more than they would otherwise.

I was one of the forlorn hope of which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] was the leader. I was one of the thirty-nine Democrats who voted with him on his proposition. The question was raised yesterday, that this was a general appropriation bill. The Chair decided that it was. I had, at the time, strong doubts of the fact, but they were entirely removed when I read this section. It is undoubtedly a general bill, for it applies to everything under heaven, so far as I can see. [Laughter.] Any man who can vote for this section can vote for anything.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I am opposed to the amendment, and ask for the vote.

The question was taken; and the amendment was lost.

Mr. LILLY. I move to strike out the entire section.

Mr. Chairman, this item appears to me to be a mere gratuity to the officers who may be employed on the western improvements, and is in addition to their regular pay. It provides for carrying their trunks, &c. I have never seen any estimates for them. I think, from the phraseology of the section, it is to be paid out to the various officers, at the discretion of, and in accordance with the amount of good feeling which may exist between the head of the War Department and the persons employed; I therefore think it should be stricken out.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I am opposed to the striking out.

The motion was rejected.

The following clause was then read:

"For current expenses of the steam dredge on Lake Champlain, $7,500."

Mr. SKELTON. I propose to strike out that clause. I do so, because I believe, according to the decision of the Chairman and the committee, that this appropriation is not in order, and therefore I think it should be stricken out of the bill. When an appropriation is demanded for the purpose of protecting lives—

Mr. COX. I ask the Chair if it is debatable as a question of order? The gentleman from New Jersey makes a point of order, and then proceeds to debate it.

Mr. SKELTON. I was about to give my reasons why the clause I propose to strike out is not in order. It seems to be in order for gentlemen to make speeches, showing who are and who are not Democrats—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the gentleman from New Jersey is in order.

Mr. SKELTON. I was about to show, when I was interrupted, that it was not in order for the committee to make such an appropriation as is contained in this clause; for, in the opinion of the committee, it is not in order to make any appropriation for the safety and protection of human life. I contend that these dredge boats are intended for the protection of those who navigate Lake Champlain, just as the surf boats upon the Jersey coast are intended to protect the lives of those who sail upon that coast, and therefore an amendment making an appropriation for this purpose is not in order. As the committee have ruled my amendment out of order, they will rule this amendment out of order also, and make this bill a bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and not for the protection of human lives. I am satisfied, as I have been ruled out upon a former occasion, when I offered an amendment to the civil and diplomatic bill, making an appropriation for life boats upon the Jersey coast, that all amendments of this kind will not only be ruled out of this bill, but out of every other appropriation bill. I wish the decision of the Chair and the committee to be known, not only here, but throughout the country, that this House is determined, through thick and thin, to make no appropriation for the protection of human life, but rather to squander money upon office-holders and office-seekers.

The CHAIRMAN. It was with some reluctance that the Chair ruled the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey out of order. The Chair, upon reflection, is inclined to the opinion that the amendment might be regarded in order as an independent section, but does not regard it as germane to the amendment then pending.

Mr. HUGHES. I am in favor of this bill, and I do not propose to consume unnecessarily the time of the House in its discussion. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. SKELTON,] particularly as its effect falls rather hard on the section of the country which I have the honor to represent. There are $7,500 appropriated in this bill for the current expenses of the dredge boat on Lake Champlain. Some two years ago $20,000 was appropriated to build that dredge boat. It is lying there to-day, up in the harbor at Whitehall, useless, because there is no money on hand to work the boat with. This $7,500 is to put that boat in operation; and it is now a question whether the boat shall be allowed to rot at the dock, or whether, by the act of the committee, this small pittance shall be applied to put it in motion. Knowing, as I do, the good sense of this committee, I shall not take up its time in advocating this appropriation which has been recommended by the Secretary of War; but I ask a vote upon the question.

Mr. SKELTON. I withdraw my motion to strike out.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I move, Mr. Chairman, to add $50,000 to the appropriation for the harbor of Oswego.

Oswego does a much larger custom-house business than any other town in the nation, where the Government has not authorized the building of a custom-house. And, yet, the harbor, in which all this business is done, is a miserably contracted and half finished one. The people of Oswego have been compelled to tax themselves, for many years, very heavily, in order to preserve their harbor, and maintain, against the elements, the cheap and frail piers built by Government. And were they, now, to call on Government for repayment, they would be as unjustly dealt with as was Wilmington day before yesterday, when the section, making like repayment, was struck out of the Cape Fear river bill. For Government to draw revenue from our harbors, and, yet, to refuse to keep them in repair, and to compel the people, who live where the harbors are, to keep them in repair, is what I cannot see to be honest. Thus to benefit the Treasury, or, in other words, the whole nation, at the expense of particular localities and small communities, is, in my eye, nothing short of downright fraud.

But I have been asked, during the discussion of this bill, with what consistency I can advocate the improvement of rivers and harbors, at the hands of the Federal Government, seeing that I have for years advocated, both with my lips and pen, that they be improved by States and smaller communities, and not by the Federal Government? It is true that I would have such work done by other and more suitable agents than the Federal Government. It has never been economically and well done by that Government; and it never will be economically and well done by that Government. It is a work that cannot be properly performed, at arms-length. It is a work that can be properly performed by those only, who, to use another familiar phrase, are on the spot. The Federal Government, because so great, is too unwieldy for such a work; and, because it is so remote from the work, an adequate sense of responsibility cannot be brought home to it. I object to such work in the hands of the Government, if only because such work tends to centralization, and to undue Federal power. I object to it, if only because it affords immense room for corrupting both Government and people.

Gladly would I vote, this day, to have the Federal Government, provided it would surrender all claims to revenue from our harbors, stand entirely aside from the whole work of improving them. But just so long as that Government will tax us for using our own harbors, just so long I can do no less than insist, that Government shall put, and keep, them in proper condition. I am no more inconsistent here than I am in the case of custom-houses. So long as Government shall adhere to the injustice of supporting itself by customs; and so long as the people shall be foolish enough to let Government do so, so long I shall be in favor of having Government erect safe and suitable buildings for custom-houses, instead of having it lease such as are unsafe and unsuitable. Hence, although if I could have my will, and if my theories of Government could prevail, there would not be a custom-house on the earth; I, nevertheless, feel myself to be guilty of no inconsistency in calling upon Government to erect custom-houses. So, too, in the case of rivers and harbors, whilst Government claims, and with the acquiescence of the people, the exclusive control, and the exclusive revenues, of them; I feel, that Government is, not only to be permitted, but to be required to improve them.

I moved an increase of $50,000. That sum, together with the $21,000, which the bill provides for, would be none too much to put the harbor of Oswego in such a state, as its very great and very rapidly growing business demands.

I desire the success of this bill. The security of life and property requires it. Instead of the total sum appropriated by this bill being too large, I would have Government, another year, expend a much larger sum on these and similar objects, providing it shall not do the far juster and better thing of surrendering the work into the hands of the proper agents—the States and smaller communities.

I did not offer my amendment, with the view of its adoption. Indeed, I am persuaded that the success of the bill would be greatly endangered by amending it. It is safer and wiser to follow the estimates, and to walk in the track of the Department. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. FLAGLER. I offer the following amendment:

After line sixty-five insert:

For improving the harbor at the mouth of the Twelve Mile creek, on Lake Ontario, according to survey of J. W. Judson, civil engineer, in pursuance of law, $5,000, to be expended under direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I raise a question of order upon that amendment. There is no law providing for the construction of that work.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman from New York as to the facts in reference to that matter.

Mr. FLAGLER. There is a law authorizing a survey.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must rule this amendment out of order. The fact of a survey having been made does not authorize the construction of the work.

Mr. FLAGLER. I also offer the following amendment:

Add at the end of line sixty-nine, the words:

And such portion of said sum as the Secretary of War may judge expedient, shall be expended in deepening the channel at the mouth of the Twelve Mile creek, on Lake Ontario.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I raise the same point of order upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules it out of order upon the same ground.

Mr. WADE. I offer the following amendment:

In line eighty-three strike out "ten," and insert the words "twenty-five,"

—so as to make the clause read,

For continuing the improvement of the harbor of Cleveland, Ohio, on Lake Erie, $25,000.

Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking the committee to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvements at the harbor of Cleveland, reported by this bill. I am aware, sir, that the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended the smaller sum, for the reason, that the appropriation made by the last Congress, for the improvement of this important harbor, has not yet been fully expended. I am aware also, Mr. Chairman, of the solicitude of the friends of this bill, that this House should not go beyond the recommendations of the Department, lest by asking too much we hazard all. I respect this suggestion, and feel great reluctance to depart from it, even when I feel the fullest assurance that the appropriation is wholly inadequate. Still, sir, I feel very confident that neither the Committee on Commerce nor the Department, are aware of the importance of the harbor of Cleveland, in a commercial point of view; nor of the decaying, very ruinous condition of the public works at this point.

Sir, I shall hardly gain credit for my statements when I assure the committee that the coastwise or domestic commerce of this port, from the opening to the close of navigation, during the season of 1853, a period of about seven months, amounted to more than one hundred millions of dollars; and yet, sir, I am here prepared with a full and detailed statement of one of the most upright and accurate individuals in the public service, the deputy collector of that port, (Mr. D. W. Cross,) showing such to be the fact. The number of vessels entering this port during that season, coastwise, was 2,563, the tonnage of which amounted to 1,230,240 tons; the number of seamen 46,134. The clearances of vessels coastwise for the same period were 2,557; tonnage 1,227,360; seamen 46,026. The number of vessels engaged in the foreign trade during the same period was—American vessels entered, 367, tonnage 49,236 tons, seamen 2492; British vessels entered 92, tonnage 10,360, seamen 605—making a total of 459 American and foreign vessels entering this port; tonnage 59,576; and seamen 3,097.

The clearances of vessels in the foreign trade were 360; tonnage, 43,812; seamen, 2,527. Total vessels engaged in the coastwise and foreign trade, entered and cleared, 5,919, being between twenty-eight and twenty-nine daily, during the entire season of navigation, the tonnage of which was 2,550,008. Seamen entering and clearing, coastwise and in the foreign trade, for the same period, 97,784. Value of the domestic and foreign imports and exports, $86,969,572. To which, in order to show the business of Cleveland, should be added upwards of $15,000,000 of imports by railroad.

The net revenue collected on property imported into this port from foreign countries, as I have it from the Register of the Treasury, for the four years ending June 30, 1853, was as follows:

1850.....	$64,324
1851.....	53,895
1852.....	84,112
1853.....	65,014

Such, Mr. Chairman, is the business of the port of Cleveland. A few words as to the condition of the harbor, to improve which this appropriation is sought. This harbor is formed by two piers extended from the east and west margins of the Cuyohogue river, at its confluence with the lake, for several hundred feet in the lake. Without the piers, the mouth of the river would be perpetually obstructed by an impassable bar; and there would be no protection whatever for shipping against the violence of the winds and waves from the open lake, at this point some sixty miles in width, with but the shelter of island or promontory. The western pier was built wholly of wood and sunken cribs, filled with small stones. This pier receives the whole force of the violent northwestern gales which prevail in spring and autumn. This is now nearly demolished, and unless speedily repaired, will in a short time be entirely swept away. The eastern pier is of stone. By the action of floods driving out the sand and wood on which the pier is based, it is now breaking away, and for several hundred feet, by unequal sinking, and by undermining, the stone is badly cracked—in many places broken; and in a very few years will inevitably fall into the channel of the river, and render entrance into the harbor utterly impossible. These facts, sir, I know from personal examination.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word as to the propriety of increasing this appropriation. The last Congress appropriated for the continuance of the improvements on this harbor, $25,000. Owing to some doubt as to the title of the United States to land on which the eastern pier abutted, orders were issued from the War Department to discontinue the work of repair; and no part of the appropriation was expended during the last season, excepting so much as has been applied to the uses of the superintending officer in charge, for such personal attention as he has given to this subject, and for preparing a plan for the work. The expense of them I do not know, but have reason to believe that they have made a very sensible impression on the amount appropriated.

But, sir, the expense of repairs must have very greatly increased by the dilapidations of the works since the original appropriation was made; and there is not a doubt that the original appropriation, together with the sum proposed by the amendment, will all be needed to make this harbor what the necessities of its commerce demand. Besides, sir, those works, on which the appropriations of the Thirty-Second Congress have been expended, are by this bill to receive a full, not a meager "third allowance;" and, sir, I do not clearly perceive why this harbor should not have its full measure of the justice of the Government, although the expenditure of the money should be delayed for a year.

I know it is said that when the money heretofore appropriated, together with the $10,000 provided in this bill, shall have been expended, it will be time enough to ask for more at the hand of Congress. This may be, sir; but "one bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," says the proverb; and on the wisdom of this homely maxim I prefer to press this matter, than to repose on the contingencies of a future appropriation, depending, as it would, on a body, to speak tenderly of it, which, it must be conceded, is rather uncertain.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is said that the Government works on this Cleveland harbor have cost many hundred per cent. over the original estimate. Why, yes, sir, they have; and certain gentlemen of congenial economy are opposed to these appropriations, and this appropriation in particular, not because the sums expended have not been needed—not because the sum now asked for is not demanded by the pressing exigencies of the case, but because the projector of this work in 1835 estimated the whole cost of the improvement at only $10,000. Why, sir, to refuse your son, on his arriving at the age of majority, his "freedom suit," costing, perhaps, fifty dollars, because his pantaloons, when a child, were constructed on an estimate of ten shillings, would be no more absurd. True, sir, from 1835 to 1842 there were expended on this harbor of Cleveland $123,000; and since that time there will have been expended, when the appropriation of the last Congress is exhausted, $75,000 more, making in all $198,000. But, sir, as I have already shown to the committee, there were collected from duties on imports into this harbor, for the three years last past, $206,653 59, being more than all the appropriations made for the construction of this important work. Nay, sir, only disgorge from your Treasury the revenue collected from this port alone for a single year, and it will make triple what I ask at the hands of this committee.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio; as I am to nearly every appropriation in this bill. I shall vote against this bill when it comes up on its final passage, because I think that nine tenths of the money appropriated by it might just as well be thrown into the bottom of the ocean, if it is to be expended in the manner in which such appropriations have been expended heretofore. I have before me a report made by the Committee on Commerce in 1852. I have also two other reports; one made in 1836, and the other in 1842, showing an extravagant waste of the public money, under the system of management heretofore pursued by this Government.

I have not time to say what I would like to say on that subject. But in this report there are enumerated some twenty-three harbors, for which the original estimate of cost made by the engineers of the Government was only some $735,000. From the making out of the estimate to the writing of the report in 1842, there had been expended on these twenty-three harbors the enormous sum of $2,382,000—more than three times as much as the original estimate; and yet the officer of the Government who reported the estimates for that year to Congress, also reported that it would require to complete these works one million nine hundred and odd thousand dollars; which would make in all an expenditure of more than $4,315,000 on twenty-three harbor improvements, for which the original estimate was only $735,000. I find in this present bill eleven of these harbor improvements, for which the sum of $220,500 is asked, in addition to what has already been appropriated. The original estimate for these eleven harbor improvements was only $379,000. The amount expended on them is $1,202,000, and the works are not yet completed.

In the name of common sense, when are we to stop at this rate? It all results from having improvident and extravagant men in the management. In this report the committee speak of errors of calculation, gross negligence, and mismanagement of those having these works of improvement in charge. The evil results from the fact that the Government employs military men to manage these river and harbor improvements, when it ought to employ practical civil engineers to do the work.

I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. I will state that the original estimate of the cost for each of the harbors was $25,000; the sum asked for in the bill was $10,000. We have already spent $123,000, and now it is proposed to add $25,000 more. I hope it will not be granted.

The question was taken; and the amendment was lost.

Mr. LINDSLEY. I move the following amendment:

For continuing the improvement of the harbor of Vermillion, Ohio, on Lake Erie, $10,000.

Mr. LINDSLEY. My object in rising at this time is to make a few remarks relative to the improvements of the harbors of Vermillion, Huron, and Sandusky. I had hoped this House would not enter into any arrangement for the adjournment of Congress until there was a prospect of disposing of the bills now before the House, and others at this time in the hands of the various committees ready to be reported, and which should be acted upon before the close of this session. I have voted against all adjournments and recesses. But as the time for adjourning is now fixed by the two Houses, we should dispatch business as rapidly as we can with safety and propriety.

The harbors I have referred to are situated within the district I have the honor to represent upon this floor; and I shall confine my remarks principally to improvements necessary to be made at those points. I deem it unnecessary to enter into an elaborate discussion of this subject, satisfied as I am that a brief statement of facts relative to those places will be sufficient to arrest the attention of this honorable body, and, it is hoped, to secure from you such an appropriation for those ports as their commercial importance and their necessities absolutely require. I shall, therefore, occupy your attention but for a few moments.

It is, sir, an admitted fact, by those best acquainted with the ports of Lake Erie, that the bay of Sandusky is vastly superior, as a harbor, to any other port upon that lake. It has an average depth of twelve feet of water. In width it is from four to five miles. In length it is some twenty miles, and is capable of accommodating the entire fleets of our western lakes. Land locked, and the surrounding country covered with a dense growth of giant forest trees, vessels may at all times there ride at anchor, safe from the desolations of the tempest, and the rage of the sea and the surf without. There is, however, one defect connected with that bay which ought speedily and effectually to be remedied. That defect I shall endeavor very briefly to show the committee can, and ought at once, to be repaired.

It would be highly gratifying to me if every member of this committee, unacquainted with the Sandusky harbor, would glance his eye over the map I now have before me, and which has been carefully prepared and furnished me by Colonel J. J. Abert, Chief of the Topographical Department. It gives a very accurate idea of the appearance and character of the bay, and that part requiring repairs. Formerly, and until within a few years past, an unbroken peninsula of near two miles in length extended from the main land, on the north side of the bay, opposite to Cedar Point—an angle of the main land, situated about one half mile south of the cape of the peninsula. Through this narrow passage our vessels enter the bay, it being the main channel; and it would be one of the best on the lake, but for the difficulty to which I have already alluded. Well do I recollect when that entire peninsula was covered with rich meadows, and a large and thrifty forest. The meadows afforded the most ample grazing for hundreds of head of cattle, and the forest not only sheltered them from the scorching heat of the sun, or the peltings of the storm, but also protected the shipping in the harbor from the fury of the tempest. The peninsula, however, has been, for several years past, by the frequency and violence of the northeast winds, gradually washing away, until finally a clean breach through it has been made; and, since that occurrence, in every storm vast quantities of sand are deposited in the bay, shifting the channel, and seriously obstructing the entrance to the harbor. Thus, by every northeaster, our channel is liable to be diverted, and so filled up at different points with immense deposits of sand, as to render its navigation not only uncertain, but difficult.

The primary cause of these deposits of sand is the vast amount of water forced, during the prevalence of storms, from the lake into the bay, through the breach near the junction of the peninsula with the main land. At such times the water rushes through the breach with such prodigious velocity as to carry before it large quantities of sand, which is swept along towards the entrance of the bay, and deposited in and about the channel, so that a vessel attempting to sail out by the same channel by which it entered the harbor, might possibly ground upon a bar formed during the prevalence of a single storm. Such, sir, has been, and still is, the origin of the most incalculable damage to our harbor. This great and growing evil has been partially arrested by an appropriation made for that purpose by the last Congress. A breach of two thousand six hundred and fifty-seven feet was closed last summer, which has added much to the safety of the bay, which, remarks the editor of the Commercial Register, published at Sandusky City, "has been found, upon inspection, since the disappearance of the ice, to have stood the test of winter to the utmost satisfaction. Not a single crib has been disturbed by ice or high water; on the contrary, the work has acquired additional protection by the accumulation of sand on both sides of the cribbing, the deposit amounting, it is said, to nearly two hundred acres of new land. As the mode of constructing the improvement was regarded by some in the light of an experiment, the result is highly gratifying, as well to the agent of the Government as to those more directly interested in its success.

There is still another, and the principal cut, of some three thousand feet next to the main land yet to be filled up, which, when effected, will render the entire peninsula complete, and protect the harbor from those vast deposits of sand which have been for several years past so fearfully accumulating. To accomplish this most important and desirable object, an expenditure of not more than $28,500 would be required. "It is very certain," observes the same writer above quoted, "that the magnitude of the commercial interest depending upon a suitable protection of our harbor, demands a further expenditure now, while it may be profitably and advantageously made, and while a comparatively small sum will suffice."

It may be asked if we have sufficient water in our channel to admit the passage of the largest class of vessels? My response to this interrogatory is: We have; though the bed of the channel may be occasionally changed, and a bar formed, which often requires dredging, which is done at the expense of the city.

I would further remark, there is not so safe a harbor on Lake Erie to enter in tempestuous weather as that of Sandusky. There are no piers or wharves to encounter in entering the bay. Once in the bay, all is safe; for there is ample room and ample depth of water for the combined shipping of the lakes; and the moment a vessel is within the harbor her anchor may be cast, and the mariner may, in the proud consciousness of security, bid defiance to the fury of the storm that may rage and howl without.

Again: Does the commerce of Sandusky warrant the appropriation of $28,500, recommended by the Committee on Commerce for the object above specified? Unquestionably it does. I have now before me the report of the collector of that port, which shows our imports for the fiscal year ending November last to be $30,048,744; and our exports $11,435,457, amounting in all to $41,484,201; which is an increase, over the year 1852, of $6,798,304.

Sir, I will venture the assertion, that, with the facilities it now has, the rapid increase of its business, the bright and flattering prospects before it, Sandusky City will, before the expiration of four or five years, more than double its commerce. Sandusky now has over a mile of dock of superior structure; and by reason of the formation and extent of its harbor, a similar work could be extended, whenever it became necessary, for at least four miles further. The docks are built of rock, and that, too, in the most substantial manner.

The location of the city is, in many respects, unique. Situated upon one of the most beautiful inland bays upon the continent, surrounded by a fertile and a highly cultivated country, and unsurpassed in the salubrity of its climate, it can but attract the attention and elicit the admiration of every traveler. Within the city limits there is an abundance of building material, such as stone and brick. Rock, for the erection of an edifice, may be taken from the very spot on which it is to be built, and lime and sand are to be had at its very threshold. Plaster of Paris is manufactured within the city, and an inexhaustible amount of the raw material, from which it is manufactured, exists upon the opposite side of the bay. Thus it will be perceived that within the limits of the city exist most of the requisite materials for the erection of houses, the construction of wharves, &c.

Railroads.—There are now five railroads diverging from Sandusky City, passing through not only the mineral, but also through the most fertile and beautiful agricultural portions of the State; and soon another air-line road will be completed to the Ohio river, connecting Sandusky with Louisville, Kentucky, over which, being the shortest and most direct line from the Ohio to Lake Erie, a very large portion of the products of the West, designed for the eastern market, and also the goods purchased at the East for western consumption, must, we think, necessarily pass.

Thus, with all the above enumerated advantages and facilities for growth and greatness, I see no adequate reason why Sandusky City may not, with the repairs of the peninsula, and the harbor improvements to which I have already called your attention, become one of the most important and prosperous commercial emporiums upon the great lakes. It is therefore to be devoutly hoped that no member of this House will vote against such an appropriation for the improvement of our harbor, as its present necessities, and its future security from the evils to which it is now exposed, absolutely require.

There are other ports on the Sandusky bay which justice requires I should mention. Venice is one of them. This is a small but thrifty village situated on the south side of the bay. It has two large flouring mills, which are kept in constant operation, and grind hundreds of barrels of flour daily.

Portage is another. This is a small place on the opposite side of the bay from Venice. At this place there are two large mills for manufacturing plaster of Paris, one of which is capable of grinding eight hundred barrels per day. A steamer plies daily between this place and Sandusky City.

Fremont is another. It is situated on the Sandusky river, about thirty miles west of Sandusky City, and is a place of considerable commerce. Besides being constantly visited by the shipping of the lake, there is a steamer that daily plies between Fremont and Sandusky City. Fremont is the county seat of Sandusky, and is a large and flourishing village. It now has one railroad, which does an extensive business. Several others are being built, whilst others, again, are being projected. These circumstances have greatly enhanced the value of property there, and given a most cheering impetus to commerce and to business of every description.

Mr. Chairman, before I close these few remarks relative to the beautiful bay of Sandusky, there is a matter, and one, too, of no small importance, to which I wish simply, and very briefly, to call the attention of the committee.

Much has been said upon this floor, during the present session, in regard to marine hospitals. The importance, the humanity, the absolute necessity of the existence of such institutions, not only upon the coasts of the Atlantic and Pacific, but also along the shores of our great inland seas, upon whose waters dwell thousands of weather-beaten mariners, who are ever and anon exposed to the most appalling dangers and hardships, to disease and sickness, and who need equally with those whose home is upon the "ocean wave," the protection and fostering care of the Government, none, I presume, will doubt.

The object had in view in the establishment of marine hospitals, is to furnish healthy and comfortable retreats for invalid seamen, where they can have that medical attention and care which is necessary for their restoration to health.

The selection of sites upon which to erect such institutions is a matter of great importance. Nearly in the center of the bay of Sandusky is a most beautiful and fertile island, called "Bull's Island," containing about two hundred acres of land, healthy and easy of access, and which would make one of the most interesting and attractive sites for a marine hospital that can be found upon our western waters. The island ought to be the property of the Government, and devoted, whenever it may be necessary, to the object to which I have adverted.

I would invite the attention of the committee to this subject, and ask them to consider the propriety and expediency of purchasing the whole or a part of that island, at an early day, for the establishment there, when it should be necessary, of a marine hospital.

I now solicit the attention of the committee, for a few moments, to some of the improvements necessary to be made at Huron. The village of Huron is situated at the mouth of Huron river. A ship canal has been constructed from this point to Milan—a distance of eight miles—through which the shipping to and from this latter place is conducted. Milan is a beautiful village, handsomely situated, and prosperous. Its citizens are intelligent, hospitable, and persevering. An extensive business is there transacted in the purchase of wheat, corn, wool, staves, &c., &c., which are thence shipped by the canal to other ports upon the lakes. Besides, a large number of vessels are there annually built, inferior to none of the same class upon our western waters.

Milan has not yet enjoyed the advantages of railroads, but will ere long. It has commenced the work.

Huron harbor is very similar to that of Cleveland. The depth of the river is some eighteen feet, and the harbor is easy of access. To make it, however, what it should be, and what its importance rightly demands, it is necessary that an appropriation should be made by Congress for the repair and completion of the west pier. A large portion of this pier is now in ruins, and the beacon, situated out on its extremity, was, a few weeks since, swept away by the violence of the winds and waves. This, however, will soon be remedied. Captain Jenkins, of the Light-House Board, has ordered another beacon to be erected, as soon as practicable, and the work has been commenced.

But I desire to call the attention of the committee more particularly to the importance of having the pier, to which I have alluded, repaired as speedily as possible, from the fact that a part of this structure has been completely swept away, so that it is utterly impossible for the light-house keeper to get to the light-house during a violent storm—at which time, above all others, the mariner needs, at night, a light to guide him safely into port, where he may be secure from the perils of the tempest without.

Sir, the members of this committee have but a very imperfect idea of the dangers to which the light-house keeper is there exposed, nor can they form any adequate conception of them, unless they were to stand in full view of the light-house during the prevalence of one of those terrible storms—so common upon the lakes—and view that faithful officer, in his frail boat, struggling amidst the most frightful dangers of a raging tempest, and the heaving, howling, headlong rush of the surf and the sea, to reach the light-house, and to light it up, that the mariner on the coast may know where he is, and whither to guide his vessel.

Some two years since Mr. Webber, who then and there officiated, in attempting to reach the light-house in his boat, to light it up, was overpowered by the storm; his boat was dashed upon the shore, himself thrown out and crippled for life; and but for the timely arrival of aid he must have met a watery grave. He was taken from the water almost lifeless, was resuscitated, and still lives to testify to the folly and inhumanity of the Congress of the United States in withholding an appropriation for the repair of a work of such vast and vital importance to the safety of the shipping upon the lake, and to the lives of passengers and seamen.

But, sir, this is not the only reason why an appropriation should be made for the improvement of that harbor. In consequence of the various and extensive breaches that have been made through the west pier, the river is fast filling up with sand; bars are being formed at different points; navigation is becoming obstructed; and unless the evil is arrested—and speedily arrested, too—that beautiful river, now so excellent and ample for shipping, must soon be so much impaired as to render it impracticable for steamers and other vessels to reach their landing. Huron, sir, is not an insignificant place, unworthy of the attention of this honorable body. It now has two railroads, upon which are daily brought to the place scores of strangers, and the rich products of the country. The exports of Huron last year amounted to $1,246,197, and its imports to $500,000, amounting in all to $1,746,197; and with its present facilities, will soon more than double its commerce. I therefore, sir, unhesitatingly assert, that justice to the citizens of Huron and Milan, as well as to the shipping upon the lake, demands the immediate appropriation of the $13,500 recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and reported by the Committee on Commerce. This appropriation would complete those portions of the piers most exposed, and thus render that port a safe and excellent harbor.

Mr. Chairman, I wish now to invite the attention of the committee, for a few moments, to the harbor of Vermillion. The Committee on Commerce has recommended no appropriation for that port, for the reason that, at the time of the preparation of that report, there appeared to be, in their estimation, no necessary occasion for an appropriation. Since that period, however, circumstances, over which no human agency had or could have the slightest control, have occurred to induce me now to appeal to this committee for an appropriation for the harbor of Vermillion.

* The unprecedented storms on Lake Erie last spring completely annihilated a part of the east pier at that port, carrying it away several feet beneath the water level; in consequence of which the sand is rapidly filling up the channel. This great source of mischief to that harbor should be at once remedied. For this an appropriation of at least $10,000 will be required.

I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that it is rather dangerous to attempt to tack amendments upon a bill; but the necessity of this is so imperative, that I feel it to be incumbent upon me, as the Representative here, upon this floor, of the citizens of Vermillion, to present this matter to the committee, and to appeal to you for that aid which the present and future protection and safety of that harbor absolutely requires.

Last spring, during the prevalence of a storm, and after the pier had been swept away, the schooner D. W. Church was wrecked, the vessel and cargo were a total loss, amounting to over $15,000; and, but for the timely aid of the citizens, the entire crew would have been lost with the vessel. But the citizens of Vermillion, seeing the awful danger to which they were exposed, flew to their rescue, and, by almost superhuman efforts, saved the crew from a watery grave.

The difficulty, sir, in entering this harbor is, that, during the prevalence of a gale from the east, it causes a powerful current to set through a large breach in the east pier, near the land, and the water coming in contact with the west pier, causes a strong current to set out of the channel. The vessel coming in contact with this current is (for such was the case with the schooner D. W. Church) thrown upon the west pier. Once dashed upon the pier, she becomes unmanageable, and her destruction is inevitable; for the feeble hand of man is powerless at such times.

Sir, the danger and damages resulting from the loss of the pier extend not alone to the shipping, and to the lives and limbs of seamen and travelers, but also to the harbor itself. The channel, in consequence of the loss of the pier, is, as in the case of others of which I have spoken, fast filling up with sand, and must ere long, unless speedily arrested, completely exclude all vessels from entering the port. Vermillion is a place of considerable trade and commerce; is worthy of the attention of Congress, and justly merits the fostering care of the Government. There is a beacon which, without the pier, is rendered almost useless to the mariner in attempting to enter the harbor in the darkness of the night. I hope, therefore, Mr. Chairman, no objection will be urged against the small appropriation I solicit for the improvement of the harbor of Vermillion, to save it from destruction, and to protect our shipping and the lives of our citizens and mariners from the dangers to which they are now continually exposed.

Mr. Chairman, I am done. I thank the committee for their patient attention to the few remarks I have submitted for their consideration. My object has been simply to state facts in regard to the present condition and wants of the harbors within my district, and the absolute necessity of an immediate appropriation for their improvement.

I hope, sir, that this subject will meet with the cordial approval of every member of this House, and that the appropriations, so necessary and just, will be cheerfully and promptly made.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I oppose the amendment.

Mr. BLISS. I move to amend the amendment by adding five dollars. While speaking upon this question, I design to reply to some remarks that have been made upon the constitutionality of making appropriations of this character for the improvement of our inland navigation. I believe that I am as good a Democrat as—

Mr. WENTWORTH. I ask the Chair if the gentleman from Ohio is in order, and if his remarks must not be confined to the amendment he has offered?

Mr. BLISS. I think the gentleman, after having wandered ad libitum himself, might wait until he sees whether I am in order or not. I believe, and so do my constituents, that it is not within the power of Congress to make these appropriations. I believe in the good old Democratic doctrine, that Congress has the power to make what are strictly internal improvements. In our section of the country we are so old fogyish yet as to adhere to the uniform doctrine of General Jackson, and which was carried out in the administration of Martin Van Buren, while he was admitted to be a Democrat.

Mr. WENTWORTH. What is the amendment pending? We have but a few minutes before the time for adjournment, and I must ask the Chair if the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio are in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The remarks of the gentleman from Ohio must be confined to the amendment he has offered.

Mr. BLISS. I am claiming that it is within the province of the House to pass this bill, and to attach the amendment I have offered to this bill. I am replying to the arguments of other gentlemen on the converse of the proposition. Am I right?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is right if he confines his remarks to the amendment he has offered.

Mr. BLISS. I think that not only the amendment is constitutional, but that the five dollars are also constitutional, and that both are necessary, and I am trying to demonstrate my position. I do not know of any particular locality in this Union where the interpretation of Democracy is to be sought. I am fully aware of the value of high precedents. I, however, look first to the text, and for the elucidation of it I secondly look to precedent. I find no objection in the text of the Constitution, and I find that the best exponents of that instrument, who have ever lived in this country, give my view of the text, and, therefore, I do not allow any gentleman to transfer me over to any other party, because I believe that it is within the power of this Government to protect its commerce, and to protect the lives of the men by whom it is carried on.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I am opposed to the amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. Bliss's amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. LINDSLEY's amendment; and being taken, it was not agreed to.

Mr. GREEN. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the eighty-ninth line:

For the improvement of the harbor at Port Clinton, Ohio, on Lake Erie, $20,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I offer the following amendments:

For the improvement of the harbor at the mouth of the Kalamazoo river, Michigan, $15,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at South Black river, Michigan, $10,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Muskegon, Michigan, $10,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman from Michigan whether these improvements have been provided for by law?

Mr. CLARK. The estimate for them has been authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. But is there any law authorizing the making of these improvements?

Mr. CLARK. No improvements have yet been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendments out of order.

The following clause being under consideration:

For continuing the improvement of the Hudson river, above and below Albany, but not above Troy, New York, $50,000.

Mr. SAGE moved to amend the same by striking out "$50,000" and inserting after the words "Hudson river" the following:

Including six steam dredging machines, with lighters, and a steam tug for towing the same, with the dredged matter beyond the influence of the currents; wheelbarrows for the same purpose; shovels, other tools, and contingencies of outfit, as per estimate and recommendation of Major Delafield to General Totten, Chief Engineer, under date of May 25, 1853, $146,142."

Mr. S. said: Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment, I but perform a duty to my constituents, as well as to two thirds of the whole country, for if there is such a thing as a national work in this country—and I believe there are many—then the Hudson river must be classed as such. Sir, as early as the year 1797 the Legislature of State of New York began to appropriate moneys for improving the condition of the bed and channel of this river, and has continued to give to it, with the aid and assistance of the cities of Albany and Troy, its fostering care, down to the year 1834, when Congress began to make appropri-tions for the improvement of the navigation of this river, and continued to do so until the year 1833, since which time the cities of Albany and Troy have continued to appropriate money for the improvement of this national work, with the exception of an appropriation of $10,000 by the Legislature of the State of New York, and $4,000 by citizens of New York, in the year 1852. In 1852 Congress appropriated $50,000 to continue the improvements on the Hudson river, which is now being expended.

The sum which I now ask for with my amendment is to provide the necessary dredging machines, with their appurtenances, to complete this improvement, in the most economical and permanent manner. The whole estimated cost for this improvement, as will be seen by reference to Major Delafeld's report and estimates, in Part II, President's Message and Accompanying Documents, pages 332, 333, and 334, is $450,986, which is distributed into six years, as follows: $146,142 first year, as provided for in my amendment, and $60,952 for the second and each succeeding year.

Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the committee to a few facts more, and I am done.

The value of the exports of the products of the United States in 1853, exclusive of gold, was $189,869,162.

The value of all property that came to the Hudson river from the Erie and Champlain canals in 1853 was.....$73,688,044

The value of all property that came to the Hudson river by railroad in the year 1853, is estimated at one eighth of the amount by canals, say..... 9,211,005

Making a total of.....$82,899,049

This large amount is the products of the southwestern and northwestern States, as well as northwestern New England, Canada, and the State of New York.

Mr. Chairman, it is now known, I presume, by every member of this committee, that the State of New York has built, and is now completing, the most extensive and costly system of canals, for the purpose of uniting the waters of the great inland seas of America with the waters of the Hudson river and the Atlantic ocean, that the history of any State in this or any other country can point to. Sir, the cost of the Erie canal alone, when completed, will amount to the sum of $45,000,000. And let me say at this point, that this canal is now, and will continue to be, of as much, and, I think, more importance to the growing and prosperous West, than to the State that has built it; and let me ask the Representatives from that section of our country if they are willing to allow the delay and expense incident to the interruptions of the navigation of the Hudson river to their property getting to market, when so small a sum as asked for will prevent it? I trust not. Let me add, the time will come, in my opinion, when the great southwestern and northwestern States will demand the removal of all restriction to the free ingress in the transportation of their products to the sea-board. So the quicker we commence this system of improvements, the sooner we shall anticipate what time and history will demonstrate.

Mr. Chairman, I am admonished of the near expiration of my time, which I regret, and therefore must hasten to a close. I was told yesterday, by a leading member of this House, that we must pass this bill as it is, or it would be vetoed. Has it come to this, that we have got to surrender our judgments, our consciences to the whims and will of the Executive? I trust not. For one, I shall never do it.

After the secret treaty with Mexico, and the appropriation of $10,000,000 for a barren strip of her land, and other appropriations that have been made at this session, I think it comes with an exceeding bad grace to talk about vetoes on bills making economical appropriations for continuing and completing the great highways of internal commerce, by the means of which will be developed the vast and unlimited resources of the greatest, best, and most prosperous country the sun ever shone on. I trust the amendment may be adopted.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. EVERHART. I offer the following amendment:

For continuing the repairs of the piers of Marcus Hook, Delaware county, Pennsylvania, $5,000.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The following clause being under consideration:

For continuing the improvement of the navigation of Cape Fear river, at and below Wilmington, North Carolina, $50,000.

Mr. WENTWORTH said: The matter of the improvement of the Cape Fear river was disposed of the day before yesterday. I therefore move to strike this clause out of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Mississippi, moved to amend the bill by increasing the appropriation to the Pascagoula river $5,900, so as to make the whole appropriation $15,000.

Mr. HARRIS. If the principle of this bill is to be established—if it is to be engrafted upon the policy and practice of the General Government, and thus perpetuated—I feel at liberty to ask, in behalf of my constituents, that the appropriation be increased to an amount sufficient to effect the object sought to be accomplished by the expenditure. I do not feel disposed to countenance the practice now prevalent, of beginning with a sum too small to excite apprehensions, but sufficient to establish a precedent, and to lay the foundation, to furnish a pretext, for future appropriations. I prefer to ask what is necessary at the outset. There is nothing in the report of the officer who made the survey and examination of the bar at the mouth of the Pascagoula river to which I object. I take it for granted that it is fair and correct; but the report proceeds upon the idea that a depth of six feet in the channel, which is to be made through the bar, is all that is needed. From information derived from intelligent persons familiar with the locality, with its wants and necessities, I feel authorized to say that a depth of nine feet is necessary to render the work of much practical utility.

The Pascagoula river affords to a large number of my constituents, engaged in the lumber trade, the only means of transporting their lumber to market. What little commerce they have—a commerce rendered comparatively insignificant by the want of that aid which is very liberally afforded elsewhere in the improvement of navigation—is dependent entirely upon this river. The resources of the region through which it flows are very great in this one important article of commerce. The only hindrance to their complete development, is the obstruction to navigation presented by this bar, which lies across the mouth of the river. The great value of the timber rendered accessible by this river has attracted attention of late, and has led to the application to this Government for aid to remove a barrier to its navigation. The sum of $15,000 is believed to be necessary to make a channel through the bar of sufficient depth and width to admit the entrance of vessels of sufficient size for the purposes of the commerce of that river; and I ask that the appropriation be increased to that sum. I will not disguise my own opinion as to the bill under consideration, on account of the interest I may feel in this particular item. I say frankly to the committee that I am inflexibly opposed to this system of improvements by the General Government. I intend to war against it—to urge a relentless, and, if in the compass of my exertions, an exterminating war against it.

A MEMBER. Strike out the appropriation.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well; strike it out. I trust it was not supposed that my vote was dependent upon this small appropriation. If there be no merit in the appropriation, strike it out. Such considerations will not influence me, or my State, in this matter. The ground I assume here is, that if Congress is determined to embark in this scheme—if you are going to divide out the money in the Treasury—Mississippi, having contributed to the common fund, is entitled to her share. If the public money is to take this direction, give to Mississippi some part, at least, of what she has paid into the Treasury. With a sea-board of more than seventy miles on the Gulf of Mexico, into which two of her principal rivers flow, the navigation of both of which is obstructed, Mississippi gets, in a bill appropriating millions, the small sum of $5,500. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Some say strike this item from the bill. I hope that will not be done, for it is one of the most deserving in the bill. I have the estimates, and upon them the amendment has been drawn up.

The question was taken on Mr. HARRIS's amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. SKELTON. I move to amend by inserting the following:

For continuing the improvement of the navigation of Shrewsbury river, in New Jersey, $10,000.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I make the point that the amendment is not in order. Is there any law authorizing the appropriation?

Mr. SKELTON. Appropriations for the same purpose have heretofore been made, surveys have been made, and additional appropriations have been recommended by the engineer. This amendment is to complete what has already begun.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman to say that appropriations for the same improvement have been made heretofore?

Mr. SKELTON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair entertains the amendment on the gentleman's statement.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FENTON. I move to amend, pro forma, by increasing the appropriation of the bill now under consideration one dollar. I had intended to offer some remarks in support of this bill, and upon the subject of river and harbor improvements generally, omitting not to give my views upon the question of "tonnage duties." I had foregone this pleasure, and perhaps duty, owing to the near approach of the close of this session, and the general desire to cut off all debate under the hour rule, limiting all remarks to five minutes. My anxiety to discuss this question is now increased by the remarks made this morning by a member of the Committee on Commerce, [Mr. MILLSON,] and I now ask the privilege of publishing in the Globe what I shall fail to say in the five minutes allowed to me under the rule.

Having accomplished my purpose, I now withdraw my amendment.

The following clause was then read:

"For a resurvey of the harbors at Marblehead, Nantucket, and Sandy Bay, in the State of Massachusetts, $1,500."

Mr. FLAGLER. I move to amend that clause by inserting after the word "Massachusetts" the following words:

—and the harbor at the mouth of the Eighteen Mile creek on Lake Ontario.

There has been a survey made at this point of precisely the same character as others, for which appropriations are made in the bill. There are reasons why a resurvey should be made, and therefore I offer this amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROOKS. I offer the following amendment:

For continuing the habit of improving rivers and harbors, all the balance of the money in the Treasury of the United States.

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. HAVEN. Inasmuch as we have got through the items of the bill, I desire to offer an amendment to the second section, which I deem of very great consequence. I call for the reading of the second section.

The second section was then read, as follows:

Sec. 2. And he further enacted, That the Secretary of War, before expending any part of the money herein appropriated, shall cause a thorough reexamination and resurvey of each of the public works to be made, and shall adopt that plan which shall complete each one, or make the greatest approximation to completing it, with the specific appropriation therefor. And it shall be his duty, at the next session of Congress, to report the result of said reexamination and resurvey, with the plan adopted, and the items of expenditure under said plan; and he shall accompany said report with a statement of the amount and date of all former appropriations for each work, and a full estimate for its entire and permanent completion, with the amount that can be profitably expended in the next fiscal year. And he shall also state in what collection district each work is located, and at or near what port of entry, light-house, or fort; what amount of revenue was collected at the nearest port of entry for the last fiscal year; and, as far as practicable, what amount of commerce and navigation would be benefited by the completion of each particular work: Provided, That he shall continue to make such a report at the commencement of every session of Congress until the works herein provided for shall all be completed.

Mr. HAVEN. Having got through with the

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, JULY 13, 1854.

NEW SERIES.....No. 107.

items of the bill, I desire to strike out the first eight lines of the section, and insert what I send to the Clerk's desk. This part of the section ties up these appropriations so very tight that our resurveys will be rendered almost useless unless my amendment is adopted.

The amendment was then read, as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War, before expending any part of the money herein appropriated, shall, in such cases as he may think the public interests require, cause a reexamination and resurvey of the public works hereby appropriated for, and he is hereby authorized to modify the present plan, if, in his opinion, the public interests will be materially benefited thereby, and the money appropriated by this act shall be so applied to complete or make the nearest approximation to completing the work for which each specific appropriation is made; and it shall be the duty of the said Secretary, at the earliest practicable time, to report to Congress the result of such resurvey, with the plan.

Mr. HAVEN. In this case I propose to substitute what has been read from the first eight lines of the second section of the bill. Now let me say a few words to the committee in support of this proposition. The second section, as it now stands, is in these words: that "before expending any portion of the money hereby appropriated, the Secretary shall cause a thorough reexamination and resurvey," &c.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. We will agree to the amendment.

Mr. HAVEN. As I understand my proposition is agreeable to the committee, I will say no more about it.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I have no objection.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. HAVEN; and it was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I have an amendment which I wish to offer at the end of the second section, to follow right on. It is as follows:

And that it shall not be lawful hereafter to employ any commissioned, officer, in any capacity, of the United States Army, in the superintendence of any of the works herein named, so long as the said officer shall retain his commission in the military service.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. GREENWOOD. I demand tellers on that amendment.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I offer the following amendment to the amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to withhold any or all of these appropriations, if, in his opinion, they are unconstitutional or inexpedient.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I wish to inquire whether it is in order now to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE] has the floor.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I did not expect the amendment which I have offered would meet with favor from the friends of this bill.

The Administration and the War Department have been frequently referred to during this discussion, and the estimates of the War Department have been relied upon by gentlemen in favor of these appropriations.

The intimation has been made, if it has not been directly asserted, that the Administration and the Secretary of War favored these appropriations. My object in offering the amendment was to test the sincerity of gentlemen on this question. If they believe the appropriations in this bill meet with favor from that quarter, why not adopt the amendment I have proposed? I know, sir, and the country knows, that the Secretary of War is opposed to this system of squandering the public money. His whole political life proves his devotion to the doctrine of a rigid construction of the Federal Constitution. The estimates were made by officers of the War Department, under the law; but the Secretary of War has nowhere recommended these appropriations to be made by Congress. I have said that I believe I understand the position of the Secretary of War on this question, and I think I know the position of the Administration, but I have no authority to do so, and do not undertake to speak for it here. The President's course, while he was a member of Congress, shows plainly what his opinions are; and if that does not, his annual message to Congress is sufficiently explicit to satisfy the most skeptical, that whatever may be the views of gentlemen on this floor who are most boisterous in claiming to be Democrats of the strict construction school, that the President, at least, finds no authority in the Constitution to carry on a system of internal improvements by the Federal Government.

I read the following extract from his message:

"I have omitted to ask your favorable consideration for the estimates of works of a local character in twenty-seven of the thirty-one States, amounting to $1,754,500, because, independently of the grounds which have so often been urged against the application of the Federal revenue for works of this character, inequality with consequent injustice is inherent in the nature of the proposition, and because the plan has proved entirely inadequate to the accomplishment of the objects sought.

"The subject of internal improvements, claiming alike the interest and good will of all, has, nevertheless, been the basis of much political discussion, and has stood as a deep graven line of division between statesmen of eminent ability and patriotism. The rule of strict construction of all powers delegated by the States to the General Government has arrayed itself, from time to time, against the rapid progress of expenditures from the National Treasury on works of a local character within the States. Memorable as an epoch in the history of this subject is the message of President Jackson, of the 27th of May, 1830, which met the system of internal improvements in its comparative infancy; but so rapid had been its growth, that the projected appropriations in that year for works of this character had risen to the alarming amount of more than $100,000,000.

"In that message the President admitted the difficulty of bringing back the operations of the Government to the construction of the Constitution set up in 1793, and marked it as an admonitory proof of the necessity of guarding that instrument with sleepless vigilance against the authority of precedents, which had not the sanction of its most plainly defined powers."

"If that can be regarded as a system, which, in the experience of more than thirty years, has at no time so commanded the public judgment as to give it the character of a settled policy—which, though it has produced some works of conceded importance, has been attended with an expenditure quite disproportionate to their value—and has resulted in squandering large sums upon objects which have answered no valuable purpose; the interests of all the States require it to be abandoned, unless hopes may be indulged for the future which find no warrant in the past."

Now, sir, I venture the prediction that if this bill should pass—and I regret to say that the indications are that it unquestionably will—that the President will follow the example of Mr. Polk, and return it to the House with his veto upon it. And if he should, he will add another to the many evidences he has already given of his determination to preserve unimpaired, during his Administration, the true principles of the Constitution. But if I am mistaken in this, I know what the Democratic platform declares on this subject. It is, "that the Constitution does not confer upon the General Government the power to commence and carry on a general system of internal improvements."

Mr. SEWARD, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BARKSDALE. Certainly.

Mr. SEWARD. Does the Democratic party support this system?

Mr. BARKSDALE. There are some slippery Democrats, and some Whigs who have recently slid into the Democratic ranks also, [laughter,] who advocate internal improvements by the General Government; but I hold that a Democrat who adheres to the principles of the party cannot do it. And I contend that those who are supporting these appropriations are, to that extent, abandoning the colors of the Democratic party.

Now, sir, the principle which has ever been ingrafted on the Democratic platform is, that the General Government has no power to carry on a general system of internal improvements. If this bill does not embrace a general system of internal improvements, I ask what bill can embrace such a system? It commences in Maine, extends throughout New England, lingers in the northern and middle States, but "growing small by degrees and beautifully less," as it approaches the South, it grants to the State of Mississippi the enormous sum of $5,500. It seems to me that this is a system of internal improvements in all its length, breadth, and amplitude.

Mr. YATES, (interrupting.) I wish to know whether the gentleman speaks for himself, or for the whole Democratic party, when he says the Democratic party is opposed to internal improvements?

Mr. BARKSDALE. I speak for myself; but I say that all who are Democrats, and stand upon the Democratic platform, are opposed to a system of internal improvements by the General Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SEWARD. I want the gentleman from Mississippi, and the Democratic members of the House, to understand that I once belonged to the Whig party, and I am not ashamed of it, or of many of the principles which they advocated. For sufficient reasons, known to myself, I connected myself with the Democratic party; and whenever it becomes necessary, I will give the reasons why.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SEWARD. Oh, certainly.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to say, in reference to the remark made by me to which the gentleman alludes, that we are very happy to receive the gentleman from Georgia into the Democratic party. But we prefer that while he remains with us he would adhere to our platform.

Mr. SEWARD. I should be thankful to the gentleman from Mississippi if he would state at least what is the platform of Democracy in the State of Mississippi; for I had supposed that, so far as the Democracy of that State were concerned, they were very unsettled in their opinions. [Laughter.] I think the present Secretary of War, in the estimation of a portion of the Democrats, placed himself outside the Democratic party when he became a State-rights man. I had supposed that those who placed themselves upon the State-rights doctrine, assumed, to some extent, the doctrines of nullification and secession. The State-rights party of the South have always held, to some extent, those doctrines, and have always been regarded by those who style themselves National Democrats as unsound in doctrine, and as not standing upon the Democratic platform.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Does not the gentleman recognize the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions as sound Democratic doctrine? And were Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Madison, the authors of these resolutions, outside of the Democratic party? [Laughter.]

Mr. SEWARD. Well, sir, I have never yet been able to ascertain what the resolutions of 1798 and 1799 meant. [Great laughter.] But I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi, that if the abstract notions entertained by some gentlemen here from Virginia and Mississippi were to prevail, it would be impossible for Congress ever to carry out any practical or useful legislation at all.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I rise to a question of order.

[Loud cries of "No!" "No!" "Let him go on!"]

Mr. SEWARD. I do not want a point of order raised upon me here. I do not think I am out of order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I insist upon my point of order. I have no idea whether the amendment pending is germane to the bill or not; but I rise to inquire whether this discussion is germane either to the pending amendment or to the bill itself?

Several MEMBERS. It is germane enough; let him go on.

Mr. SEWARD. Am I entitled to the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to the floor; but the Chair will first decide the question of order. The Chair has allowed a latitude of debate upon this question which he would not have done if a question of order had been raised. He has, however, indulged the gentleman from Georgia, inasmuch as an attack seemed to have been made upon him.

Mr. SEWARD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will endeavor to confine myself within the rules of order.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SEWARD. Not now. I want the gentleman from Mississippi to define the exact limit of the constitutional power which is conferred upon Congress to enter into a general system of internal improvements, or a special system. I want the gentleman to give me his definition. That is what I want. Now, Mr. Chairman, let it be distinctly understood that I have no constitutional scruples upon this subject, and never had any. The power to make appropriations for works of internal improvements has been conceded by both parties, and the difference between them only exists as to the character and extent of those improvements, as to what is national and what is local. Hence there can be no well-defined limit of power. If the Constitution vests in Congress this power at all, which is admitted by both parties, the exact quantum of power is not defined by the Constitution, and necessarily involves discretion upon the part of Congress, the beginning and end of which is difficult to determine in all cases, and can only be limited with certainty by some interdict of the Constitution, where its provisions would be violated, or the rights of the States and the people be infringed. Of course, in the time allowed me, I cannot present my views at length upon this subject. If these views are Democratic, then, to that extent, I stand upon the Democratic platform. Now I will hear from the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. BARKSDALE. If anything could satisfy me that the gentleman from Georgia has forgotten that he claims to be a Democrat now, and imagines himself still a Whig, it would be the declaration he has just made, that he does not understand the resolutions of '98 and '99. [Laughter.] Democrats have no difficulty in understanding these resolutions. They are the very basis which upholds the Democratic organization.

Now, sir, in reply to the question of the gentleman from Georgia, I will state that I do not propose, at this time, to make the distinction between general and special improvements. I will say, however, that the whole country has acquiesced in the policy of improvements, which are purely national in their character; such, for instance, as the building of light-houses; constructing buoys, &c. Hence each bill must stand upon its own merits; but I find no improvements of that character in this bill. It bears upon its face the evidence that its object is to carry on a system of internal improvements in the States, which I regard as both unconstitutional and inexpedient.

Mr. SEWARD. Well, sir, I think I can show the gentleman that I have pretty good reason for making the declaration.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SEWARD. I move to amend the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendments are in order.

Mr. SEWARD. I desire then to speak in opposition to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must inform the gentleman that no further discussion is in order.

Mr. SEWARD. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi, by adding the following:

Provided, The President of the United States concur in opinion with the Secretary of War.

[Cries of "Good!" "Good!"]

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. The amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the question of order. The amendment is in the third degree, and cannot be received.

The question was taken on Mr. BARKSDALE's amendment to the amendment; and it was rejected.

The question recurred on Mr. STANTON's amendment.

Mr. KEITT. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, by adding the following:

Provided, It does not increase the patronage of the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I only desire to say that this whole matter was referred at the beginning of the session to a special committee; that that committee has had the whole question under consideration; that majority and minority reports have been submitted; that the majority have offered a bill to the House to carry out the views of their report, and that all the questions are to come before the House. Now, I would ask the committee whether it is fair and just and proper to take any snap judgment like this on the action of the special committee?

You appointed out of your own body a special committee for the purpose of taking charge of this matter. That committee have examined into it, made a report, and all the evidence which they gathered will be before the House, and I now ask, when this report is to come before the House, and when a bill predicated upon it, and comprehending this subject-matter, is to be before this body, whether you ought to foreclose and forestall the action of that committee which you appointed yourselves, by any line of action dehors the record?

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I desire to say, in reply to my friend from South Carolina, that he labors under a great misapprehension in regard to this matter, although he is a member of this special committee; for we have made no report at all upon this subject. The report which the committee made was upon the subject of armories. The House does not want information upon this subject. Here is a report, which I hold in my hands, made twelve years ago upon this very subject, demonstrating the necessity of the very change I propose. If the committee will give me their attention, I will read a small portion of it:

"The construction of all our public works, up to 1838, was confided to the engineer corps of the Army. In that year (August 23) twelve of these works were transferred to the topographical corps. In 1839, (January 22,) fifty five were also transferred; and one, the Delaware breakwater, was transferred in June of that year. No appropriations of any consequence having been made for the prosecution of the public works since 1838, but little work has been done or money expended on them since that period, or since they have been placed in charge of the Topographical Bureau.

"In what manner the administration of our public works will hereafter be conducted, (if indeed any further progress in them be authorized by Congress,) by the corps to which they have been transferred, remains to be seen.

"If the same errors of calculation, want of economy, delays, and mismanagement, which characterized the proceedings of the old engineer corps, find place in the administration of the new, Congress should long hesitate before it consigned to its care any portion of the public works, and the vast expenditure of money attending their construction.

"With a view of enabling the House to judge of the propriety of making the suggested transfer to the engineer corps, the committee have prepared a statement of the estimates and expenditures of many of our public works. (Statement annexed, marked B.)

"This statement should be taken in connection with or as a supplement to a report of the Committee of Ways and Means on the same subject. (See reports of committees of the House, 1835-36, vol. 1, No. 297.) A comparison of these estimates with the expenditures may suggest doubts whether light-houses or any other public works should be committed to the guardianship of men who, however scientific, seem to have wanted judgment, tact, and just notions of economy."

Mr. KEITT. I withdraw my amendment.

The question then being on Mr. STANTON's amendment, tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HUGHES and CAMPBELL were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 80.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I have an amendment which I wish to offer. It is a small matter, which I am satisfied the committee will vote in favor of without opposition.

The amendment is as follows:

And provided, That all persons intrusted with the disbursement of the funds appropriated for the works named in this bill shall be required to give bond and ample security for the faithful application of the same.

[Cries of "Right!" "Right!"]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAVEN. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 392, and had adopted various amendments thereto, and had directed him to report the bill and amendments to the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was here received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate have passed, without amendment, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. No. 338. An act to authorize the President of the United States to cause to be surveyed the tract of land in the Territory of Minnesota belonging to the half-breeds or mixed blood of the Dacotah or Sioux nation of Indians, and for other purposes.

Also, that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate (No. 202) entitled:

An act making further appropriations for the improvement of the Cape Fear river, North Carolina.

Also, that the Senate have passed bills of the following titles:

S. No. 138. An act authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia;

S. No. 425. An act to constitute Tusculum, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery; and

S. No. 428. An act granting to Jasper Strong and George Terrill, and their associates, the right of way for a railroad through the reserved lands near the navy-yard, Pensacola, in the State of Florida.

In which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled bills of the following titles; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

S. No. 404. An act to authorize the issue of a register to the brig Amelia by the name of Abby Frances;

S. No. 202. An act making further appropriations for the improvement of Cape Fear river, North Carolina;

S. No. 343. An act to confirm the claim of William H. Henderson and the heirs of Robert Henderson to five hundred acres of land in the Bastrop grant; and

S. No. 330. An act for the relief of Juan M. Lucio and José L. Lucio.

[A message was here received from the President of the United States, by SIDNEY WEBSTER, his Private Secretary, transmitting to the House a communication in writing.]

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I have here a communication from the Attorney General of the United States, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have read.

The Clerk then read a communication from the Attorney General in reference to the connection of the Government of the United States with the canal around the falls of the Ohio river at Louisville, Kentucky.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move the previous question upon the engrossment of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MURRAY. I demand tellers on that motion.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would suggest to the gentleman from Louisiana that he withdraw his motion to lay the bill upon the table until the demand for the previous question has been seconded. He can then renew it.

Mr. PERKINS. I cannot withdraw the motion.

Mr. LETCHER. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GROW. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WALSH. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SOLLERS and WHEELER were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 87.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that there be a call of the House; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the motion was disagreed to.

The question was then taken on Mr. PERKINS's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 57, nays 99; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Barksdale, Bock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caskie, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, John G. Davis, Dowdell, Edmundson, John M. Elliott, Goode, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hillyer, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kirtredge, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, McMullin, McQueen, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Orr, Packer, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Puryear, Reese, Rowe, Ruffin, Shaw, Skelton, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, Will R. Walsh, and Daniel B. Wright—57.

NAYS—Messrs. Banks, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bliss, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Churchill, Clark, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dick, Dickinson, Ellison, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, English, Farley, Fenton, Flager, Florence, Giddings, Green, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Henn, Hiester, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Johnson, Kerr, Knox, Lindley, Lindsley, McDougall, Macy, Middlesworth, Morgan, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peckham, Pennington, Preston, Ready, Richardson, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Showers, Gerrit Smith, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walker, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollicoffer—99.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was disagreed to.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. KEITT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I hope the friends of the bill will remain here this evening until the bill is passed.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn; there being, on a division—ayes 68, noes 81.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole be read over, and the question taken in gross on all those upon which a separate vote is not demanded?

Mr. WALSH. No, sir; let us take a separate vote upon each of them.

First amendment:

In the clause of the bill providing for the improvement of the Ohio river, including the repair of the Cumberland dam, strike out "$30,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$190,000, $100,000 of said sum to be expended in the improvement of the said river above the falls." And that so soon as the President of the United States is notified by the board of president and directors of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company that all of the capital stock of said company is owned by the United States, and that the said company is free from all debts and liabilities, then the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint the proper officers to take possession of said canal on the part of the United States, and to take control of the canal and canal property aforesaid, so that the same may not fall into decay or obstruct navigation; and the expenses attending the custody and management of said canal and canal property shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not exceeding the sum of $25,000 per annum; and from and after the 1st day of January next, the navigation of said canal shall be free from all tolls and charges whatsoever.

Mr. LETCHER. I demand the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KEITT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at ten minutes past four o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 12, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CAPE FEAR RIVER.

Mr. BADGER. I will ask the Senate, before proceeding with the usual call for petitions, to allow me to have a bill disposed of, which has been returned from the House of Representatives, with an amendment. It is a bill which passed the Senate some four or five months ago, "making further appropriation for the improvement of the Cape Fear river, North Carolina."

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

Mr. BADGER. I will state in a few words what the amendment is. The bill, as it passed the Senate, appropriated $140,000 for continuing the improvement of the Cape Fear river, at or near its mouth. There was a second section in the bill, which appropriated $60,000 to reimburse the citizens of Wilmington for some moneys which they had raised, and which they had put into the hands of the officer in charge of the work, for the purpose of continuing it, after a previous appropriation had been expended.

In the year 1852 Congress passed, in the river and harbor bill, an appropriation for the purpose of removing the obstructions in the Cape Fear. The next year no general bill upon the subject was passed, and the Senate made an amendment to the naval appropriation bill, appropriating a further sum for continuing the work, which was lost in consequence of a disagreement between the two Houses. The difficulty then presented to the citizens of Wilmington was this: the mouth of the river was filling up in consequence of some jetties thrown out by the Government for the protection of Fort Caswell, which turning the current upon Bald Head, a sandy point opposite the fort, washed the sand into the channel. If the work were stopped, from the failure of the appropriation, matters would not remain as they then were, to be resumed at that point when a further appropriation should be obtained; but, on the contrary, things would, in the interval, grow worse, the filling up go on, the channel become yet shallower, the work already done be entirely lost, and consequently more money be required for the removal of the obstruction, in consequence of this interval in the prosecution of the work.

Congress, then, having authorized the work—Congress having assumed it as a public measure of importance to be accomplished by the United States—the appropriation having become exhausted, and one House of Congress having made an appropriation for carrying on the work, and those improvements for the protection of the site of Fort Caswell, having been made by the Government, and, therefore, the injury resulting being mainly attributable to the action of the Government, the citizens of Wilmington felt it was no intrusion of theirs, no attempt to entrap or engage the Government in the prosecution of it, which would have been highly blameable and presumptuous in these citizens; but merely a fair and justifiable effort to prevent an actual injury to the Government as well as themselves, which would have resulted by a stoppage of a work already authorized and commenced by Congress. Under these circumstances, this sum of money was subscribed, and portions of it raised. It was not expended by the citizens or their agents. It was placed in the hands of the officer of the Government in charge of the work; and, so far as it has been paid over and applied, was paid over to him, and applied by him, and under his direction.

Under these circumstances, sir, I thought it was not reasonable to strike out that part of the bill. I felt satisfied that the subject was not fully understood, and that the Government must ultimately see that, in the removal of an obstruction to a navigable water of one of the States of the Union, which was caused by the act of the Government itself, it is rather hard, rather ungenerous, to require that a small, but thriving and energetic community upon its banks, should contribute out of their own pockets a portion of the expense necessary to remove the obstruction—an obstruction mainly caused by the Government itself.

I have an abiding confidence that when the matter comes to be understood at another session, this act, small in itself, for the amount is not large, but having high claims of justice and propriety to sanction it, will meet with the approbation of Congress. In the mean time I hope the Senate will concur in the amendment which has been made by the House of Representatives, and allow the bill to be passed.

Mr. CASS. As there is no noise and confusion upon this occasion, I shall certainly vote for the proposition.

The amendment was concurred in.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SUMNER. I have a communication from Mr. Thomas, the agent of the United States for the prosecution of claims before the commission now in session in London, covering certain papers, which I desire, for a moment, to explain. It seems that Messrs. Blyth & Greene, merchants in the island of Mauritius, and also in London, rendered important service to certain American passengers at that place, advancing considerable sums of money, for which they have never received any return. That service was the ground of a memorial, and a claim which they laid before the commission now in session in London, on the 16th of the last month; but, according to the terms of the convention between the United States and Great Britain, the period for presenting such claims expired on the 15th, the day before the claim was actually presented. Under these circumstances, Mr. Thomas, the agent of the United States at London, has done me the honor to inclose the papers to me, and ask me to present them to Congress. I do that now; and I move their reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROCKWELL presented the petition of Emory Washburn and six hundred other men, of Massachusetts, praying for the repeal of the act of 1850, known as the fugitive slave bill.

He said that he was informed, by a letter from a gentleman of high character, and one of the petitioners, that the petitioners are most of them citizens of the city of Worcester; that the petitioners do not seek to nullify the provision of the Constitution in relation to fugitives from service, but they are determined that, so far as in them lies, the provision referred to shall not be carried out by legislation that violates the spirit, if not the letter, of various other provisions of the same Constitution, and which experience has now shown, is destructive of the peace and subversive of the rights of the citizens of the free States.

He moved that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEWARD presented an additional document in relation to the claim of Myles T. Woolley; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the petition of George Middleton, praying remuneration for services rendered during the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a petition of Whig citizens of Greenpoint, Long Island, praying the repeal of the fugitive slave law, and the restoration of the Missouri restriction; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a memorial of Democratic citizens of Greenpoint and Bushwick, New York, demanding the repeal of the fugitive slave law, and the restoration of the Missouri restriction; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Also, a petition of citizens of Rochester, New York, praying a reduction in the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a petition of Charles Hubbs, praying a modification of the letter and newspaper postage of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a petition of citizens of Utica, New York, praying a reduction in the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of students of the New Hampshire Conference Seminary in Northfield, New Hampshire, praying the repeal of the fugitive slave law of 1850; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TOUCEY presented the petition of Reuben Lord and others, owners of the fishing schooner Brothers, of New London, Connecticut, praying to be allowed fishing bounty; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CHASE presented a petition of citizens of Sandusky City, Ohio, praying the purchase of a site, and the erection thereon, in that city, of a building for a custom-house and post office; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HUNTER presented a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, concerning the fees of district attorneys, and the propriety of an act to regulate the same; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the petition and papers of Juan M. and José L. Lugo.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That Arthur Washburne have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

On motion by Mr. ALLEN, it was Ordered, That the petition of P. C. Miles, together with the adverse report of the Committee on Pensions thereon, be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Nancy D. Holker, of Virginia, by her agent, Holker Hughes, praying Congress for the repayment of a sum of money loaned by her husband, John Holker, to Congress, during the revolutionary war, in continental currency, at such rate as was then allowed for the said currency in gold or silver, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for her relief; which was read and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives, to graduate and reduce the price of the public lands to actual settlers and cultivators, reported it back without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives to extend the right of preemption on unsurveyed lands in Minnesota, and for other purposes, reported it back without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill to reduce and graduate the price of the public lands, reported it back without amendment, and moved that it be laid on the table. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred a bill for the relief of A. G. Penn, reported it back without amendment, together with a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GEYER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the memorial of James M. Carlisle and Walter S. Cox, administrators, with the will annexed, of Cornelius P. Van Ness, deceased, praying there payment of money alleged to have been erroneously paid into the Treasury by the said Van Ness, while collector of the customs for the district of Vermont; and the petition of Madalena Van Ness, widow of Cornelius P. Van Ness, deceased, praying that whatever amount may be allowed on the claim of her late husband, C. P. Van Ness, deceased, may be paid to her, and not to the administrators, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of Madalena Van Ness, widow of Cornelius P. Van Ness, deceased; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

NEW REGISTER.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives to change the name of the American-built brig Hallowell to that of James Rose, and to grant her a new register, reported it back without amendment, and asked for its immediate consideration.

No objection being made, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill; and it was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

COMPENSATION OF EMPLOYEES.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I made a report, a day or two since, from the select committee on the organization of the officers of the Senate, accompanied by resolutions fixing the salaries of those various officers, and classifying them as the committee had agreed upon. Since that report came in and was ordered to be printed, the House of Representatives have sent us a joint resolution affecting the salaries of the officers of both Houses, and I have, therefore, with the approbation of the committee, withdrawn the papers from the printer, with a view to accommodate the salaries which we had proposed to give to this proposition of the House to increase them by twenty per cent.; and the committee authorize me now to ask the Senate to allow us to substitute resolutions, framed upon that basis, modifying the resolutions heretofore ordered. I now offer them in the modified form. The order to print can stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) Does the Senator ask for any action?

Mr. MASON. I have no objection, of course, to the consideration of the resolutions now, unless some Senator desires to see the report printed.

Several SENATORS. Let it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will lie over, and, with the report, be printed.

Mr. BADGER. I think the Senate had better now take up the joint resolution of the House of Representatives, in respect to the pay of the officers, and have it referred to the select committee from which we have just had a report.

The joint resolution from the House to fix the compensation of the employees of the legislative department of the Government, and to prohibit the allowance of the usual extra compensation to such as receive the benefits hereof, was accordingly taken up, and referred to the select committee.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HAMLIN. It will be recollected by the Senate, that a long time since, a resolution was passed ordering an additional number of the Compendium of the Census to be printed for the use of the Senate. The motion was made to reconsider the vote by which that resolution was adopted, for the purpose of affording the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] an opportunity of offering an amendment. It is very desirable that that resolution should be disposed of. The Senator from South Carolina, I understand, is ready to suggest his amendment. I ask the Senate to consider it now. It will take but a moment.

At the request of some Senators, Mr. HAMLIN withdrew his motion to allow the presentation of a petition, which having been done, he renewed the motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. I perceive that this morning two pamphlets have been laid upon the desks of Senators—

Mr. HAMLIN. I believe my motion is pending.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will occupy but a moment. I am not going to make a speech. Two pamphlets have been laid upon my desk, and I presume they have been laid upon the desks of other Senators. One of them is a letter addressed to myself, as Senator from Texas. It appears to be signed by a Mr. E. W. Moore. I will not go into a review of the pamphlets, or either of them, at this time; but that one single fact may be understood, as it is of very recent occurrence, I will read it. I see he says, in reference to the power of attorney which he drew up for Mrs. Nancy Wilber from the treasury of Texas:

"I have never received one cent of the money due the widow of D. C. Wilber. The first power of attorney was informal; on presenting the second one, the auditor wrote me the following:

"Raymond (the treasurer) thinks the power of attorney from Mrs. Wilber will be sufficient to draw her husband's pay, if you will accompany it with the proof that she is the widow of Wilber."

"Yours truly,

JOHN M. SWISHER."

This, sir, was done to avert the calamity to her, and to prevent her being swindled out of the money. In the year 1848 she gave a power of attorney to E. W. Moore, upon which, on the 2d of May, 1851, he drew a certificate for $684 93. That was three years ago. She applied to him in person for the certificate, as she represents to me. She wrote to him twice. In 1852, after receiving this certificate, he wrote for a second power of attorney; and, whether presented or not, he drew the certificate under the first power of attorney. She has recently been here, yet he has held or retained that certificate to which she was entitled, for the amount I have specified, for three years. He writes to her latterly, that with much of his money tied up at Austin, he has many difficulties.

These are the facts: He says he has not drawn a cent of the money; but he does not deny having drawn the certificate which was her property, and which has been retained from her for three years.

Sir, she is the widow of a gallant man who received injuries in Texas in Moore's unauthorized expedition to Yucatan—injuries so deep that he lingered, and under the influence of them, died, after having depended on her industry to sustain him whilst life lasted. He passed to the shades. She has had the calamities and bereavements of widowhood upon her, and an orphan boy to sustain in a state which appeals to humanity. I did not think that there was avarice greedy enough, or profligacy so wanton as to deprive a widow and orphan of their only mite. I leave it here, sir, for the present; Saturday is my day always.

COMPENDIUM OF THE CENSUS.

Mr. HAMLIN's motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly proceeded to consider the motion submitted by Mr. MASON, on Tuesday, the 17th of January, to reconsider the vote by which on that day the resolution, reported from the Committee on Printing, to print fifty thousand copies of a Compendium of the Seventh Census, to be arranged by the Superintendent of the Census, was adopted, as amended.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The resolution, as adopted, was:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate, fifty thousand copies of a Compendium of the Seventh Census, to be arranged by the Superintendent of the Census, embracing the population by towns and counties; the ratio tables of population; tables of nativities, births, marriages, and deaths; of the deaf, dumb, blind, insane, and idiotic; of schools and colleges; of aggregates of occupations; of churches; of newspapers and libraries; and of agricultural products; with illustrative notes and comparative tables: Provided, The said Compendium shall be printed in royal octavo form, and not exceed four hundred pages."

Mr. BUTLER. I move to amend the resolution by inserting after the words "agricultural products," the words:

And also a table showing the numbers of acres of land in cultivation in each of the principle staple productions of the soil, and the aggregate numbers of acres in cultivation in each of the States and Territories of the United States.

That, I understand, will be acceptable to the Senator who reported the resolution. And, Mr. President, I desire to make this remark. It has been always my wish to ascertain the number of acres in cultivation, and, of course, the aggregate products from them. In order to obtain that, I understand, a table, something like what I hold in my hand, will, perhaps, take up one page; that is, there will be one column showing how much cotton is made in Louisiana; how much tobacco in Virginia; and how much rice in South Carolina; and showing, further, how much is made on every acre; and ultimately carried out, it will show how much arable land there is in cultivation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWARD. I wish to inquire of the honorable Senator whether he has made any calculation by which we can know how many copies are to be allowed to each Senator, that is to say, to each State. I think that compendium will be very desirable, as there is a very great deficiency in the number of the copies of the census. We have not had enough of them to supply the demand. But I wish the honorable Senator who introduced the amendment would propose one further table, and that would be a relative one, showing the statistics, as far as they can be shown, of the decimal census from the beginning, when the census, as taken heretofore, has given us such matters for comparison. That would give us the comparative results at different periods. It would make it very desirable if that could be added to it. The value of statistics depends altogether on the comparison of them with the statistics of other countries and of other times.

Mr. HAMLIN. Perhaps this work does not embrace every thing that every Senator would desire; very probably it does not. I can only say that the committee to which the subject was referred, after carefully conferring with the superintendent, Mr. De Bow, came to the conclusion that this was the best work that could be prepared within the limits named. The very point, however, to which the Senator calls my attention, I think is provided for in the resolution. It does provide for comparative tables.

I desire only further to say, that the amendment which the Senator from South Carolina has offered, I think was embraced in the resolution as it was originally reported; but to make it absolutely certain, to leave it without doubt, the Senator has offered the amendment. It therefore will embrace no more than it would have done, if the resolution pass as it now is, as I hope it may.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, announcing that they had passed a bill making provision for the postal service in the State of California and in the Territories of Oregon and Washington, in which they requested the concurrence of the Senate.

[The bill was read twice, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.]

Also, that they had passed Senate bill for the relief of Juan M. Luco and José L. Luco; and Senate bill to authorize the issue of a register to the brig Amelia, by the name of Abby Frances; and Senate bill to incorporate the Georgetown Gas-Light Company, with an amendment.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker had signed the enrolled joint resolution to correct a clerical error in an act approved June 22, 1854, to authorize a register to be issued to the steamer El Paraguay, by a new name;

An act to provide for the construction of a military road in the Territory of Utah;

An act to provide for the continuation of the military road from Myrtle Creek to Scottsburg, in Oregon;

An act for the payment of the civil officers employed in the Territory of New Mexico, while under military government;

An act to authorize the Secretary of War to settle and adjust the expenses of the Rogue River Indian war;

An act to refund to the Territory of Utah the expenses incurred by said Territory in suppressing Indian hostilities;

An act for the construction of certain military roads and wells in the Territory of New Mexico;

An act for the relief of Samuel W. Brady;

Joint resolution explanatory of the second section of a resolution "to establish certain post routes," approved July 12, 1852;

An act for the relief of George W. Gibson;

An act for the relief of Cornelius H. Latham;

An act for the relief of A. B. Roman, of Louisiana; and

An act to provide a pension for Sergeant G. W. Torrence; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

A. G. PENN.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senate now to take up the bill to authorize the extension and completion of the Treasury building, and also the construction of a building for the War, Navy, and Interior Departments. It is absolutely necessary that action should be had upon it.

Mr. BROWN. I will ask the Senator whether it is likely to lead to debate? I want to go on with the homestead bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not know that it will. I think it will not.

Mr. CLAY. One o'clock is the hour fixed for the homestead bill.

Mr. BROWN. I ask the Senator whether he will consent to let it go over if it leads to debate?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly, I will, at the end of the morning hour.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I ask the Senator from Delaware to withdraw his motion, to permit me to make a report.

Mr. BAYARD. I withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I am directed by the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred a bill for the relief of A. G. Penn, to report it back with an amendment, and with a recommendation that it pass. I ask that the report may be printed.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SLIDELL. I suggest to my colleague whether that bill had not better be put upon its passage now. There can be no objection to it at all.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The Senator from Delaware has a motion before the body.

Mr. SLIDELL. I know that he has, but I hope he will allow this bill to be put upon its passage.

Mr. BAYARD. If I yielded the floor for the purpose of permitting that bill to pass, I should not be sure of getting it again. I would yield with pleasure, but I wish to have the action of the Senate upon the bill that I propose to take up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw his motion?

Mr. BAYARD. I cannot do it.

Mr. SLIDELL. It cannot occupy a moment to pass the bill reported by my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware refuses to withdraw his motion.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. BAYARD's motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill to authorize the extension and completion of the Treasury building, and also the construction of a building for the War, Navy, and Interior Departments.

Mr. BAYARD. The necessity for the passage of this bill must be obvious to every Senator who has turned his attention to it. The records and archives of the United States, in the State Department, are really in a state of insecurity, and the mere statement of the case shows that the passage of this bill is necessary. The public business imperatively requires the construction of new buildings for the Departments, to accommodate the officers belonging to those Departments, and to afford places of security for the archives of the Government. The plan is laid down in the bill with sufficient definitiveness to secure an adherence to the general structure proposed. The mere details, of course, are left to the Executive discretion, because it would be impossible, in the construction of such a building, to put in the bill every detail.

By the proposed plan the present Treasury building will become quadrangular. The additions will cover a space of flooring of one hundred and two thousand two hundred feet, while the present one occupies only forty-four thousand five hundred and sixty feet. The number of rooms will be two hundred and two additional to the one hundred and fifty-two in the present building. The cost of the present building was $650,000; the cost of the addition will be $1,250,000. The same order of architecture will be observed in the construction of the building, as that on which it was originally constructed. The effect will be, as regards the enlargement, to give ample accommodation both to the State and Treasury Departments, and then it will afford security for the preservation of the public records and archives.

The other building contemplated, in place of the War and Navy Departments, is also essential, and will, in its construction, give room for the Interior Department, which is now obliged to locate elsewhere in temporary buildings. The whole cost of both structures will be, for the addition and enlargement of the Treasury Department, $1,250,000, and for the new building for the War and Navy and Interior Departments, $1,750,000, making in all $3,000,000. The present bill contemplates an appropriation of $600,000 as the amount which can be used advantageously during the current fiscal year. I have the plans here, and if Senators desire to examine them they can do so. They are approved by the public architect, and by the officers occupying these buildings. The buildings which we have now, in my opinion, are a disgrace to the country. It is a disgrace to the country that the public records should be kept in insecurity, as they are in the present buildings, with the exception, perhaps, of the Treasury Department.

Mr. ADAMS. This bill proposes to expend $3,000,000, and it is most evident that we shall not have time, at this session, to investigate the subject as the importance of the expenditure seems to demand; I therefore move to postpone its further consideration until the second Monday in December. It cannot long delay the commencement of the work, and it will give an opportunity to Congress to investigate the expenditure more thoroughly.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope that motion will not prevail. The bill has been reported for a very long time. There can be no doubt that there is an actual necessity for the construction of the buildings. There is not a session of Congress at which you are not called upon to rent buildings. At this present session you have been obliged to pay a large sum for the purpose of renting a temporary building, (which the lessee can turn you out of,) at $30,000 a year. In the State Department the records of the country are notoriously in insecurity. In the loft it is jammed up with documents unto the roof. They do not know what documents are there. And this is the state of things in a country where you have an overflowing Treasury, where there is no constitutional question involved; and yet, when this is brought up it must be postponed. On what grounds? What further examination does it need? It is one in which there are no local interest to gratify. It is one in which no member of the committee could be biased by anything except a sense of public duty in the recommendation of an appropriation.

The buildings have been designed with great care, after consultation with the officers and persons employed in the different Departments. One of them is calculated to accommodate the Interior Department, which is now in an outside building, as well as the War and Navy. It is intended to concentrate them, and to put the Treasury and State Departments in the other, giving a perfect accommodation to all the great Departments of the Government. I submit that this bill, though it may not certainly appeal to public prejudice, though it may not make as much political capital as some others, is really one due to the public for the purpose of preserving the records of the country. And if you delay this matter to a subsequent time, and it should so happen, as has happened in other of the buildings, and particularly if the State Department should be destroyed by fire, the gentleman who proposes the delay will find it difficult to answer to his constituents for the results of such a proposition.

Mr. SEWARD. The only question I had about this bill was, whether it would be adequate for the uses proposed. I perceive, from the statement of the Senator from Delaware, that it is. I was desirous to know whether there was a provision in the Treasury Department for the Coast Survey. I perceive from the proposed proportions of the building, that it will accomplish that purpose. In that case we shall have the ability to withdraw ourselves altogether, after the buildings are completed, from the hiring and renting of insufficient structures at the cost which we pay for them, and which are in an imperfect state at that.

The honorable Senator has offered strong arguments in favor of this bill, especially the argument of the necessity of having fire-proof buildings for the preservation of the immensely valuable papers which are deposited in all the Departments. He has very truly said that if, by all this delay, a fire should break out within one of these Departments, the loss might be more than the cost of the entire construction.

Sir, I think we may illustrate that remark by stating that there can be no doubt that the private and public losses and misfortunes which have been sustained heretofore, from accidents of that kind in our public buildings, have been equal to all the cost which is proposed for these new structures. The public buildings are necessarily exposed to accidents from fire. And, after all, they are not guarded with the same care by watchmen as private property is guarded. So it has happened that, within the space of twenty years, not only the Treasury Department has been burnt, but also the Patent Office. Having had some little experience heretofore in the examination of questions arising under the patent laws, I have had occasion to learn that great losses have resulted from, and in many instances great injustice has been done to persons, because their patents were destroyed by the burning of that office. I think, if we compare the whole expense of this structure with the damage which has resulted from the burning of the Patent Office, it is evident that this will be a saving to the country. I hope, therefore, the bill will pass.

Mr. ADAMS. I have no disposition to throw any difficulty in the way of any necessary work for the benefit of the Government. The Senator from Delaware says that there is no particular Buncombe in this, although it is a very meritorious question. I am not conscious, sir, of having supported any measure in this body on account of its being what is known as a Buncombe proposition.

Mr. BAYARD. I did not mean to make any such imputation on the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I have nothing to say. My only reason for moving the postponement was, that I felt confident it would be impossible, if the bill were sent to the House of Representatives, to pass it through that body at this session. I thought that by the postponement which I proposed, more time would be given to investigate the character of the expenditure. If I had thought there was a probability of its passing through the other House at this session, I should not have made the motion. If it is the wish of the Senate to pass the bill, I have no disposition to throw difficulties in the way; still I should like to have the sense of the Senate, whether they will postpone it or not.

Mr. CHASE. I am not prepared to vote for the bill in its present shape. I acquiesce very cheerfully in the validity of the reasons assigned by the Senator from Delaware, and the Senator from New York, in respect to the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Treasury and State Departments. The reasons assigned in relation to the records, apply chiefly to that building. The very extensive structures now going on in this city—the enlargement of the Capitol, the building of the west wing of the Patent Office, and the construction of the addition to the Treasury Department—will involve a very large annual expenditure; and it strikes me that, until we see the end of that, we had better postpone the construction of further building for the accommodation of other Departments. I am not prepared to say that on further consideration I shall not withdraw even this objection; but as it is now the hour of taking up the special order, I move the postponement of this bill until to-morrow.

Mr. BAYARD. I have no objection to that, if the Senate desire it. The postponement until next session would necessarily tend to defeat the bill; because, as to the action of the House, it is more probable that it would pass if we sent it over at this session, than if we sent it at the next session. As to the postponement until to-morrow, if the honorable Senator from Ohio desires to discuss it, I can have no objection to its postponement until half past twelve o'clock.

Mr. ADAMS. To obviate any difficulty, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. CHASE's motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

On motion by Mr. WALKER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill "to grant a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of the public lands to actual settlers," the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. CLAYTON, to strike out the sixth section, which is in the following words:

"Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That if any individual now a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and not a citizen of the United States, but at the time of making such acquisition for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent, as made and provided for in this act, shall be placed upon an equal footing with the native born citizen of the United States."

—and insert

"Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That any mechanic or other citizen of the United States, of full age, engaged in and accustomed to any business, trade, or calling, other than the cultivation of land, shall, in consideration of his inability to comply with the conditions of this act, by reason of his want of knowledge, skill, or experience in such cultivation of land, be entitled to receive in lieu of one hundred and sixty acres of land as herein provided, the sum of $160 to be paid to him out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. ADAMS having called for a division of the amendment, the question is first to be taken on the motion to strike out.

Mr. ADAMS. I called for a division of the question, with a view of first taking the sense of the Senate upon striking out the section. My reason for that was this: if there be any propriety in disposing of the public lands without any consideration, it seems to me to arise from the fact that the public lands have been purchased and paid for by the common blood and treasure of the country; and in disposing of them, in giving them away, if they should be given on the principle of this bill, as I understand it is intended, it should be to the most necessitous portion of those who have paid the taxes and contributed to the acquisition of the territory. The striking out of the sixth section excludes those who have had no participation in the acquisition of the territory, who have paid no taxes, who have not defended the country, and who have had no interest in the Government.

Upon what principle, I ask, sir, do you tax those who have been here, native-born and adopted citizens, for the benefit of those who may come hereafter? It is upon the principle which I have stated, if there be any justice in it, that the bill should rest. I do not believe that it is just. But I beg leave to call the attention of Senators to the fact, that it is the first effort towards agrarianism. Without any consideration, without any public service, or without any pretext, you may take from the public Treasury either a portion of the public property or the public money by your legislation, legislating it out of the pocket of one into that of another, there is no limit to your power. Mark me, this is only an entering wedge, and we shall have other and different propositions presented until it comes to making men equal in this country. Disguise it as you will, it is the commencement of a division of the property, and the making of all equal. If Senators are prepared for this step, I have nothing to say; but as much as has been said with reference to the rights of foreigners, I only desire to call the attention of the Senate to the distinction that, if you confine the proposition to those who have contributed towards the acquisition of the territory, there seems to be some principle in giving it to the most necessitous portion; but to give it to those who have had no participation whatever in it, is so palpably unjust that it seems to me the whole country would be opposed to it.

Mr. CHASE. I desire to submit a remark or two, and then to offer an amendment, with the view of perfecting the sixth section, before the motion to strike out shall be taken. I do it at this time, because if the motion to strike out shall not prevail, and the section is retained, no motion will afterwards be in order to amend it until the bill is reported to the Senate.

I cannot agree with the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Dodge,] that all amendments are inexpedient. I am, on the contrary, in favor of reasonable and proper amendments. Such amendments will not endanger the final passage of the bill. I have no doubt that the House will cheerfully agree to such amendments as commend themselves, by their obvious propriety, to its approbation. But, sir, if it should be otherwise, and beneficial amendments made here shall be rejected in the House, it would be quite in the power of this body to recede, and thus save the bill.

It may not be the pleasure of the Senate to amend the bill at all. In that case I shall still vote for it, not as a perfect measure, but as one commended by considerations of humanity and policy, of sound expediency and liberal justice. I shall propose no amendment, therefore, with any unfriendly purpose towards the bill. I do not regard it as perfect—far from it. I do not know that any Senator entirely approves it. But if I can get no better bill, I shall vote for this; because it carries out, to a certain extent, that great principle of public policy first announced in this Chamber, perhaps, by the late Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Webster,] to whom the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Cass] referred yesterday, but which found its first practical, zealous, and persevering advocate upon this floor, in the Senator from Wisconsin. Of that policy I heartily approve. When first announced, I declared my adhesion to it. I persevere in it to-day. I regard the public lands as the ESTATE OF THE PEOPLE, and Congress merely as a trustee. The people are the cestuis que trust—the beneficiaries of this estate, and the whole duty of Congress is performed by such a disposal of the lands for the benefit of the people as an upright discharge of the trust requires. To devote a portion of these lands for the benefit of the indigent insane in the several States I regarded as a reasonable exercise of the trust power vested in Congress by the Constitution. I therefore voted for the bill making provision for that unfortunate class. I regard the grant of limited portions of these lands to actual settlers as a wise and beneficent exercise of the same trust power. I shall therefore vote for this bill.

And now, sir, I wish to say a few words in reply to the observation which fell from the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Adams.] He says that immigrants from other lands ought not to share the benefits of this measure. They have rendered no services, he alleges, to the country, and therefore have no claim upon the bounty of the Government. There would be force in this argument if these grants could be regarded as rewards for services performed; but then the argument would exclude from the benefits of the bill all, whether natives or foreigners, who have not rendered actual services to the public. The bill proposes no grants upon considerations of this nature; the argument, therefore, if good at all, is good against the whole bill. But it is not valid at all. These grants are not rewards for services rendered; they form part of a system of disposing of the public land. They are for the benefit of the whole people represented by the Government, as well as for the individual grantees. The public lands may be regarded, under one point of view, as a vast quantity of unemployed machinery in the possession of a great capitalist. It is capable of producing enormous wealth, but is idle and unproductive for want of hands to work it. It is the business of a wise capitalist to bring his machinery into use. It is the part of a wise Government to bring the public domain into cultivation, to develop its hidden wealth, and add its treasures to the general resources of the country. Every settler upon the public lands, under the provisions of this act, in the course of the five years which must elapse before he can obtain a patent, will more than pay for the land he occupies in the shape of duties upon goods consumed, or by the contributions which his labors furnish to the wealth and strength of the country.

And now, sir, if these public benefits constitute a valid reason for these grants to actual settlers, that reason applies as strongly to immigrants coming into the country after the passage of the act, as it does to those already here. There is no substantial reason which commends itself to the judgment of a statesman for any such discrimination. There is a sound and sufficient ground of distinction between citizens in fact or in intention, and aliens who do not design to become citizens, but no reason at all for any such distinction between immigrants who do intend to become citizens. The section, as it stands, draws a line between immigrants already arrived and immigrants to arrive hereafter. Those who arrive to-day are to have the benefit of the act; those who arrive to-morrow, if the bill in the mean time should become a law, will be excluded from its benefit. Can anybody assign a sensible reason for such a discrimination between (if I may be allowed to coin a phrase) the ante veniens and the post veniens.

Sir, the principle for which I contend now, of non-discrimination between different classes of immigrants intending to become citizens, was sanctioned in the recent Kansas and Nebraska act. I congratulated the country at the time upon the recognition of the right of all such immigrants, without distinction, to the elective franchise. I was glad to witness that breaking down of old prejudices against immigrants coming into this country, which led to a nearly unanimous vote in this Chamber in favor of retaining the clause which allowed them to vote in the Territories. That vote recognized no such narrow and illiberal discrimination as this bill now makes. It went upon a sound reason. It allowed all to vote after declaration of intention, and taking the oath prescribed by the act. It excluded none, whether arrived before or after the passage of the act. It made no distinction between those who might, and those who might not, exercise the right of suffrage, except the distinction between those who should manifest a disposition to become citizens, and a readiness to qualify themselves for the exercise of the elective franchise, under the provisions of the act, and those who might not be ready to become citizens, or so to qualify themselves. I do not say that I approved the qualification required. The oath to support the provisions of an act of Congress, though not unprecedented, ought not, in my judgment, to be required. I speak only now of the principle of discrimination. I approve the principle of that bill so far as it refused to discriminate between immigrants on the ground of difference as to date of arrival in the country. I desire to have no such discrimination made in this bill. I want no discrimination upon any principle which will not approve itself to a sound, just, and logical mind. I have, therefore, prepared an amendment, which, if adopted, will remove from the bill those words which deny its benefits to after-comers, and will secure its equal operation in favor of all immigrants who intend to become citizens of the country.

It is not necessary for me to say anything, at this stage of the discussion, in respect to the extension of the benefits of this bill to immigrants. But I may be allowed to remark, that I do not see that any harm has, as yet, resulted to our country from the foreign immigration. That some immigrants, and, possibly, some classes of immigrants may have rendered themselves obnoxious to a public sentiment, justly jealous of the introduction of ecclesiastical influence into our politics, may be true. But the general masses of the immigration are liable to no such imputation. They are represented in every department of your industry. They are engaged in your commerce, in your manufactures, and in your agriculture. Some of them represent the national sovereignty abroad; others of them worthily and honorably represent the sovereignty of States upon this floor. The immigrants, whose cause I plead, are as intelligent, as worthy, as useful, and as respectable, as any other portion of our population. Far from greeting them upon their arrival on our shores with the harsh and odious discrimination of this bill, I would bid them all welcome, and receive them as brothers. By the manifestation of a generous confidence, by a fair, manly, honorable treatment of them, I would endeavor to convince them of the expediency and necessity of divesting themselves, as speedily as possible, of their foreign character, and of putting on, with the rights and privileges, the sentiments, also, of American citizens. Thus, sir, I would Americanize them by generosity and justice. Once Americanized in mind and heart, the most jealous mind need entertain no apprehensions of evil from their coming among us, and sharing in all our privileges.

I will now submit the amendment which I have indicated.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will not now be in order. The yeas and nays have been demanded on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

MR. CHASE. Let my amendment be read for information.

It was read. It is to strike out the words "now a resident of any one of the States or Territories and," and to insert between the words "but" and "at" the word "who;" so as to make the sixth section read:

"That if any individual, not a citizen of the United States, but who at the time of making such application for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention," &c.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. CLAYTON.] The Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ADAMS,] when it was offered, called for a division of the question. The Chair will remind the Senator that, according to the rules of the Senate, a motion to strike out, and insert is not divisible.

MR. CLAYTON. In order to relieve the Chair and the Senate from all embarrassment, and to comply with the wishes of my friend from Mississippi, [Mr. ADAMS,] I will modify my amendment so as to move now, simply to strike out the sixth section. After that motion shall be decided, I can move to insert the provision which I first offered.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question is on the proposition to strike out the sixth section of the bill.

MR. BUTLER. I do not now intend, Mr. President, to make any general remarks upon the essential provisions of this bill. I may have occasion to do so before the discussion closes. What I have to say particularly at this time, is referable to the sixth section alone. As I think it decidedly objectionable, I shall vote for striking it out. I am opposed to it, because, without going any further, it is anti-vernacular, not only so far as regards its intentment, but its language. It reads thus:

"Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That if any individual, now a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and not a citizen of the United States, but, at the time of making such application for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention, as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent, as made and provided for in this act, shall be placed upon an equal footing with the native-born citizen of the United States."

I shall not undertake to strike out this foreign word "issuance," because, if the provision is to go, let the foreign word go with it. I never heard of such a word before. This is the first instance, I believe, of any such preference being given in the legislation of the country as is provided for by this clause; but as it is intended to have a new policy, giving such a marked preference to foreigners, I am perfectly willing that it shall be characterized by the new word "issuance."

A SENATOR. What language is it?

MR. BUTLER. I do not know what language—whether Dutch, German, or Irish—but I am sure it does not belong to the English. I never heard of such a word before, and I think no one else ever did, unless those who have this great propensity for foreign population. But, sir, that is a remark beside the subject.

I object to this clause upon a very substantial ground. Suppose it were proposed that the unsettled lands of the United States should be subject to the occupation of citizens, native and naturalized. There are citizens, native and naturalized, who could and would occupy them with this guarantee; and it is a guarantee that I shall always look to—the guarantee of allegiance to the Constitution and the institutions of the country. I am perfectly willing to allow our institutions to be moulded by those who are bound to us by that tie of allegiance known as one incident, and belonging to, a citizen. I am not willing to carry it further.

I know it was Mr. Webster's notion that shopkeepers in New York and Boston, and hod-carriers, could be converted into husbandmen. If the bill could operate in this way, it would be a process highly desirable; but I have not the least idea that such will be the operation. If, however, you intend to invite to your Territories the worthy portion of your citizens, native and naturalized, or if you intend to invite to the settlement of your land the worthy portion of those who are foreigners, let it be by something like the discrimination which the law recognizes. Now, no man from a foreign country can become a citizen of the United States before he takes the oath of allegiance, and takes the oath to support the Constitution of the United States; and according to the usage which prevailed in South Carolina—but, perhaps, it is a usage not universal, or not observed anywhere else—no one could become a citizen until he not only swore to support the Constitution of the United States, and absolved himself from all allegiance to any foreign potentate or Power, but until he brought into court the certificate of three citizens that he was a worthy man.

But, sir, under this section, who may not come in? A man may come reeking from the jails and poor-houses of Europe. I will go further, and say that the deserters upon your field of battle may come in—men who fought against those who won your territories can come and take land without having sworn the oath of allegiance. Yes, sir, the very deserters upon the plains of Churubusco, who shot down your regiments, might come and take possession of your lands, to the exclusion of those who were more worthy.

My honorable friend from Iowa [Mr. DODGE] has bestowed praises upon foreigners. As individuals, there are many of them of whom he cannot speak more highly than I would; but, upon the field of battle, I have never known an instance of citizens—native-born Americans, or those who have become citizens by naturalization—deserting, and fighting against and shooting down their comrades.

I do not say, sir, that I am not willing to trust foreigners. I could individualize them, and select those who would adorn history; but when you embrace in your legislation a class of persons whom I do not know, who have never been in your courts of justice to swear that they will support the Constitution of the United States, who have given you no guarantee that they are citizens, and will perform the part of citizens, I cannot agree to it. Why, you invite anybody, the thief, the robber, burglar, and the deserter; and they are to come in on an equality with the sons or the descendants of the proudest families that ever lived upon earth. You invite them to take an equal share with you in a common patrimony; won and paid for by your common blood and common treasure, while the other may have been opposed to you. Notwithstanding this, you make no distinction; you allow the deserter to come in and take on an equality with those by whose blood and treasure the lands were won.

I have no disposition, Mr. President, to disguise my opinion on this subject, though I know this foreign influence is strong, is increasing, and will become stronger. When foreigners come from abroad, become naturalized, and give the guarantees required by the naturalization laws, I will make no distinction between them and other citizens. I will love the schoolmaster, and those who formerly came were of that class—men who won their way to America by their exertions and industry; not men who have been driven upon our shores under fallacious, deceptive, or illusive inducements, which have been held out to them. I have no idea of submitting to such a power. I think it wrong. I am perfectly willing to recognize the political power of naturalized citizens; but I will never consent to invite immigrants to come here who have not given any of the guarantees required by the Constitution and laws of the country. I am not one of those who fear to defy such a power, though I know it is an increasing one, and I apprehend it is one that is courted.

Well, now, sir, under the provision of the bill, who will come in? Will you get the worthy class, even of foreigners, who have given notice of their intention to become citizens? Whom will you get? If you could show me that you would get only those of this class who are individually worthy, I should not have any objection; but you are taking a class in which there are some worthy and many unworthy. Let any gentleman deny it if he can.

My friend from Mississippi [Mr. BROWN] the other day made a remark, in which he gave what I thought was a strange reason for the vote which he intended to give on this amendment. It was that, because we allowed foreigners who had given notice of their intention to become citizens of the United States to vote in moulding the territorial governments, we should therefore hold out an inducement to foreigners to go there and become citizens.

MR. BROWN. No, sir.

MR. BUTLER. That, I think, was the amount of it. I was opposed to that proposition. I believed that the institutions of this country ought to be moulded by the American mind, accustomed to, and disciplined under, the dominion of English law. Gentlemen may take exception to what I say if they please, but I must say, that excepting individuals such as John Mitchell, and others whom I might mention, scholars and gentlemen, the mass of the German, Irish, and other foreign population coming here and going upon your Territories, do not understand your institutions as well as one who has been upon your soil, and has resided here for five years, and is somewhat accustomed to the operations of your laws. I was opposed, therefore, to the introduction of the clause referred to by my honorable friend from Mississippi into the Nebraska bill, which favored somewhat the doctrines of my honorable friend from Michigan, [Mr. CASS.] While we were delegating the power of moulding the institutions of these Territories, I was willing to trust it to those who could think through the medium of the American mind. I went with him very far, when I was perfectly willing to delegate all the power to those who were capable of making laws; but when the proposition was introduced that we should delegate the power to any body who might settle upon the lands, I thought it was going too far. I ultimately agreed to vote for that bill, even with that clause in it; but now it is proposed to do a little more than that—to offer a reward to those foreigners who will go and settle upon your lands, and vote in moulding the institutions of these Territories. They are to go out as colonies of foreigners, and settle upon those new Territories, and form their institutions.

MR. ATCHISON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to one fact. Either he is mistaken, or I am; but if I understand the bill, it confines these grants or gifts of land to those lands which are now subject to private entry. The fact is, there is not one acre of land in any of the Territories of the United States, as far as my knowledge extends, which is subject to private entry—not even in Minnesota, though it may be there.

Mr. CLAY. How long will it be before it will be subject to private entry?

Mr. ATCHISON. That is another question.

Mr. BUTLER. I am sorry that my friend from Missouri has taken this exception; but to the extent that they have a right, they are put upon an equality with citizens; and to the extent that they may acquire a right, they will have it. The precedent of to-day is the prescription of to-morrow; and as to making distinctions of this kind, my friend must know that it will result in this: that we give our domain to foreign immigrants as far as they choose to settle upon and cultivate it.

Mr. DAWSON. I will say to my friend from South Carolina, that he is right in the construction which he places upon the bill. As I read it, it applies to lands subject to private entry at the time of application being made for the benefits of the act. If the lands are surveyed at any time within twelve months, or two years, or three years, before application is made, in Nebraska or anywhere else, they may be taken. That is the provision.

Mr. BUTLER. I have taken up the general impression from the palpable reading of the bill, and my friends around me who have been more minutely informed on the subject, tell me that I am right. It seemed to me that I could not be mistaken. Then, sir, you are opening your territory to foreigners. True, we have been told that the foreign settler cannot take it until he becomes a citizen. But now imagine this case: suppose a man who was a deserter upon the plains of Churubusco, who has not contributed either his blood or his treasure to the acquisition of the lands, but who has used his bullets and his bayonet against our soldiers, settles down upon one hundred and sixty acres of land in Kansas and Nebraska, having given notice that he intends to become a citizen of the United States. Is he not then an equal with anybody else? How can you exclude him? He settles there without any one of the guarantees to which I have alluded. It is said, to be sure, that he cannot take the land with a perfect title until he becomes a citizen. If I were a judge, presiding in any court, and that man should come forward to become a citizen, and swear to support the Constitution of the United States, and abjure his allegiance to all foreign potentates and Powers whatever; if he came there with proof in his pocket that he had been a deserter on that plain; if he came there without the ordinary certificate that he was a good man, and worthy to be an American citizen; if he came with a warrant of blood in his hands, would I, as a judge, admit him to be a citizen of that Territory? No, sir. And yet you propose to give the land to thieves, and robbers, and deserters, if they choose to avail themselves of this power. You give it to anybody who will go and take it.

Sir, I have as much respect as my honorable friend from Iowa has for the historical names to which he alluded; and I might select individuals from those who are coming over here now that I would regard as my friends. There are those among them who are conversant with the literature of the country, those capable to-morrow of becoming citizens; but he knows that we cannot make them citizens ipso facto; and, therefore, I would require them all to go through a tutelage, the process required by the Constitution of the United States, before allowing them to exercise the privilege of voting anywhere.

But, sir, I will not invite them here by giving them an equality with citizens who have earned a right to be tenants of your public soil, who hold their right by a tenure higher than that of being invited to come because they were worth nothing. The best citizens you will ever have, are those who have earned something by their industry before they go on the public lands. I am not opposed to the poor man; but let the comparison be made when you choose, between the man who has earned $300, or $500, or $1,000 by his labor, and goes to settle on the public lands, and an immigrant newly arrived in New York from Germany, who is twenty-five years old, with not a dollar in his pocket, who is a beggar in the streets, and a vagabond everywhere, and I will tell you who would be the tenant that I would choose. In the language of my honorable friend from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS,]

I would say that you receive the highest guarantee and security for his patriotism, from the tenant who is on your soil—who mingles with it the sweat of his brow. He will fight for it, and defend it. The industrious man who has become a husbandman from choice—by industry—is worthy of my respect, confidence, and love; but I cannot consent to place the vagabond (who is invited to take possession because he has earned nothing) upon a perfect equality with those who have earned something by their labor. I will never agree to it. While gentlemen bestow high and splendid eulogies upon foreigners, let me tell them that I know how to discriminate between one foreigner and another. But I know that, as a class of men coming in by shoals, (and they are coming like a swarm of herrings,) they are not equal to the same number of American native citizens, or those citizens who have been naturalized. I do not believe it, and not believing it, I cannot and will not recognize an equality.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I am very illy prepared for vocal gymnastics to-day, but cannot consent that the vote be taken on this motion without replying to some remarks which fell the other day from my honorable friend from Iowa, [Mr. DODGE.] I rise to exonerate myself from a very grave and serious charge preferred by that gentleman against me—that of departing from my father's faith, and following after strange gods. In support of this charge he read from some remarks of a gentleman of my own name, who preceded me in the Senate, made by him in the winter of 1838, in support of admitting foreigners, like American citizens, to the right of preemption.

Now, sir, before stopping to inquire how far I may agree or disagree with that gentleman, I wish to address an argumentum ad hominem to my friend from Iowa. He, sir, of all men in the Senate, is the last who should ever quote parental authority, or inveigh against filial disobedience; for I think the entire Senate will concur with me in the opinion that he exhibits in his political conduct an utter disregard of parental precept and example. [Laughter.] Indeed, sir, that gallant and faithful representative of the "Young Game Cock of the West" upon this floor, is a practical refutation of the truth of the old saying, "As crows the old cock, so crows the young." [Laughter.] On the contrary, the young cock generally sounds the counter note to the old cock. In short, sir, it appears to me that, repudiating the scriptural injunction, "Hear the instructions of thy father," he is a perfect illustration of the self-sufficiency and filial impiety of "progressive Young America," kicking off the swaddling clothes, dodging daddy, and "going it on his own hook." [Laughter.]

Now, I must confess at the same time, that I think my friend from Iowa has been generally right in opposing parental example. He thinks, however, that I am wrong in doing the same thing. I am willing to compromise with him, and agree that each is wrong in his judgment of the conduct of the other. If I cannot make this compromise with him, then I propose to show that I am right; and, moreover, that I do not occupy an antagonistic position to that of my predecessor, from whom he quoted.

Sir, he quoted the language of a gentleman whose name I bear, and who preceded me on this floor, in favor of granting to foreigners the right to preemption, like American citizens. I concur in that sentiment. If the Government is going to sell land, I say sell it to every honest occupant who will pay the purchase money, upon the same terms. But, sir, that gentleman, in the same speech from which my friend quoted, used this other sentiment, in which I most heartily concur: "I am not disposed to place foreigners upon a better footing than American citizens." So say I; and it is because the sixth section of this bill does propose to place them upon a better footing than American citizens, that I am opposed to it. I intend to show that it does place them on a higher and better footing, in a manner so plain that none can misunderstand, and so conclusive that none can refute. I intend to strip this bill of all its false and flatterous pretenses, and all its studiously contrived verbal disguises, and present it in its truly hideous deformity to the gaze of the American people. And when exhibited in the naked daylight of truth, I think few can endure it, and none embrace it with pleasure or with pride.

Now, sir, in order to illustrate my view of the true character of this bill, I will use a homely simile, which will go to the hearts and understandings of all men. Suppose a father, having a large family of sons, and possessed of an extensive tract of wild land, should offer it for sale at a fixed price to actual settlers, making no discrimination between aliens and his own relations. There would be a fair illustration of the preemption policy. True, his sons might complain that the old gentleman was not as liberal to them as he should be in giving to strangers, aliens to him in blood and feeling, a right to purchase on the same terms with themselves; yet, perhaps, they would not reproach him with injustice, inasmuch as they expected to enjoy, as a patrimony, what he might realize by the sale of his lands. But, suppose that father, after having pursued this policy for some forty years, should suddenly, through some strange caprice or spasmodic emotion of philanthropy, conclude to give away his lands, and should advertise the world that he would bestow a free farm of one hundred and sixty acres on every man who would come and settle upon the lands, and cultivate and occupy them for five years. What would be the reflections of those older sons who had purchased and paid for their lands? Would they not reproach their father with injustice to his own children in extorting from them the purchase money for their land, whilst he gave land to strangers? Suppose, however, the old gentleman should go a little further, and should exact of his sons (who had entered the wilderness, reduced a portion of it to cultivation, and rendered the remainder habitable and eligible for the location of those strangers) an annual contribution for the aid, comfort, and support of those strangers, and exempt them from a similar contribution even for their own use and benefit. I ask whether those sons would not be willing to disown and repudiate that father? Suppose he should even go further than I have suggested, and should invest those strangers with the power of swindling, defrauding, and injuring his sons, and, at the same time, deny to them all means of redress. Would they not be driven by an indignant sense of his unnatural and cruel treatment of them, almost to curse that father, and to address him in the vituperative language of Scripture, "If a man provide not for his own, especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." A parent so lost to every feeling of duty to his offspring might appear in the form of a man, but would bear within his bosom the heart of a demon.

Such, sir, is not an exaggerated picture of this bill. What does it propose? What is the policy which it will initiate? Why, sir, this Government, after having for more than forty years sold to her own children, native American citizens, the public lands at a fixed price, now proposes to give lands free of charge to all, including foreigners, who may come and settle upon them. Her own citizens have endured the perils, privations, and sufferings incident to a life in the wilderness. The red men have receded at their approach, like the horizon before the traveler. They have driven off or destroyed the wild beasts of the forest. They have robbed it of all its dangers and its terrors. They have intersected it with roads, have built bridges, and rendered it accessible and traversable with ease, comfort, and security. They have dotted it over with farm-houses, hamlets, churches, and seminaries of learning; have dissipated its gloomy shadows, and illuminated it with the benign lights of knowledge and religion. They have invested it with all the fascinations of human society, and have added all the attractions of art to those of nature. And yet, after having accomplished all this, and having enhanced the value of the circumjacent unappropriated and vacant lands belonging to the Government, and rendered them more desirable and salable, you now propose by this bill to invite foreigners to come and settle free of charge upon those lands, purchased by the commingled blood and treasure of American citizens, and made accessible and attractive by their labors. Do you expect to secure the gratitude, cherish the affections, and stimulate the patriotism of your citizens by lavishing such bounties upon aliens?

But that is not all, or the most objectionable feature of this bill. It provides that if any foreigner hold, occupy, and cultivate any portion of the one hundred and sixty acres of land (although he cultivate but one acre) for five years, at the expiration of that time he may obtain a patent. Now, sir, by compact between the Federal Government and all the land States of this Union, no one of those States can tax one foot of land, the title to which is in the Government of the United States. That is a proposition which will not, I presume, be denied or questioned. Then, sir, you propose, by this policy, to introduce into the State of Alabama any number of foreigners who may go there and settle upon the public and unappropriated lands, and allow them to enjoy, for a period of five years, all the privileges of society and protection of citizenship, without contributing one cent towards the support of the government of that State, in the way of taxation upon that land, while the lands of native American citizens lying within the State are being taxed.

Nor is this all. I said, and I repeat, that as long as the Federal Government holds title to those lands by special compact between the State and the Federal Government, the State cannot tax them. Now, suppose a foreigner, or any number of foreigners who go to settle upon the public lands within my own State, should not choose to contribute towards the support of the State government in the way of taxation on their lands, but should wish to enjoy immunity from taxes. All that is necessary to enable them to escape the burdens, and still enjoy the benefits of government, is to abstain from asking for or receiving a patent. They may thus hold on for life to their free farm, free from taxation. In the mean time, they may become naturalized citizens under the naturalization laws. They may then participate in the framing of laws, and in the government of that State; and yet they are exempted by the provisions of this bill, and by compact between the State of Alabama and the Federal Government, from any obligation to contribute, in the way of taxes upon their land, to the support of that State. Do you suppose that the intelligent freemen of Alabama can be flattered or cajoled into an approval of a measure so unjust and injurious to them, and so generous and beneficial to aliens?

But the most iniquitous and offensive part of this bill is still untold. By another provision of the bill, you propose to give to those foreign immigrants within the State of Alabama, the right and power of defrauding, swindling, and injuring their neighbors; and, at the same time, you deny to those neighbors the right or power of any legal redress. You propose to render those aliens perpetual bankrupts by giving them the benefit of a prospective as well as a retrospective bankrupt law, provided they will not ask or receive a patent, but will hold on to their lands, and enjoy them without a patent, as tenants of the Federal Government; for there is no forfeiture attached to the failure to ask for a patent at the expiration of five years; and those men may hold, use, and occupy the land forever without receiving a title.

Mr. BROWN. Will my friend from Alabama just at this point allow me to interrupt him, because it is this particular question on which I spoke the other day, and on which my vote will depend as to striking out this section?

Mr. CLAY. I yield the floor with pleasure.

Mr. BROWN. I tried the other day, to explain that, according to my understanding of this section, a foreigner making his declaration of intention to become a citizen must perfect his declaration by actually becoming a citizen within five years, or else he will lose all the rights conferred upon him under this act. The sixth section provides that a foreigner "who shall have declared his intention, as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, shall become a citizen of the same before the expiration of the patent, as made and provided for in this act, shall be placed upon an equal footing with the native-born citizen of the United States."

Now, the words "as made and provided for in this act," relate, I apprehend, to the time fixed for issuing the patent; and the whole section of it read, as I shall now read it, would mean what I believe it does mean as it stands: "A foreigner who shall have filed his declaration of intention, as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the expiration of the five years from the date of that declaration, shall be placed upon an equal footing with the native-born citizen of the United States." That is the clear construction of the language, according to my understanding of it; and I tried so to explain the other day. Therefore, unless he perfects that declaration of intention within five years, by actually becoming a citizen, he has no rights under this statute, after the expiration of the five years. If he may remain upon the land, according to the construction which my friend from Alabama puts upon it, to all eternity, without becoming a citizen, then I shall vote to strike out the section; and if it is not stricken out, I shall vote against the whole bill, because I am for having no man settle down upon our soil, remain there, occupy it forever, and not be a citizen of the country; but my clear interpretation of the section is as I have now stated it, and as I explained when I spoke the other day.

A few words now to my friend from South Carolina. He took me to task for having declared my willingness to see foreigners occupy the soil; and he wished to know how I reconciled that with my vote upon a former bill, excluding them from the right of voting. I was opposed, and I am yet opposed, to allowing anybody who is not a citizen to control any part of this country; and I therefore voted against giving to foreigners the right of suffrage and the right of holding office in the two Territories that have been lately organized. But I said the other day, and I now repeat, that, after they have been fully invested with the right of suffrage, and the right of holding office in the Territories, I will not quibble about giving them the mere right of settling down upon a piece of the public lands, and cultivating it, and turning the products of their labor into the general wealth. That, as I understand it, is all that you give them by this bill. But an argument is urged that this is an encouragement to them to go into the Territories. I think not. I will not care to encourage them; but being there, under the general license which they have already received, I am very apprehensive that they will vote away my rights, and the rights of my friend from South Carolina. He corrected me on another point. He says he voted for this right of foreigners—

Mr. BUTLER. I never voted for it. I voted against it as a distinct proposition, and so did the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. BROWN. Was my friend one of the seven?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWN. I am very glad to find that he was one of the glorious seven.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, the explanation of my friend, the Senator from Mississippi, is but an illustration of the entire character of this bill. It is a bill full of ambiguity, of equivocation, of amphibology, as my friend from Michigan [Mr. Cass] suggests. It is a bill which admits of different interpretations in different quarters; but who is to interpret it, and how its provisions are to be enforced, are not provided for by it. Now, suppose that the sixth section admits of the interpretation of my friend from Mississippi, and which other Senators friendly to the bill say is the proper interpretation, where is the provision for ousting these foreigners from their settlement upon the public lands, if, at the expiration of five years, they do not become naturalized?

Mr. BROWN. I will answer my friend. It is by allowing anybody else to enter, who chooses to do so. If their right ceases, of course the lands become subject to private entry.

Mr. WALKER. Just as any person can now enter lands when the preemption expires.

Mr. CLAY. Let me ask whether either of these Senators, who make this suggestion in the way of correction, sincerely believe that, in practice, effect would ever be given to their idea? Do they believe that anybody would ever oust foreigners under such circumstances? How will people ever know whether they have become naturalized citizens or not? Will they take pains to go and search the files of the courts, and ascertain that fact? Will they have the means of ascertaining whether they have been naturalized or not? And if it were known they had taken out no patent or become naturalized, who would oust them, and rob them of their houses and other improvements? I think the section admits of the construction which I place upon it; and I think, if it admits of that given it by its friends, the construction which I give it will be the practical illustration of the working of the bill. But I wish to go back to where I stopped when interrupted by the Senator from Mississippi. The bill, in its fourth section, provides:

"That all lands acquired under the provisions of this act shall in no event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts contracted prior to the issuing the patent therefor."

Now, I say that, under this section of the bill, you may introduce into the State which I have the honor to represent, a population consisting mainly of foreigners, who are utterly independent of all their obligations to the State or to individuals, who may contract debts with impunity, who may defy the courts, and enjoy the piece of land upon which they settle despite of State laws, because it cannot be levied upon or subjected to the satisfaction of any debt which they may contract prior to the issuance of the patent. Thus it is possible, should this bill become a law, on the public domain in Alabama, (which constitutes nearly half of all the lands in her limits,) an alien population may be colonized, exceeding in numbers her native citizens, who, standing on a higher and better footing than those citizens, may enjoy the protection of the Government without aiding in its support, and may riot in licentious liberty on their free farms, free from taxes, free from creditors, and free from the obligations of their contracts. And does any one suppose that State pride could brook such contempt of her authority and such outrage of her rights as is contemplated in this bill? Sir, as one of the representatives of that young, but noble Commonwealth, I will never lend my aid or countenance to any measure so fraught with her humiliation, dishonor, and injury.

The bill will not only infract the rights and degrade the dignity of the land States, but will inflict serious injury on their landholders. The Government holds double the quantity of land held by all her citizens; when she makes the public domain free as air to foreigners, as well as citizens, private lands must be depressed in value; for who will buy land of individuals when it can be taken as a gift from the Government? It will injure the landholders, not merely by depressing the price of their land, but by cheapening all its products; for, by seducing from their pursuits the mechanic, merchant, and manufacturer, and making them farmers, you will increase the number of producers, by reducing the number of consumers, and multiply the class of sellers by withdrawing them from the class of buyers. Thus, by cheapening the sale value of land, and of its products, you will lower the profits of agriculture and injure the agricultural class, which you affect to benefit. And, do you think the landholders in the new States so ignorant as not to apprehend the nature of this bill, and anticipate the injuries its policy will inflict? Do you think they will endure, without a murmur, these aggravated wrongs? You sold them their lands, and received their money; but now propose to give to foreigners as well as citizens, the remainder of your lands, to exempt them from paying taxes to the State, or debts to individuals, to enable them to share in the benefits of schools, churches, roads, bridges, and all the comforts of civilization, without enduring any of the burdens of Government; and, as if to cap the climax of injustice, you will reduce the value of the lands sold to your landholders and the products of their labor. Wrongs so grievous and iniquitous could scarcely be endured with patience and submissiveness by stoic or by saint.

A great deal has been said here in condemnation of what are called Native Americans, or Know-Nothings. I am neither one nor the other, in the political sense of those terms; but let me ask the Senator from Iowa, who is the zealous friend and champion of the foreign population, whether there is any measure which could be conceived of, or projected, or passed by Congress, which is better calculated to excite, to foster, and encourage a Native American feeling, than this very bill? I tell him that, if this bill pass, he will see realized what I had hoped never to witness in this country—he will see a Native American, or Know-Nothing party growing up in the southern States of this Union. And, sir,—and I say it with no less pride than pleasure,—as much traduced, libelled, and slandered, as those States have been by the fanatics at the North, they have been freer from all species of radicalism than any other section of this Confederacy; and, but for the pure, conservative principles, and true American feeling of the South, in my opinion, the radical, meddlesome spirit of the North would, ere this, have involved this Government in a foreign war. You saw no man-worship of Kossuth exhibited at the South, during his pilgrimage among us. And you have seen no indications of jealousy, envy, or hatred of foreigners among southerners. We neither feel nor exhibit towards them such evil passions. You have seen no disposition there to embark in the policy of intervention with the affairs of foreign countries, or to exclude foreigners from participating as citizens in the privileges of this country. But pass this bill, and impress upon the public mind throughout the South, the idea that, not content with sheer justice to foreigners, you will be generous to them, and unjust to your own citizens, and the spirit of Native Americanism will soon develop itself where, hitherto, it has been unfelt and almost unheard of. Let the friends of foreign immigrants on this floor beware lest they injure rather than benefit that class of our population.

Sir, men are prone to overlook things that are near, and to fix their vision upon distant objects; to lose sight of the physical and moral wants of their own family or neighbors in contemplating the distresses of those more remote. Hence that charity which should begin at home is often expended upon strangers, and works of present necessity are neglected for the achievement of some future good. I do not sympathize in that sublimated philanthropy or double-refined benevolence which forgets or disregards the poor and the needy at its own door, and runs abroad in search of objects of its care and kindness. If we are to convert this Government into a charity asylum, let us lavish its bounties upon citizens rather than foreigners. At all events, let us not inflict injury on the citizen for the benefit of the foreigner; let us not rob the former that we may give to the latter. I never admired or esteemed Petrarch's abandonment of his family to purify the poetry and refine the feelings of his countrymen, or Zimmerman's inculcation of beautiful benevolence while tyrannizing over his children.

I oppose this bill for many other reasons, which I shall give at a proper time. I have confined myself on this occasion, to the particular section of the bill which it is proposed to strike out. I will, however, before I take my seat, answer one reply which I anticipate may be made. I know it will be said "why complain about giving lands away to foreigners? May not American citizens enjoy this bounty? May not those who have heretofore paid for their lands, and are now occupying and cultivating them, go upon the unappropriated public lands, and take the benefit of this act? May not the mechanic, the merchant, the artisan, in short, all classes go upon the public domain, and share in the bounties of this bill?" That is the reply which will be made to me. But, sir, I ask you if it is not insulting the intelligence of any man, if it is not mocking his spirit, to tell him, who, by the whole business of his life, has unfitted himself for the culture of the soil, who has expended his time, and talents, and bodily labor in acquiring a species of handicraft and skill which fit him for one of the mechanic arts, but disqualify him for the cultivation of the soil—I ask if it is not grievous mockery to tell him to go and enjoy this bounty? I ask you if it is not deriding those men who have hitherto purchased and paid for their lands, and are now enjoying and occupying them, and who would lose more by abandoning their improvements for this bounty than they would gain, to tell them go and occupy it.

You might as well bid one,

"Hold a fire in his hand,
By thinking on the frosty Caucasus;
Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite,
By bare imagination of a feast," as bid those go and enjoy your free farms, who are disabled by nature or disease, or disqualified by habit for cultivating the soil, or who, by accepting your invitation, would lose the fruits of past toil far exceeding in value the bounty you tender them. Your affected beneficence, far from exciting gratitude to this Government, or satisfying their minds, or bringing joy or gladness to their hearts, will embitter their spirits against the Government and create envy, jealousy, and heart-burning against the partakers of your bounty. They will feel that they are tormented with this proffer of bounties they cannot enjoy, and condemned like the fabled Tantalus, to

"Thirst in waves,
And, viewing banquet, starve."

Sir, such feelings cannot be repressed or buried in their hearts. They will burst forth in unrestrained indulgence. They will exhibit themselves, I fear, in the persecution of foreigners, in inflaming the prejudices of religious sects, in disrupting social ties, in dissolving existing political associations, in organizing parties anew, upon a different basis, and one fatal to the best interests of the Union, and the peace and harmony of its citizens.

I confess, sir, that I will not vote for the bill if this section is stricken out; for there are other features, to which I have not alluded, no less obnoxious to me than this. I know that in opposing the free-farm policy, I must encounter the opposition of demagogues at home, who use it as a political hobby-horse, on which they may ride into office. If I could yield to the vis a tergo exerted by a morbid appetite for public land in a small portion of the new State which I have the honor, in part, to represent—an unnatural appetite, created by the vicious condiments administered by selfish political quacks for their own sinister purposes—I would go heart in hand for this bill. But there are constitutional objections to it, which forbid my embracing this, or any measure which proposes to give away the public lands, or other property of the United States. I have endeavored to develop those objections in my speech on the indigent insane land bill.

And with all respect for my honorable and esteemed friend from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] I must say, that I have been unable to appreciate the distinction, on constitutional grounds, between giving lands to the States and giving them to individuals. How it is constitutional to give to individuals and unconstitutional to give to the States, has yet to be explained to my satisfaction.

I believe—I had almost said I know—that this bill, if it becomes a law, will prove highly injurious to the interests of Alabama. But if I thought otherwise, no inducement of selfish, local, or State interests, will ever seduce me to transgress the chartered limits of this Government, and to enter upon that boundless and dangerous region within which sparkle up on every hand springs of temptation as fatal to the spirit of our Federal Constitution as was the fabled fountain in the garden of Arimida to human life.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, with respect to the latter remark of the honorable Senator from Alabama, I have nothing to say. It is a subject that he and I have gone over fully. I do not come here to profess my attachment to the Constitution. That we all profess to obey, and we have sworn to support it. We put our construction on it, and we act on that construction. I see a very great difference between granting land to the State of Virginia, the State of Massachusetts, or any other State, as an act of gratuity, and granting land to individuals who go to settle on it, and thereby increase the value of the public lands. I see that difference, and that is enough for me. If the honorable Senator from Alabama does not see it or appreciate it, it is a matter for himself. My opinion is, that there is an essential constitutional difference between the two propositions, and from almost the foundation of the Government we have acted in conformity with this view. The one is a gratuitous, unconstitutional, unnecessary grant, and the other is perfectly within the Constitution. But I did not rise to discuss that question. I rose merely to advert to one or two remarks which fell from the honorable Senator from Alabama in the very able view—I certainly must say that—he has presented to the Senate.

The honorable Senator seems to consider it a kind of reproach that this land is offered to everybody. He considers it, like the apple of Sodom, fair to the eye, but filled with ashes. He thinks that mechanics cannot take advantage of it. The honorable Senator, in that view, is mistaken—radically mistaken, to use a term which he used, but in a different sense from that in which he employed it. I know there are hundreds and thousands of mechanics—able and excellent mechanics—who are desirous to exchange the shop for the field; and my friends around me, who live in the Northwest, have seen this feeling nearly every day. A large portion of our population is made up of them. They wish to change their employment. There is no industrious man in this country, who has arrived at middle age, be he a blacksmith, a carpenter, or a cooper, who is not able to go into any portion of our country, and make a living upon a farm, by cultivating and improving it. It requires no great or profound knowledge to do this. I repeat, that, to my personal knowledge, this is a change of condition that a large portion of our mechanics wish to make, and which they do make every day. I presume there is not a man here representing a State north and west of the Ohio, but can look around and see hundreds of instances of it. So that my friend from Alabama is entirely mistaken in that assumption; but it was not principally to correct this that I rose.

I rose for the purpose of saying a few words as to the question presented by the honorable Senator from Alabama, on the subject of taxation. I will remind the honorable Senator that the arrangements entered into by the States and the United States, by which the States relinquished the right of taxing for five years after the sale of the land, has, in all cases, been rescinded by the United States.

Mr. CLAY. Will my honorable friend allow me to explain for a moment?

Mr. CASS. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. My honorable friend from Michigan misapprehends me. I am apprised of the fact which he mentions, that the original compact by which all lands held by the Federal Government were exempt from taxation, and all lands sold by the Federal Government were exempt for five years after sale, has been altered so far as to render those lands which have been absolutely sold by the Federal Government, and the title to which she has parted with, subject to taxation when sold. But still, I did not predicate my argument upon the assumption that that portion of the compact was still existing, but upon this: I say that, under the compact between the Federal Government and all the new States, you cannot tax any land occupied by a citizen or a foreigner until he has a title to that land; and in that I am correct.

Mr. CASS. I do not think the honorable Senator is correct, and I will proceed to say what I was about to say; for I believe I perfectly understand the honorable Senator from Alabama. Now, sir, there have been two questions connected with the public land: One is the right of the land to exemption from taxation while held by the Government of the United States, and unsold. That is an open question. I will remind the honorable Senator from Alabama that all the new States have not entered into that compact. More than half those States have not entered into that compact. The United States, as a mere question of power, have said, "If you do not pass an irrevocable ordinance, ceding, or relinquishing any right to tax the public lands, you shall not come into this Union." That is the ground upon which it stands in almost all the States. As I said on another occasion, there are but two States in the Union with whom a fair compact was made by the United States on that subject, I mean such a contract as is made between man and man. Those two States are Arkansas and Michigan. All the others have experienced the power of the Government, and their admittance into the Union has been made on condition of acceding to this demand of exemption.

It is very clear that this exemption did not exist under the Constitution, and that Congress had no right to impose it as a condition of admission; so that, independent of constitutional enactment of State compacts, we are brought back to the simple question, whether the land of the United States, by the Constitution, is exempt from paying its share of the public expenditure in that portion of the country where it is situated? I do not believe it is. It has not been so decided by the Supreme Court. But I put that matter aside.

Then there comes the other question to which I referred, and which, according to our present land system, no longer exists. At first, the land was sold upon a credit of five years. The purchaser paid one fourth the purchase money at the time of sale, and he had the four succeeding years in which to pay the residue, but at the end of the five years, if the payment was not completed, he forfeited the land. It seems to have been presupposed by Congress, that the States had the right of taxing this land in the interim; for in every case they have required the States, by compact, to give up that right. Why ask them to give it up if they have no right to tax? Congress have said that during the five years in which the man has an uncertain title, a title to be perfected only by final payment, the States should not tax the land; and in order to induce the States not to tax, they have held out in succession very large considerations. The States relinquished, therefore, that right of taxation within those five years.

When a man is upon a portion of the public lands with an incipient title, a title which he has to perfect, I see no reason in the world why that land is not taxable by the State. I believe it is. A question might arise—and that question Congress evidently wished to avoid—as to what effect would be produced upon the land itself, ultimately, how it might affect the title connected with the United States; but that the man may be rightfully compelled to pay his share of the public expenditures during the period of occupation, there can be no doubt at all. It seems to me that the man can be taxed to the amount which his right is worth; and he can be made responsible for its payment. The mode in which it is to be collected is a subject for consideration for the States.

Now, then, I repeat there is nothing in the Constitution of the United States exempting the public land from taxation; and Congress evidently foresaw that, during the five years the lands thus sold could have been taxed, and they would have been taxed but for the compacts entered into by the several States as they came into the Union. I repeat that, during the period of five years, when the land is thus occupied, there is no reason, in justice, equity, or law, why the person occupying it should not pay his just proportion, according to the value of the property, whatever it may be, to the public expenditures of the country where he resides.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to make a single remark in reply to my honorable friend from Michigan, and it is one which I think is conclusive of the propriety of the position which I occupy, and one which I defy the friends of this measure to answer. Suppose he be correct in his construction of the compact between the new States and the Federal Government, and I be wrong; and suppose that this land be subject to taxation from the moment it is settled upon and occupied by foreigners, of what avail, I ask, is that to the State government, when, by another section of this act, you exempt that land from execution in satisfaction of any debt contracted prior to the issuing of the patent? The land cannot be sold to pay the taxes.

Mr. STUART. Mr. President, I had hoped that we might get to a vote on this question, and I do not think I should have said anything at this time, but for the fact that it appears, from the remarks which fell from the Senators from Alabama and South Carolina, that this is only the commencement of the discussion on their part, and that each of them has a great deal more to say. I should be very willing to hear everything that is to be said, which touches either the object of improving this bill by amendment, or of suffering it to be improved by others. And then, after it is in such shape as the Senate see fit to proceed to vote upon, if gentleman will say all they propose to say against the bill or for it, I shall be content. But as the discussion has taken rather a wide range, I wish now to say a few words. To my mind, sir, the arguments that have been used by those two Senators are a little remarkable, taken in connection with the policy of this Government in respect to its public lands from the beginning; and though I intend to occupy the attention of the Senate for but a few minutes, I will seek to show that they have not submitted a single proposition that is not applicable now to every particle of the public land of the United States.

Why, sir, to begin; the lands of the United States are subject to entry by every man who chooses to pay ten shillings an acre for them. I do not care whether he be a citizen of the United States or not; I do not care whether he comes reeking from the battle-field, either as a victor or a deserter; I do not care whether he comes, to use their language, sweating with the stench of a prison, a penitentiary, or a poor-house; I say that the Government of the United States has provided that, at ten shillings an acre, any man, woman, or child may purchase the land.

So much for the purchase of land. Now, let me look at the question of preëmptions. Prior to 1841, there was no limitation in the policy of this Government in respect to who might enter on the public lands as preëmtors. There was no distinction against foreigners; no distinction against criminals; no distinction against inmates of poor-houses, or any body else. Any one who would go upon the lands of the United States, and file the necessary affidavit, could occupy, by preëmption, one hundred and sixty acres of land, and at the end of a year could take it and purchase it. In 1841, for the first time, the policy of the United States was altered, so as to restrict this right of preëmption to citizens of the United States, and those who had filed their declaration of intention to become such; and so the law stands to-day. I wish to call the attention of Senators particularly to this point, because I think there has been a great deal said without sufficient comparison; and I am undertaking, sir, as you will see, to show the policy of the Government respecting its lands. I say the policy which I have mentioned is that which prevails to-day in respect to purchase, and in respect to preëmption.

Now, it is proposed, upon some terms or other, and those to be agreed upon, to modify the provision as to price and the time of payment; that is all. I should like to inquire of those two Senators, and of others who may take the same view, what reason exists for changing the policy as to persons. If you will sell to everybody at ten shillings an acre, if you allow everybody to enter by preëmption, why not pursue this policy in respect to persons? If you reduce the price, and give a credit, why not allow everybody to take it upon the same terms? Why should the country be alarmed by the declaration of the honorable Senator from South Carolina, that there is an invitation to foreigners to come here, to possess and control the public lands? Why, sir, they can do it to-day. Everything that can be done by a citizen of the United States to-day, in respect to the public lands, can be done by a foreigner on simply filing an oath that he intends to become a citizen.

Now, does not the sixth section of this bill maintain this provision? Yes, sir, and couples with it another, that is, that he cannot receive the title from the United States until he actually becomes a citizen. There is an additional restriction—a restriction, which, Mr. President, [Mr. BRIGHT in the chair,] as you know, has no application in any of our northwestern States. In the State of Michigan, any man can hold land, whether he be a citizen or not, and it will descend to his heirs or representatives at his death. It is so in many, I think most, of the northwestern States. We have suffered nothing by the policy. Nobody objects to it in our State. Nobody has seen the suffering resulting from it. But, in this bill, I repeat, there is the additional restriction, that he cannot receive a title until he actually becomes a citizen of the United States.

Mr. President, I beg leave to repeat the inquiry, whence this alarm? Whence its necessity? Why should the locus be sounded over a homestead bill, that never was sounded over a bill for the sale of the lands, never over one for taking them by preëmption? But because a bill comes up at this time, with a new title, to dispose of the lands at a new price, and upon different terms of payment, there is a holy horror of foreigners; there is an idea, if we are to believe the argument of the Senator from South Carolina, that men who are citizens of the United States do not come reeking from prisons; do not come from the stench of the poor-house! Why, sir, that idea will not be borne out in experience. You may search the poor-houses and the prisons, and you will find there as many native Americans as foreigners. There is no such halo thrown around a man because he is a citizen of the United States; not at all. He is not necessarily a villain because he is a foreigner, nor an honest man because he is a native-born. It will turn out, therefore, that the facts do not warrant the argument; and I confess, sir, I have been a little anxious to call the attention of Senators to the facts in the case.

I have said enough in respect to the policy. I undertake to use no defiant language, as the Senator from Alabama does; but I will respectfully ask Senators to find, if they can, in this bill, a departure from the policy of the United States in respect to its public lands, which takes away any restriction that hitherto existed.

Now, sir, a few words in reference to the bill itself. My interpretation of it is like that of the Senator from Mississippi. I have no doubt whatever that the right of occupancy terminates with the five years. My reasoning is this: All lands subject to private entry are on sale to anybody at ten shillings an acre. This bill proposes to step in and give to an individual the right to interfere with that general law, so far as to occupy for five years, and actually cultivate it, under the provisions of this bill; but if, at the end of the five years, he does not, according to the provisions of the bill, perfect his title by taking his patent, where is his authority to keep the land out of the market, and prevent any other man entering it at ten shillings an acre? I submit that this is the correct view.

I said in the outset that my object in calling up this bill, and asking for its consideration to a conclusion at this time, was, that the bill might be reasonably considered and properly modified, so as to carry out the objects intended, and so as to meet the sanction of a majority of the Senate. If, therefore, the bill is not what its friends say it is, amend it. I have been unable to see the wisdom or the policy of contending so strenuously against this bill as it is, without any attempt to amend it. If there is any question about the right of occupancy after five years with an omission to perfect the title, put in words which will render the meaning perfectly clear; say, in so many words, that unless the occupant, under the law, perfects his title by taking a patent at the end of five years, his right of occupation shall cease. This is what I think it means now. That, at all events, is what it may be made to mean. So of this section. A criticism was sprung upon the word "now." The Senator from Alabama, a day or two since, sought to show that the word "now" did not mean at the passage of the act, but would mean at the time the individual makes his application to occupy under it. I give it no such construction. But how easy is it to avoid all question by simply inserting, instead of the word "now," the words, "at the passage of this act?" And so of anything else in the bill which is susceptible of two interpretations. In fact, I do not know that, in the little legislative experience which I have had, I have ever seen a bill contested like this. Gentlemen do not ask to amend it. They do not point out possible discrepancies in the bill, opportunities for different interpretations, and propose to amend so as to make it positive and certain; but they content themselves with shadowing forth the enormities that may spring up under it. Their imaginations—and I think they are exceedingly fruitful in invention—are taxed to the utmost to show you what, by possibility, may happen under this bill.

Well, sir, I suppose it would be possible for all the land that is now on private entry in the United States, to be taken and occupied by all the vagabonds in the world; but I do not think it very probable; nor should I consider it a very sound argument for taking all that land out of the market, simply because this possibility exists in the nature of things, and in the nature of man. Why, sir, one would think, from listening to these arguments, that this was a bill gotten up exclusively to invite foreigners to our shores. The Senator from South Carolina says that what is precedent to-day is prescription to-morrow, and he says, also, that there is no disguising it, that the object is now to pass a bill which shall permit foreigners who are here to-day to take land, but next year with an evident intention of permitting those who may come at any time hereafter, to do the same. I do not know where he derives that argument from. I confess I have no such design myself, and I have not heard of any other gentleman who has. It seems to me that in that respect there is hardly any soundness in the position. It is very much better, I submit, Mr. President, to argue things as they exist, rather than to suppose a condition of things, and argue against that.

I did not rise, sir, for the purpose of consuming the time of the Senate upon this bill, or upon this proposition, but simply for the purpose of calling back, if it lay in my power, the argument to the policy of this Government in respect to its public lands, and to show that, so far as relates to persons, this bill is more restricted than any other one which has ever passed, and to submit again what I did a few days ago, that Senators should offer their amendments for the purpose of making it as perfect as the subject itself is susceptible of.

I shall not vote to strike out this section. I do not think it is worth while to confine entries under this act to native-born citizens. I think that a man who is here to-day, "a resident," in the language of the bill, "of one of the States or Territories," may properly enter upon this land and cultivate it. And I should like to inquire, is there any gentleman here who has the ability to inform me what injury is to happen to the Government of the United States, either in respect to its lands, or in respect to its morality, by allowing any man now in the country to enter upon one hundred and sixty acres of land, and work upon it, and raise produce. Why, sir, we have been taught, from the beginning of civilization down to to-day, that this was one of the most laudable enterprises that could be followed. There is scarcely a philosopher or a poet who has not sought to show that, of all vocations, the cultivation of the soil is best calculated to make an industrious citizen and an honest man. Then, I inquire, what injury can possibly take place by allowing any man now in the country to enter upon a quarter section of land, and work it for five years? I can see none. At the end of five years, unless he becomes a citizen of the United States, he cannot perfect his title, nor further enjoy the occupancy.

I discover no magical effect in this question of citizenship. I do not believe that a man is any better to-morrow, after having perfected his naturalization and become a citizen, than he is to-day, when it is unperfected. He is the same man. He stands before the country and his God in the same attitude. He has the same morality, the same propensities, the same inclinations, and the same judgment. I therefore see no magic effect about it; but if anybody does see it, then I say that person is satisfied by the provision of this bill; for the individual is compelled to become a citizen before he can take out a title to the land. I hope, therefore, the Senate will go on to perfect the bill, not to strike out its sections, unless they should be stricken out for want of virtue, but improve it. Attach a price to the land, if you please—I avowed myself in favor of it the other day—a reasonable and proper price; change the terms of occupancy, if you please; but I protest here to-day against proscribing any class, without knowing the men who constitute that class.

Mr. BUTLER. My friend from Mississippi [Mr. Brown] sat down with the remark that I was one of the seven, and, therefore, he was gratified that I stood where I had been throughout, both in what I had said, and as I had voted, and as I was understood to stand upon the records, in favor of what was known as the Clayton amendment upon the Nebraska bill.

I voted for it, I believe, when the bill was returned here without that amendment. I voted for the bill, as I believe my honorable friend from Mississippi did also; but with regard to any proposition to strike out the provision proposed to be struck out by the Clayton amendment, I think it probable we did not agree in our votes; not but that I agreed in opinion with the Senator. I do not know that I voted with him; I think not.

Mr. BROWN. I have no doubt that my friend from South Carolina meant, I know he meant, to state the thing exactly as it was. There was a slight misunderstanding, however. There were seven of us on the final vote on what was called the Clayton amendment, who voted against allowing foreigners to exercise the rights of suffrage and holding office in the Territories, of which seven I did not think my friend from South Carolina was one. That was what I alluded to.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, some four or five years ago, when the homestead bill was but a shadow thrown over this House, I took that early occasion to express my approbation of the principles of the system, and to discuss at large all the questions which it then presented. It has not been my custom here, ever to repeat unnecessarily arguments which I had taken occasion to use in previous instances in support of the same policy. I shall not, therefore, deem it necessary to repeat what I have heretofore spoken, on this occasion, when I suppose that this great measure, which then had so few friends that they were numbered by the half dozen, is about to become the law of the land. I content myself with declaring that I shall vote in favor of this bill, in whatever shape it may finally come from the hands of the Committee of the Whole, if it retain the great leading principle of a homestead law.

I address myself for a moment to the proposition which is immediately under consideration, the amendment proposed by the honorable and distinguished Senator from Delaware, [Mr. CLAYTON.] That amendment proposes substantially to strike out that provision of the bill which provides that foreigners not naturalized, but candidates for naturalization, shall participate in this distribution of the public lands; and in lieu of that provision, substitute one giving a sum of money equivalent to the value of the lands to native-born mechanics throughout the United States, who may not be able to avail themselves, by reason of their habits and circumstances of life, of the benefits which the bill gives generally in the shape of lands. Sir, I think the honorable Senator will excuse me for saying that the last proposition seems to be merely designed to serve as a cover for the first, as a pretext by which we may compensate ourselves for something that we do, in striking out the proposition in favor of foreigners.

Sir, I cannot go for the pretext. It is unequal and unjust. I know no reason why we should give to mechanics money more than to other classes of citizens who are not mechanics. I see no reason for discriminating between one class of the native population and another, any more than I see any reason for discriminating between the whole foreign class and the whole of the native class. It would be impracticable. Mechanics are useful men; they are invaluable men; but there are other classes who are equally useful. There are the sailors, the seamen, the navigators, the fishermen, the soldiers, quite as well entitled as the mechanic. There are even farmers who could not leave old farms in the East to take new farms in the West. I dismiss, therefore, what seems to me to be proposed merely as a form, and come to the consideration of the proposition to strike out the provision in favor of foreigners.

I look at this in two lights—one as a measure belonging to a general principle, sentiment, or policy; that is, the principle of discouraging immigration into this country. That will be its effect. In that respect it is a part, a single measure, of a whole system, which is commonly known by the name of Native Americanism; that is to say, of establishing a preference for native American citizens over foreigners. I do not know that my honorable and distinguished friend meant, by this single proposition, to extend his support to the general principle; but there are others here who have advocated it upon that ground. Now, then, it is well enough, if we are going into this principle at all, to see where it leads. I have in my hand the policy of exclusion of foreigners, or aliens, as it is elaborated and drawn out into distinct propositions by a journal which represents that class of society who support that principle. I find that there are sixteen articles in this creed. Here they are:

1. Repeal of all naturalization laws.
2. None but native Americans for office.
3. A pure American common school system.
4. War to the hilt on Romanism.
5. Opposition, first and last, to the formation of military companies composed of foreigners.
6. The advocacy of a sound, healthy, and safe nationality.
7. Hostility to all papal influences, in whatever form, and whatever name.
8. American institutions and American sentiment.
9. More stringent and effective emigration laws.
10. The amplest protection to Protestant interests.
11. The doctrines of the revered Washington and his compatriots.
12. The sending back of all foreign paupers landed on our shores.
13. The formation of societies to protect all American interests.
14. Eternal enmity to all who attempt to carry out the principles of a foreign church or State.
15. Our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country.
16. And finally, American laws and American legislation, and death to all foreign influences, whether in high places or low!

Sir, this creed contains just half a dozen true, sound American principles.

Mr. CHASE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him where he finds this creed?

Mr. SEWARD. In the American Crusader.

Mr. CHASE. Where is it printed?

Mr. SEWARD. I believe in Boston. I find in it a comprehensive view of the principles, some of them right, and some of them wrong—

Mr. DIXON. Does the Senator mean to say that these are the principles of the "Know-Nothings?" I ask merely for information.

Mr. SEWARD. I know nothing of the "Know-Nothings." [Laughter.]

Mr. DIXON. If the Senator knows nothing of the "Know-Nothings," it seems to me very strange that he should pretend here to state what the principles of the "Know-Nothings" are. I should like him to explain, if he knows nothing of the "Know-Nothings" or their principles, how does he read here the principles of the "Know-Nothings?" [Laughter.]

Mr. SEWARD. If my excellent friend, the honorable Senator from Kentucky, had paid attention to what I said, he would have learned, in the first place, that I said nothing of the "Know-Nothings." My reason for it is, that I always say nothing of that about which I know nothing. [Laughter.] Again, the honorable Senator will excuse me from further answering his question, because it is my purpose to say nothing of the Know-Nothings, because of the Know-Nothings, as I have already stated, I know nothing at all. [Renewed laughter.] I am stating what purports to be the creed which comprehends all the articles of this principle of opposing foreign immigration. I need not discriminate here in favor of these principles which are national, these which are just, and these which are American. I need not point them out, and show which they are. It is sufficient for me to say that, in my judgment, every thing is un-American which makes a distinction, of whatever kind, in this country, between the native-born American and him whose lot is directed to be cast here by an overruling Providence, and who renounces his allegiance to a foreign land, and swears fealty to the country which adopts him.

But, sir, without going further in this line of argument, I will state my object in bringing this creed before the Senate. It is to show them simply this: that although it is a very narrow road, it is also a very long one, that we are entering upon when we begin upon this principle of exclusion of foreigners. I wish to show that this will be but a beginning. I am sure that we are to stop short of the end somewhere. My idea is to stop at the door, to stop at the gate. I have never heard any philosophical reason given why there should be this exclusion. I am an American citizen. So was my father before me. Those who can trace their lineage further than I can, may be able to throw further back into antiquity the period when they, by their progenitors, were foreigners and aliens. I cannot certainly carry my genealogy back far enough to know whether it was more than three generations.

Why should I exclude the foreigner to-day? He is only what every American citizen, or his ancestor was at some time or other. If he be an alien, he is, in the course of one, two, three, four, or five years, to become what we all are, American citizens. Sir, something has been said about loyalty. I desire to know where and when the foreigners, the aliens, in this country, have shown less loyalty to this Government and to its institutions, than the native citizens? But, sir, I shall not pursue that line of argument further. I desire to look at it for one moment as a question of policy. We are told that we are to discourage foreign immigration. Suppose we had adopted that policy thirty years ago, what would have been the consequence?

It is now twenty-nine years ago since the system of internal improvement in this country commenced by the construction of the Erie canal through the State of New York, uniting the tide waters of the Hudson with Lake Erie; and since that time we have perfected five thousand miles of canals, at an expense of $600,000,000, extending our inland navigation from the Mississippi, at its mouth, to the Hudson river at New York, and thus dispensing altogether with what was one of the two great national wants at the time of the American revolution—the navigation of the St. Lawrence. How was that done? I mean, from whence came the labor that did it?

I know of but one American citizen who worked with the spade and wheel-barrow on those works. Doubtless there are many others, but I know only one, and he, I am glad to say, is now a member on this floor, [Mr. WADE, of Ohio,] and one of the most able and talented members. But, as a general fact, the canals were made by aliens in the process of naturalization. What more have we done? We have made sixteen thousand miles of railroad, connecting the different parts of this Union inseparably together, and thus overcoming the want of centralization, and enabling ourselves to look with pity and contempt upon the statesman who seeks to alarm us into measures of doubtful merit or value, by threatening us with a dissolution of the Union. What labor made all these railroads? I think it was the labor chiefly of foreigners.

Now, what I wish to ask, is, whether these roads and canals have cost too little? Suppose that the foreigners had remained at home, and American native labor had performed this work, can anybody tell what the canals and railroads would have cost?

Again, what has been the diminution of the cost of labor among ourselves? It ranges now from seventy-five cents to a dollar a day. If there were no foreign immigration here, and native Americans were to perform all this labor, what would be its cost? What would have been the condition of the country but for this labor? Sir, I think we must take the case as it is. The ingress of the foreign population into this country is a fixed and unchangeable fact. It has its cause in the condition of society here, and in the condition of society in foreign countries. Nothing could prevent the exodus of the population from Ireland when they were besieged in their native homes by famine and pestilence. They came here in obedience to a law which obliged them to come. So it is of those parts of the population of Germany and continental Europe which come here. So it is of the population from China, which is now flowing in upon the Pacific coast. It cannot remain at home; it must come here, and inasmuch as it must come here, we are to treat it as if we were justly and wisely here.

Regarding, then, this immigration as to continue, let us see what will be the effect of the measure in question upon the interests of society in that respect. The foreign immigration pours into the cities just as it has hitherto done. When it enters the gate a discrimination is found to be made against it, and in favor of the native Americans. The American citizen may go to the western countries, to the new Territories, and occupy and cultivate a farm. The aliens cannot. What then will happen? The American citizen will go. The alien must remain. What is to be the effect? Is it not seen at once that it breaks society into two classes, and distributes them, not according to the laws of supply and demand, but according to an arbitrary principle or policy, obliging the foreigner to remain in our cities, and upon our Atlantic coast, and sending a large share of the native population into the West. How will that operate upon the western portions of the country? Do they not want laborers? Are they not engaged in extending and perfecting the system of internal improvements? Do they not want their share of this foreign population there? If it is useful to us, is it not useful to them? Are we through with all that we have to do in the Atlantic States, so that we can dispense with foreign labor, and resort to the labor of American-born citizens exclusively? Those may come to this conclusion who, in looking through the different departments of industry in the cities, believe—wisely and upon well ascertained facts—that there is a surplus of labor in the different departments of commerce and industry in the Atlantic States; but I think they will find themselves quite mistaken; and that if they send away the alien population, they will find the prices of agricultural labor rise to a high advance in the Atlantic States, severely injurious to those States; while a corresponding injury will result to the western States from the absence of the foreign labor.

Sir, it is time I should give the text of this sermon. Here it is:

"He (the king of England) has endeavored to prevent the population of these States; for that purpose, obstructing the laws for naturalization of foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their migration hither, and raising the conditions of new appropriations of lands."—Declaration of Independence.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, it is not my object at the present time to enter into a long discussion of the merits of this bill. In the few remarks which I intend to make, I design to confine myself exclusively to the section which is proposed to be stricken out. I regret that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STUART] is not now in his seat, for the remarks which he made have produced in my mind a desire to discuss the principles which he avowed, and to bring them to his attention, and that of the Senate, so that we may understand correctly whether he is right, or whether my honorable friends who preceded me upon the same side of the question, with myself, are right.

The broad proposition assumed by that Senator is that, according to the present land system of the United States, any foreigner may become the purchaser and owner of any land belonging to the United States; consequently he can see no objection, such as has been urged by my honorable friends on my side of the question, to the section proposed to be stricken out. He can see no objection to giving the public lands to foreigners, because he says those foreigners may now become the owners of the lands by purchase.

I am utterly mistaken, or the honorable Senator from Michigan is wrong, in supposing that foreigners can now buy the public domain. I take the State represented by the honorable Senator from Mississippi. I take the State of Alabama, without knowing, however, what may be the local law of Alabama. I am apprised that the law of Mississippi is as that of Maryland, that no alien can become the owner of land within the limits of that State.

Mr. CLAY. That is the law of Alabama.

Mr. PRATT. That is the law of Alabama. It possibly is the law of Louisiana.

Mr. BENJAMIN. No, it is not.

Mr. PRATT. It is the law, however, of many of the States of the Union in which the public lands are located. It is, therefore, Mr. President, perfectly clear, according to my conception, when in Mississippi, in Alabama, and in other land States as they are designated, the law of the State prohibits an alien from becoming the owner of the land, that it is wrong to attempt, by this sixth section, to annul the law of the State by making it competent for an alien to hold land, when under the State law he cannot hold it. There is no argument necessary, because the avowed object of the bill is to give to every alien the power to hold land within the limits of any State of this Union, where the United States are the possessors of that land.

I therefore submit, Mr. President, whether this section should not be stricken out for the reason which I now assign: That we should not bring the jurisdiction of the Federal Government in conflict with the jurisdiction of the States, which will be undoubtedly done if the bill pass with the section in it. That is one proposition which I desire to submit.

It is argued further, that, under this section, no alien, no foreigner, until he has become naturalized, can become the owner of the land. But, in the first place, Mr. President, although he would not acquire, by patent, the absolute title to the land, he is entitled, under the bill, to hold it, not for five years, as supposed by the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BROWN], but as long as he may live; and after he dies, if it is within one year or one moment after he goes there—if he comes to this country to-day, and goes upon the land to-morrow, carrying his children with him, equally born foreigners, and he dies, those children, without ever becoming naturalized, can become, under the second section, taken in connection with the sixth, absolute owners in fee, without a patent, of the land which you give by the bill. If the foreigner who removes to your public land dies at any period, his children, by his death, become the owners, in fee, of that land; therefore, without being naturalized, they are the owners in fee of the land; and if they are under the age of twenty-one, the executors of their father may, for their benefit, sell the land in fee to whoever chooses to buy it.

I say, then, Mr. President, that, under this section of the bill, the occupancy of the public land is not confined, as Senators have contended, to persons who are to become citizens; but you are bringing in direct conflict the jurisdiction of those States which prohibit aliens from holding lands, with the Federal Government, by giving the right to foreigners in States which restrict them from holding lands. You give to aliens in Mississippi and Alabama, whose local laws prohibit it, the right to hold in fee without becoming naturalized, or applying to become naturalized.

But my friend from Delaware [Mr. CLAYTON] pointed out another discrepancy in this section, to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate. If the Senate will look, for one moment, at the first section of the bill, they will find that, in giving the authority to citizens of the United States to acquire the title to this land by the occupancy of it, it is confined to any free white person who is the head of a family. The sixth section, unintentionally, I have no doubt, substitutes for "free white person" the designation of "any individual."

Mr. BADGER and Mr. CLAY. That relates to foreigners.

Mr. PRATT. Any individual, who is a foreigner, whether white or black; whether capable of becoming a citizen of Alabama, by the local law of Alabama, or not; whether capable of becoming a citizen of Mississippi, according to the policy of that State, or not, is, by this bill, to be authorized to go to Alabama or Mississippi; and by merely going upon the land, he becomes actual owner, in fee, of the land itself; and if he should die, his child becomes owner without any attempt to become naturalized.

Mr. BUTLER. Does it not require naturalization?

Mr. PRATT. This does not.

A SENATOR. He must file his declaration of intention.

Mr. PRATT. The Senator does not understand me. I say that, under this bill, any black person from Cuba, or from Africa, can go to Mississippi or Alabama, and if he should die while occupying the land, his children, being aliens too, coming with him from Africa or Cuba, become per se, from the fact of the occupancy of the ancestor and his death, the actual owners, in fee, of the land. The sixth section, it will be collected, puts aliens upon an equal footing with citizens of the United States. The proviso to the second section is, that if this person thus coming here is dead, and his heirs shall prove by two credible witnesses that "they have continued to reside upon and cultivate said land, and still reside upon the same, and have not alienated the same, or any part thereof, then, in such case, they shall be entitled to a patent, as in other cases provided for by law." And then, again, there is the further proviso:

"And provided further, In case of the death of both father and mother, leaving an infant child, or children under twenty-one years of age, the right and the fee shall inure to the benefit of said infant child or children, and the executor, administrator, or guardian may sell," &c.

So here, in the contingency which I have suggested, is the absolute transfer, in fee, to an alien negro who should emigrate to Mississippi or Alabama, where, by law, he is not entitled to go at all.

Mr. BUTLER. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him to enable me, and those who have insisted upon the distinction, to be right? By the naturalization laws passed in 1793, I think, or 1794, after the adoption of the Constitution, no person can become a citizen of the United States unless he is a white person.

Mr. PRATT. I am not denying that.

Mr. BENJAMIN. But he can make a declaration. That is all the law requires.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to get my friend right.

Mr. WALKER. I have no doubt the Senator from Maryland intended to read the bill fairly; but he certainly has not done so in one particular. He has said that it is immaterial if the person settling to-day should die to-morrow, his children are to become entitled to a patent for the land. He certainly has not read the bill, or, if he has, he has not correctly read this proviso:

"Provided, however, That no certificate shall be given or patent issued therefor, until the expiration of five years from the date of such entry; and if, at the expiration of such time, the person making such entry, or, if he be dead, his widow, or, in case of her death, his heirs or devisee, or, in case of a widow making such entry, her heirs or devisee, in case of her death, shall prove by two credible witnesses that he, she, or they, have continued to reside upon and cultivate said land, and still reside upon the same, and have not alienated the same, or any part thereof; then, in such case, he, she, or they, shall be entitled to a patent, as in other cases provided for by law."

He will see, then, under that proviso, the children are not to be entitled unless after the expiration of five years. Then the next proviso is connected with it by the conjunction "and":

"And provided further, In case of the death of both father and mother, leaving an infant child or children under twenty-one years of age, the right and the fee shall inure to the benefit of said infant child or children, and the executor, administrator, or guardian, may, at any time within two years after"—

After what? After the five years, and

"After the death of the surviving parent, and in accordance with the laws of the State in which such children for the time being have their domicile, sell said land for the benefit of said infants, but for no other purpose."

I only wish to correct the statement of the Senator, when he said that if the party died the day after he had settled, his children would be entitled to the benefits of this act.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, the broad proposition I started to illustrate was, that, under the provisions of the bill, a person may become an owner of lands without being naturalized, or having ever declared his intention to become naturalized, and I referred to the proviso in the second section for the purpose of showing that I was right. The certificate is not to issue until the party shall have resided five years upon the land; he is not entitled to his patent; but after "the expiration of such time, the person making such entry, or if he be dead,"—if he be dead, therefore at the expiration of the time—

Mr. WALKER. After—

Mr. PRATT. Well, after—then the children are to be entitled. Let me put a case. Suppose A, B, and C—A, a foreigner, B and C his children under the age of twenty-one—were, under the bill, to proceed and take possession of a portion of the public lands; suppose A to live for a twelve-month, and then die, and his children continue to occupy the land for the residue of the five years; they would be entitled, I contend, according to my convictions of the true construction of the second section, in fee, to the land upon which their father had originally entered.

In reference to the naturalization laws of the United States, I was perfectly aware that under them none but white persons can become citizens of the United States; but this section does not require them to become citizens before they are to occupy the land. They are only to make some affidavit that it is their desire, their object, their intention, to become citizens. That declaration entitles them to take possession of the land, and having possession of it, under this bill, their children, in the event of their death, at the expiration of five years would be entitled to the land in fee, without ever applying to become citizens. You will see that the second section does not require that the child, although a foreigner himself, although born abroad, shall become naturalized; but upon the death of the parent, the child, if under twenty-one years of age, is, per se, without naturalization, entitled in fee to the land. If he be black or white, there is no necessity for naturalization. It is, per se, because he is the child of the party who occupied it, that he becomes, under this bill, entitled in fee to the land taken possession of by the ancestor.

I cannot accord either, Mr. President, with the doctrine of my friend from Michigan, [Mr. CASS,] when he says he can see no difference between foreigners and Americans, and that being an American citizen does not make a man purer, does not change his heart, his mind, or his morality. He can see no difference between American citizens and foreign citizens. Now, sir, we are living, I admit, in a new era. We are living in days of progress; but I regret that the day has ever come when, in the Senate of the United States, and by a Senator as respectable as my honorable friend who has made the asseveration, it should be declared, seemingly with the approbation of many of those who heard him, that he could see no distinction between an American citizen and a foreigner, upon a question of disposing of property exclusively belonging to American citizens.

Sir, this is an electioneering topic. The speeches here are made not for our consideration, not to have weight with us, but for home consumption. I can readily see that in those States where foreigners are allowed to vote and exercise the privilege of American citizens, their representatives here may feel bound to protect them; and their own political existence may require that protection; but I never can assent to the doctrine that there is no distinction between an American citizen and a foreigner, in giving to one or the other a right to own the soil of this Union. I am not talking about naturalized or native citizens; but I am talking about citizens of the United States, recognized by the Constitution of the country as citizens. Is there no difference between a citizen of the country, owning the soil of the country which he is bound to defend, and a foreigner who owes allegiance to another Power, and who, in the event of a war between the Government whose land he owns and the foreign Government to which he owes allegiance, is bound by his oath to take part against the former? I have no intention or desire to make any speech upon this subject; but I submit, as a matter which occurs to my mind at the moment, with the impression that it is right, but without that consideration or reflection which would enable me to speak on it, whether the foreigner to whom you are about to give these lands can commit treason against the United States? What I understand to be treason is when the citizen of a Government, owing that Government allegiance, makes war upon it. If the citizen of a foreign Government be temporarily here, and that Government to which he owes allegiance goes to war with the United States, he could be punished for treason abroad if he defended this country against that foreign Government.

Mr. CASS. Certainly.

Mr. PRATT. The Senator admits that. It is enough for the argument then. That Senator is in favor of giving to the citizens of a foreign Government the public lands of the United States, when he concedes that the citizens of that Government, in the event of a war between the foreign Government and the United States, would be bound by their allegiance to the foreign Government to make war upon our own country.

Mr. CASS. I admit no such thing. I repudiate it in toto. What I said was, that an Englishman here temporarily, with a view to return, while he is here can commit treason against his Government. He has a temporary allegiance here; but if his Government goes to war, he may claim the privilege of a British citizen, and be a prisoner of war on parole; but I did not admit that if he becomes an American citizen he can commit treason against England. We have always opposed that; England wanted it admitted; but under every Administration we have opposed it.

Mr. PRATT. This is the proposition which I desire to submit: Whether a foreigner who owes no allegiance to a Government can commit treason against that Government? As I stated, it is a proposition which I have not considered; but it occurred to me at the moment. I doubt very much whether he could be punished for treason at all; and, undoubtedly, if the foreign Government to which he should owe allegiance were to make war against the United States, although you give him possession of a whole county in one of your States, he would not be bound to defend that land, but would be bound by his allegiance to the other Government to give it up to the foreign potentate to whom his allegiance was due.

Mr. President, I did not intend to say as much as I have already said upon this subject. I am thoroughly convinced, whatever may be considered the policy of this Government in reference to the disposition of the public lands, it is undoubtedly impolitic (and I say further to my friends from those States where foreigners are now allowed to vote before they are naturalized, the time is coming fast when the impression will pervade every section of this Union that it is impolitic, and that it will become unpopular) to give the right, the sacred right, of making the laws of this country to those who do not owe allegiance to it.

Mr. MASON. I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow, in order that we may have an Executive session.

Mr. WALKER. I hope that will not be done. It is too late to go into Executive session; and I desire to submit a few remarks on this subject.

Mr. MASON. The Senator may rely upon it, that this debate is not going to stop so suddenly. I shall certainly take part in it. It is now half past three o'clock; but I do not want to detain the Senate long in Executive session.

Mr. WALKER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to—ayes 16, noes 25.

The motion to postpone was agreed to—ayes 23, noes 25.

TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. BADGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate, yesterday, passed the bill authorizing the construction of a subterranean line of telegraph from the Mississippi or Missouri rivers to the Pacific ocean; and the motion was entered on the Journal for future consideration.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 13, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved. The SPEAKER appointed Messrs. RUFFIN and WHEELER members of the select committee, under the resolution of the House of Saturday last, in place of Messrs. CLINGMAN and CUTTING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, inclosing a communication from the Secretary of the Navy respecting the observations of Lieutenant James M. Gillies, of the United States Navy; which, with the accompanying document, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

CHARGES AGAINST JUDGE GRIER.

Mr. KIDWELL. I hold in my hand a very important memorial which I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to present, for the purpose of reference to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HAVEN. I should like to know the object of the memorial.

The memorial was then read by its title, as follows:

Memorial of the Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Company asking for an investigation of the charges preferred against the Hon. R. C. Grier, one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HOWE. If left to the impulses of my own feelings and judgment, I should certainly object to the reception of the memorial; but so fully satisfied am I that the distinguished jurist to whom it relates would dissuade me from that course, could he be consulted, I shall interpose no objection.

The memorial was then received, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. MAY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a memorial, to which I am sure no one will object; and I ask that it may be read, in order to its reference. It is a memorial from the Managers of the Washington National Monument Society.

The memorial was then read by the Clerk, as follows:

WASHINGTON NATIONAL MONUMENT OFFICE, }
June 29, 1854.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the Board of Managers of the Washington National Monument Society respectfully shows: That in the year 1833 an association of individuals was formed in this city, for the purpose of raising funds, by appeals to the patriotism of the people, for the erection of a monument in the national metropolis, to the memory of the Father of his Country; that your memorialists and their predecessors, elected managers of the association, have gratuitously given their services, at great personal sacrifice, to the promotion of its objects; that they have been enabled to raise the proposed monument to the height of one hundred and fifty-six feet; that three hundred and thirty-four feet remain yet to be erected; that the funds of the association are entirely exhausted, and all recent efforts on the part of your memorialists to obtain funds for completing the work have proved abortive; and that your memorialists are unable to devise any plan more likely to succeed. Under these circumstances, they feel it to be their duty to bring to the notice of the Representatives of the States and people of the Union these facts, in order that such action may be had on them as to the assembled wisdom and patriotism of the nation may seem meet.

ARCHIBALD HENDERSON,
1st Vice President.
ELISHA WHITTLESLEY,
General Agent.

JOHN CARROLL BRENT, Secretary.

Mr. MAY. The House will see that that memorial is its own advocate, and I have not one word to add to it.

THE SPEAKER. What disposition does the gentleman from Maryland desire to make of the memorial?

Mr. MAY. Upon conferring with gentlemen of the House, of experience, they have suggested to me that it ought to be referred, on account of its dignity, to a select committee, and the associations connected with the number thirteen, have advised that I shall move a select committee of that number to consider the subject.

Mr. COBB. I would suggest thirty-one.

Mr. MAY. The memorial asks no money, but submits the whole subject to the consideration of Congress.

The question was then taken on Mr. MAY's motion; and it was agreed to.

So the memorial was referred to a select committee of thirteen.

JULIA AIKEN.

Mr. EDMANDS, from the Committee on Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Julia Aiken; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

THE SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of House bill No. 392, "making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law," reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union with certain amendments.

The first amendment was then reported by the Clerk, as follows:

Strike out of the following clause "for continuing the improvement of the navigation of the Ohio, including the repair of the dam at Cumberland Island, $90,000," the words "$90,000," and insert in lieu thereof "$190,000, $100,000 of said sum to be expended in the improvement of the said river above the falls. And that so soon as the President of the United States is notified by the board of president and directors of the Louisville and Portland Canal Company that all of the capital stock of said company is owned by the United States, and that the said company is free from all debts and liabilities, then the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint the proper officers to take possession of said canal on the part of the United States, and to take control of the canal and canal property aforesaid, so that the same may not fall into decay or obstruct navigation; and the expenses attending the custody and management of said canal and canal property shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not exceeding the sum of $25,000 per annum; and from and after the 1st day of January next, the navigation of said canal shall be free from all tolls and charges whatsoever."

Upon this amendment the yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. BRIDGES. I desire to ask the Chair whether, after the House has voted upon the different amendments, it would not be in order, and competent for the House to vote separately upon each item contained in the bill, if the House desires to do so, under the 151st rule?

THE SPEAKER. Such has been the practice of the House under the rule referred to by the gentleman. By that rule it is competent for the House to take a separate vote upon each item of the bill, in its discretion, provided one fifth of the body demand it.

Mr. HAVEN. I want to submit to the Chair whether this is not the precise question which I submitted to the Chair, in reference to the assay office purchase, in the city of New York, in the civil and diplomatic bill a few days since? The language of the rule which I referred to, then, the 53d rule, is the same as that of the 151st rule now referred to. The language of both rules is, any member may call for, &c., and the Chair then decided that to call for a division was a motion, and that it was not competent to submit that motion after the previous question had been ordered. The Chair will perceive that the language of the two rules is precisely the same, and I submit the questions are substantially parallel, and the call is as much a motion now as it was then.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair begs pardon of the gentleman from New York, and hopes he will hear the rule read, and he believes the gentleman will be very well satisfied that he is mistaken in regard to the character of the two rules to which he refers.

The rule was then read, as follows:

"Upon the engrossment of any bill making appropriations of money for works of internal improvements of any kind or description, it shall be in the power of any member to call for a division of the question, so as to take a separate vote of the House upon each item of improvement or appropriation contained in said bill, or upon such items separately, and others collectively, as the members making the call may specify; and if one fifth of the members present second said call, it shall be the duty of the Speaker to make such division of the question, and put them to vote accordingly."

Mr. LILLY. I desire to ask a question of the Chair. Does the Chair decide this to be a bill for internal improvements? As it is denied all around the House, I desire to have the decision of the Chair upon that point.

THE SPEAKER. That may come up as a question of order after the amendments are disposed of.

Mr. COBB. I would like to know if the amendment is not divisible?

THE SPEAKER. Another question is raised with regard to the amendment. The Chair will state that this rule in reference to internal improvements has been adopted since he has been a member of the House, and, since its adoption, the recollection of the Chair is, that it has been made applicable to bills of this description alone. Under the spirit of the rule, a separate vote may undoubtedly be had upon each item in the bill. A different question, however, now arises. The bill has been reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments, and the previous question has been ordered upon its engrossment, and the Chair is asked whether an amendment which is reported by the Committee of the Whole is divisible. The Chair thinks that, under the spirit of the rule, the amendment, containing as it does more than one item, may be divided, and a separate vote taken upon each item.

Mr. COBB. I then call for a division of the amendment, and ask that the vote may be taken upon the first portion. I desire to vote for a part of the amendment, but not for the whole. I insist upon a division.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I rise to another point of order. It may be very true that upon the engrossment of the bill this amendment may be divided under the rule alluded to by the Chair, but I insist that the amendment must now be voted on as a whole.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that a literal construction of the rule would favor the view taken by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Under that rule I think a vote may be twice taken upon these items. If a separate vote is taken now, it may again be taken upon the engrossment of the bill.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the object of the rule may be accomplished in either way; but, as a matter of convenience, he thinks it would be better to have the division now, which would preclude the necessity of taking a second vote upon the amendment.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I can furnish the Chair with precedents, if he desires it, where the vote has been taken upon the amendment as a whole upon its adoption, and divided upon the engrossment of the bill. I think that is the course which has been heretofore pursued, and the course contemplated by the rule.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt of the correctness of the judgment of the gentleman from Illinois. The object of the rule may be accomplished in either way. The only question is as to the practice under it. The Chair does not think a matter of principle is involved; for the principle of the rule would be carried out by either course. The technical construction of the rule, however, would be in favor of the course pointed out by the gentleman—to divide the proposition upon the engrossment of the bill, and not upon its adoption as an amendment.

Mr. HAVEN. I have no desire to embarrass the question, or to undertake to puzzle the Chair or the House, but, if allowed, I should like to make this statement: I understood, the other day, when I asked for a division of the question on the assay office proposition—

THE SPEAKER. The Chair recollects the whole case, and has no doubt of the correctness of his decision; but it is not in order now to make speeches about it.

Mr. HAVEN. I understood that the decision was based on the ground that, inasmuch as the previous question was called, it was in the nature of a motion to divide, and therefore not in order. Now, the 53d rule, under which I sought to do that, uses the words that "any member may call for a division," which is precisely equivalent language to that of the 151st rule. Still, I do not regard it as a matter of much consequence now.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair must call the gentleman to order. It is not in order to make a speech on that matter at this time.

Mr. HAVEN. I have no desire to submit a speech, or to raise a question of order. I am willing to go to voting at once.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it would be in accordance with the rule to make a division on the engrossment of the bill, if the amendment be voted in.

Mr. COBB. Then if all be voted down, I shall lose the benefit of division. I cannot divide now.

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot have a division now, according to the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SEWARD. Is the vote now on the entire amendment, or has it been divided?

THE SPEAKER. The vote is on the entire amendment.

The question was taken on the first amendment; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 94, nays 58; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bennett, Benson, Breckinridge, Bridges, Bugge, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Clark, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dick, Disney, Dunbar, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmonds, Thomas D. Eliot, John M. Elliott, Ellison, English, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Giddings, Green, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Henn, Hiester, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, Kerr, Kidwell, Knox, Kurtz, Latham, Lindsay, McNair, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Modocai Oliver, Parker, Preston, Pringle, Ready, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Gerrit Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hestor L. Stevens, Straub, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollieffer—94.

NAYS.—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Boyce, Caskey, Chrisman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, John G. Davis, Eddy, Goode, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hibbard, Hilger, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kittredge, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McQueen, Maurice, Maxwell, Mayall, Morrison, Murray, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Reese, Rowe, Ruffin, Shower, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Stratton, John J. Taylor, Vansant, Walsh, and Daniel B. Wright—58.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. PRESTON. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

Mr. COBB. What becomes of my application for a division?

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman will not lose any of his rights by the motion.

The question was taken, and the motion to reconsider the vote by which the first amendment was adopted was laid upon the table.

Second amendment:

Add to the following paragraph of the bill: "For continuing the improvement of the navigation of Tennessee river, $35,000," the words:

Provided, That such part of said sum may be expended below Kelly's ferry, on said river, as the Secretary of War may direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

Third amendment:

Add to the following paragraph: "For continuing the improvement of the navigation of the Arkansas river, $40,000," the following proviso:

Provided, That the joint resolution, entitled "A resolution explanatory of the act appropriating money for the removal of the raft in Red river," approved January 27th, 1853, be, and he is hereby, repealed, and the Secretary of the Department of War be directed to expend the appropriation in reference to Red river raft in such way, and for such purposes, as he may approve, having in view the improvement of the navigation of Red river in and around the said raft.

The Speaker put the question on the amendment, and decided that it was adopted.

Mr. SAGE. I want a division of the House on that amendment. The gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. Jones], on whose motion it was ingrafted on the bill, I perceive, voted to lay the bill upon the table, and I hope, under the circumstances, the friends of this measure will vote the amendment down.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I appeal to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SAGE] to withdraw his objection to the amendment. Had it not been offered by the gentleman from Louisiana, I myself should have submitted it for the adoption of the House.

Mr. SAGE. The gentleman from Arkansas is a friend of the bill, and on his statement I withdraw my demand for a division.

The SPEAKER. The demand for a division is now too late. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] did demand a division in time, but subsequently withdrew it.

Mr. WHEELER. It was under the impression that the Chair decided the amendment was rejected that I withdrew my demand for a division. So the third amendment was adopted.

Fourth amendment:

Strike the following paragraph from the bill:
For continuing the improvement of the navigation of Cape Fear river, at and below Wilmington, North Carolina, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Fifth amendment:

In section two, strike out the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth lines, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War, before expending any part of the money herein appropriated, shall, in such cases as he may think the public interests require it, cause a reexamination and survey of the public works hereby appropriated for; and he is hereby authorized to modify the present plan, if, in his opinion, the public interests will be materially benefited thereby; and the money appropriated by this act shall be so applied as to complete or make the nearest approximation to completing the work, for which each specific appropriation is made; and it shall be the duty of the said Secretary, at the earliest practicable time, to report to Congress the result of any such survey with the plan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Sixth amendment:

Add following proviso to the end of the bill:
And provided, That all persons intrusted with the disbursement of the funds appropriated for the works named in this bill, shall be required to give bond and ample security for the faithful application of the same.

Mr. MATTESON. On that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. WENTWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and also, that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

The bill being engrossed, was then read a third time.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I now move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put, viz: "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. WALSH. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 96, nays 76; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Ball, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Churchill, Clark, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cumming, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dick, Disney, Dumbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, English, Ewing, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Green, Greenwood, Harrison, Haven, Henn, Hiestler, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Johnson, Kerr, Knox, Latham, Lindley, Lindsey, Macdonald, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Preston, Pringle, Ready, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shower, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, Solters, Frederick P. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollieffer—96.

NAYS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bocoek, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Caskie, Chrisman, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dowdell, Edmundson, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McNair, McQueen, Maurice, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Odis, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Packer, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Reese, Rowe, Ruffin, Shaw, Skelton, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, Straub, John J. Taylor, Vail, Walsh, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—76.

So the bill was passed.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. FRANKLIN. I was not in the Hall when my name was called; but I would like to be permitted to vote in the affirmative.

Objected to.

Mr. BANKS. I was not in the Hall when my name was called; but I desire, if the privilege be allowed me, to vote in favor of the passage of the bill.

Objected to.

Mr. BLISS. I desire the privilege of the House to vote on the question. By an accident of an extraordinary character I was delayed in getting here in time to record my vote when my name was called. I now ask the privilege of doing so.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to any member voting, unless he votes regularly under the rule.

Mr. BLISS. I must say that I would not take any advantage of a gentleman in such a case.

Mr. CLINGMAN. During my time in this body I have never known an instance where such a privilege has been allowed.

Mr. BLISS. Then I want to say that, had I been present, I would have recorded my vote in the affirmative.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. And if I had been in the Hall when my name was called, I would have recorded my vote in the negative.

Mr. WENTWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also, that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The question being on the latter motion,

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative, yeas 101, nays 71; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Ball, Banks, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bliss, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Churchill, Clark, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cumming, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dick, Disney, Dumbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, English, Ewing, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Giddings, Green, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Henn, Hiestler, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Johnson, Kerr, Knox, Latham, Lindley, Lindsey, Macdonald, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peckham, Pennington, Preston, Pringle, Ready, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shower, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, Solters, Frederick P. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walley, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollieffer—101.

NAYS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bocoek, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Caskie, Chrisman, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dowdell, Edmundson, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McNair, McQueen, Maurice, Maxwell, Mayall, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Odis, Orr, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Reese, Rowe, Ruffin, Shaw, Skelton, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, Straub, John J. Taylor, Vail, Walsh, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—71.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

THOMAS CROWN.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before that question is put, I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the House to have Senate bill No. 326 withdrawn from the table, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and was so referred:

An act for the relief of Thomas Crown.

COINAGE.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the bill relating to the coinage be taken up, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. It is a bill authorizing the coinage of $150 gold pieces.

Mr. ORR. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am anxious to go into committee, in order, if possible, to get through the Army bill to-day, so as not to interfere with private bills to-morrow.

SYLVANUS CULVER.

Mr. HILLYER. I ask the consent of the House that the Senate bill, for the relief of Sylvanus Culver, reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to lie on the table, may be recommitted to the committee as important information has been communicated to me in relation to the claim, which may alter the judgment of the committee.

No objection being made, the bill was accordingly recommitted to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The question was then taken upon Mr. Houston's motion; and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania, in the chair.)

ARMY BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The first bill in order upon the Calendar, is House bill (No. 95) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the bill I desire to have considered first.

Mr. BOCOCK. I ask my friend from Alabama, if there is not some other appropriation bill, which can be taken up and disposed of to-day, instead of the Army bill? My colleague, [Mr. FAULKNER,] the acting chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, was and is desirous of being here when this appropriation bill shall be taken up. He was under the impression that the consideration of the river and harbor bill would consume much longer time than it has. Hence he is not here to-day, but will be back very soon. If the post office bill or the Indian appropriation bill can be taken up to-day, I hope it will be done.

Mr. HOUSTON. The post office bill would not consume ten minutes. And as to the Indian bill, I am not prepared to take that up now. There is no other bill except this which I can take up this morning, and I told the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] that at the first moment I could do so I should insist on taking up this bill.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. The gentleman alluded to by my friend [Mr. Bocoek] is Mr. FAULKNER, who has charge of the matters which relate to the Army, and I received a letter from him last night, stating that it was impossible for him to get here to-day, and that he could not be here for a day or two. As there is other business which can be taken up, I hope the House will gratify the gentleman so far as to take up some other bill, and postpone the consideration of this one. I move that the bill be laid aside for the present.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, so that it may immediately receive its second reading, and be open to amendment.

The motion was not agreed to; and the bill was accordingly read the first time in extenso.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I offer the following amendment:

In line twenty-three strike out "$555,727 70," and insert in lieu thereof, "$480,359 38," so as to make the clause read:

For clothing for the Army, camp and garrison equipage, and horse equipments, $480,359 38.

The amendment was agreed to.

When the following clause was read:

"For the various expenditures required for the first and second regiments of dragoons, the companies of light artillery, the regiment of mounted riflemen, and such companies of infantry as may be mounted, viz: the purchase of traveling forges, blacksmiths' and shoeing tools, horse and mule shoes, iron and steel for shoeing, hire of veterinary surgeons, purchase of medicines for horses and mules, shoeing horses of mounted corps, and repairing dragoon and rifle equipments, $300,000,"

Mr. HOUSTON moved to amend the same, by inserting after the word "viz" the words "horse equipments;" and also, by striking out the words "thousand dollars," and inserting in lieu thereof, "$75,368 32."

The amendment was agreed to.

When the following clause was read:

"For the purchase of horses required for the first and second regiments of dragoons, the companies of light artillery, and the regiment of mounted riflemen, $150,000,"

Mr. McMULLIN said: I desire to know of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, JULY 14, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 108.

Means if it is contemplated by the bill to create a new regiment or regiments?

Mr. HOUSTON. No, sir. It only provides for the supply of those regiments now in existence. The item just read is intended to keep up the supply of horses necessary in the place of those giving out every year.

When the following clause was read,

"For the manufacture of arms at the national armories, $350,000."

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, said: I am directed by the majority of the select committee appointed to examine into the affairs of the national armories, to report the following amendment, to come in at the end of the clause just read:

Provided, That so much of the laws heretofore passed which authorized the appointment of military officers to superintend the operations at the national armories be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and from and after the passage of this act it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, by and with the advice of the Senate, to appoint a competent and well qualified civilian, as superintendant at each of said armories.

Mr. S. then addressed the committee for an hour in support of his amendment, and upon the subject generally of the military superintendence of armories. His remarks, withheld for revision, will be published in the Appendix.

Mr. DICKINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will yield me the floor, I will make a motion that the committee rise, for the purpose of going back into the House and passing a resolution to close the debate upon this bill.

Mr. KEITT. I trust not.

Mr. LETCHER. I hope the proposition will not be assented to. Do I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts as yielding the floor for this purpose?

Mr. DICKINSON. I do not yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. LETCHER. I hope this debate will not be closed until my colleague [Mr. FAULKNER] from the Harper's Ferry district, a member of this committee, and who, as well as his constituents, is deeply interested in this matter, shall have an opportunity of being heard.

Mr. HOUSTON. If it is the determination of the committee to keep open this debate until the gentleman from the Harper's Ferry district returns, it will be a great deal better to put the bill aside, and take up some other bill.

Mr. KEITT. I desire to make this simple statement, that this House appointed a committee to examine this subject. We were engaged in the examination for four months, and submitted a volume of testimony, of nearly three hundred pages, and two reports, not one of which, I suppose, has been read by any member of this House. Now, if the subject was of sufficient importance to warrant the appointment of that select committee, will this House turn the thing into a farce by taking action without reading a word of the reports of that committee?

Mr. STANTON. They have had two months to read them.

Mr. DICKINSON then resumed the floor, and replied to some portions of Mr. STANTON's speech. His remarks are withheld for revision, and will be found in the Appendix.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to ask the indulgence of the committee to make a motion which requires unanimous consent. I am compelled to leave the city this evening. I have been detained for the last three or four days to wait for the disposition of the river and harbor bill. I feel a good deal of interest in the amendment I propose to offer, and I hope the committee will give me their consent to offer it, although it is out of order.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the military storekeeper at Rome arsenal, New York, be allowed from the first day of October, 1842, the same compensation as is authorized by the act of the 23d of August, 1842, to be paid to the storekeepers at the Washington, Pittsburg, and Watervliet arsenals, and that there be paid to military storekeeper James S. Abeel, twenty dollars per month, for and during the time he has performed the duties of commissary, and assistant commissary of subsistence and quartermaster.

The CHAIRMAN. To what clause in the bill does the gentleman propose to offer it?

Mr. HOWE. As an independent section.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order.

Mr. HOWE. I am aware that it is not, but I suppose it may be offered by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. It may, if there be no objection.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. HOWE. Well, sir, I ask the leave of the committee to make a statement.

There was no objection, and Mr. H. proceeded:

The facts of the case are simply these: Captain James S. Abeel has been a military storekeeper at Rome arsenal, New York, since the 23d of January, 1838, at which time the compensation attached to his office was $1,250 per annum. By the act of 1842, the number of military storekeepers was limited to fifteen, and they were divided into two classes. Five of those, who were also to discharge the duties of paymaster, were to constitute the first class, and their compensation was fixed at $1,250 per annum. The remaining ten were to constitute the second class, and to receive a compensation of $800 per annum. Captain Abeel was placed in the second class, and his salary reduced from $1,250 to $800 per annum. Since the passage of the act, two of the storekeepers placed in the second class have had their compensation increased to that of first class storekeepers viz: F. A. Webber, of Watertown arsenal, under the act of March 3, 1849, and David Butler, of the Little Rock arsenal, Arkansas, by the act of September 28, 1850. The pay of the second class, on duty in New Mexico, California, and Oregon, has also been increased to the pay of the first class.

Now, sir, the office of military storekeeper is one of considerable responsibility. He is responsible for the stores placed in his charge; and to give some idea of the value of those placed in his charge, I will state that there were, under the charge of Captain Abeel in 1847, $286,922 29. In 1853 there were $123,803. I will also state that he is required to give bond and security to the amount of $15,000.

These are the circumstances under which I have asked leave to offer this amendment increasing the compensation of Captain Abeel from $800 to $1,250 per annum. Now, sir, in reference to the personal history of this gentleman, I will say that it shows that his life has been one of no ordinary gallantry in the service of his country. When only seventeen years of age, he fought most gallantly at the battle of Lundy's Lane, carrying the flag of his country in the thickest of the fight; and when it was riddled with balls he still held the shattered staff in his hands. He suffered great exposure during the war. He continued in the service during the entire war, as I am informed, suffering such exposure as entirely to deprive him of his voice. Since then he has been unable to articulate a loud word. He is utterly disqualified for any other pursuit, and has a family of eight children depending on him for support. Now, I put the question to the committee, whether this man, under these circumstances, is to have his compensation cut down from $1,250 to $800 by a general, not a special act? I ask whether such a man, disabled in his country's service, has not the right to come here and appeal to justice and patriotism to see that his children do not lack bread. I have nothing further to say, and leave the subject with the committee.

Mr. KEITT. The chairman of the select committee is absent just now; and as it seemed to be the general understanding that this bill was to be passed over, I will make that motion.

Mr. McMULLIN. I would suggest that we should go into the House, and take up some other business.

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee may lay this bill aside, and take up some other which may be passed this evening. The Post Office appropriation bill may be taken up.

Mr. KEITT. My colleague [Mr. AIKEN] desires to have taken up and considered a bill which was reported from his committee; and I therefore hope my motion will be agreed to.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

So the Army appropriation bill was laid aside.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move that House bill No. 336—the Post Office appropriation bill—be taken up for consideration.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAVEN. I move that the first reading of the bill, which is for information, be dispensed with, and that the bill be read by sections for amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk then read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE BILL.

Mr. AIKEN. I move to take up House bill No. 351, making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. AIKEN, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendments.

When the following clause was read:

"Maine.—For rebuilding light-house and keeper's dwelling on Petit Menan Island, $35,000."

Mr. McMULLIN said: I desire to know if this is the light-house in the State of Maine that was built some years ago by a compromise? I should like the gentleman representing that district to give me some information in regard to this matter. This is a proposition from the reading of which I gather that it is for the rebuilding of a light-house in the State of Maine. Has the old light-house at that point been burned down? has it rotted away? has it been washed away? or what has been done with it? I should like to be informed in this matter. Here is an appropriation of $25,000 asked for, and we are not distinctly put in possession of the facts. I received information, not long since, to this effect: a controversy arose in the State of Maine as to the situation of a light-house between two points, the people on one side of the island or river desiring it to be built on their side, and the people on the other desiring to have it on theirs; and, by way of compromise, they agreed to build it between the two points, and an appropriation was asked for to make a mode of conveyance, by which to reach the light-house.

Now, I do not know whether this is the light-house that is provided for by the appropriation just read, but I desire to be informed whether it is or not. Let the committee be informed of all the facts. If they propose to rebuild a light-house there, what has become of the old one? I confess that, without such information, it would be, to my mind, going it rather blind to make this appropriation. If it be the pleasure of the committee, however, to make this appropriation without such information, of course they may do so. But for the purpose of procuring for this committee, and for myself, some light—as I desire to vote understandingly—I move to strike out that provision of the bill.

Mr. AIKEN. I have only a word to say in reference to this matter. There are only three items for the building of light-houses in Maine. They are all in a dilapidated condition. Their rebuilding has been petitioned for, and they have been examined by the Light-House Board, and recommended by them.

In regard to the compromise which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. McMULLIN] alludes to, I have to say that I know nothing about it, and I have made no inquiries. I believe these items are all correct, so far as I know and understand them.

Mr. McMULLIN. I assure the worthy gentleman from South Carolina, that I have as much confidence in the correctness of his judgment as in that of any gentleman upon this floor, when he has examined a question which he brings to the notice of this House. But in this case, as in many other cases upon which this House is called to act, I cannot consent to sit here and register my vote upon the recommendation, or upon the estimates of your commissioners and your Secretaries, or heads of Departments, unless I can see ground to believe that the thing is right by itself. I repeat, this matter may be right in itself; but it does seem to me, that, from the showing of the gentleman from South Carolina, this committee ought to have something more before them, before they pass this bill with estimate in it.

Mr. FARLEY, (interrupting.) If the gentleman will allow me to make a suggestion, I will say, that the item in question has reference to a light-house situated in the district represented by my colleague, [Mr. FULLER,] who is now absent from the House. I have sent for documents of the Light-House Board, which throw light upon the subject; and if the gentleman from Virginia will allow this matter to be passed over for the present, it can be taken up by-and-by, when the document will be here.

Mr. McMULLIN. I am perfectly willing, if it meets the views of the committee, to pass by this item informally, and take up the next one, in order to afford time to its friends to get the information I desire. And, certainly, in the absence of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FULLER,] who represents the district in which this light-house is situated, I would not insist upon a vote, if the committee is willing to pass it by informally. I do not desire to withdraw the amendment, but to let it stand and be considered hereafter.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. If it be the pleasure of the committee to pass this item by informally, I am sure I shall not object to it; but I declare that I do not at all see the necessity of doing so. I do not at all feel the force of the remarks of my colleague. He speaks of a compromise having been made in respect to this light-house. It is not a matter about which a compromise can be made by anybody. It is not a boon granted to any individual. It is not a boon granted to any neighborhood. It is a public work, for the benefit of the navigating interest of the whole country. It is a public matter about which no compromise could have been entertained or made. The necessity for this appropriation is verified to us by the report of the Light-House Board.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts. I will read what the Light House Board says about it, if the gentleman from Virginia will yield to me.

Mr. BAYLY. Certainly.

Mr. WENTWORTH. The information which has been sent to the Committee on Commerce is ample. I will read a condensed paragraph from the report of the Light-House Board. It is this:

"Numbers three, four, and six are for rebuilding Petit Menan, Baker's Island, and Franklin Island light houses, recommended by the Light-House Board, upon the report of the district inspector, in consequence of its being impossible, from the dilapidated condition of the towers and buildings, to repair them."

Mr. BAYLY. I declare I think that is enough about that item. These light-houses are not matters in which there is any particular local interest.

Mr. MACDONALD. I would say to the gentleman that, by a recurrence to the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, you will find there a communication from the chairman of the Light-House Board.

You will find in the supplemental report the following estimates:

For rebuilding light-house and keeper's dwelling on Petit Menan Island, $35,000;
For rebuilding light house on Baker's Island, $5,000;
For rebuilding light-house on Franklin Island, 5,000;
For procuring illuminating apparatus, and completing light-house tower and buildings authorized to be built on Boon Island, $14,973.

In Senate Executive Document No. 2 I find the following explanation:

"List B., hereto appended, exhibits some of the proposed improvements and increase of aids to navigation recommended in the general programme of the temporary Light House Board in its report submitted in 1852, and renewed in the annual report from this office, laid before Congress at its last session.

"Recurring to the two previous reports above referred to, in which it is recommended that though no effort should be spared to render all the lights and other aids to navigation authorized by Congress efficient, as rapidly as the means provided will permit, yet the improvement of sea-coast lights and exterior aids to navigation is of paramount importance. The board takes this occasion respectfully to renew this recommendation, and ask its favorable consideration by the Department and by Congress."

I will only add, that this appropriation is predicated upon a report made to Congress in 1852.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to know of the gentleman from Maine if this is the light-house that was built between two points where there was a controversy as to which should have it? One party contended that it should be one side of the river, and the other party that it should be on the other side. By way of a compromise, it was decided that it should be built at a point that would accommodate both. It was built there, and was afterwards ascertained that $20,000 or $30,000 must be expended to furnish the means of getting at it.

Mr. MACDONALD. In reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia, I will say that I have no knowledge of any such case as the gentleman from Virginia alludes to. The only knowledge I have in reference to it, is derived from the document from which I have read. I have heard of no such facts, and know of none.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I think I can answer the inquiry of my colleague.

Mr. McMULLIN. I am not disposed to embarrass the committee, and I will therefore withdraw my proposition, and allow the reading of the bill to proceed.

Mr. HAVEN. If the gentleman withdraws his objection, there is no need of any further explanation; but if any were necessary, I think it would be very easy to furnish it. I will state that this appropriation is $10,000 less than was asked for. In the appendix to the report of the Light-House Board I find the following:

"1. Petit Menan light house.—This is the most eastern first-class light on the coast of the United States. It is at present one of the worst of all the lights, and the tower is so badly built, and so old, and the lantern so small, that little can be done to improve it; and all that could be done will not make it a light good enough for the important position of a first-class sea-coast light.

"I therefore recommend that the tower and keeper's dwelling be rebuilt, and that there be a second order Fresnel lens apparatus placed in the new light house. For this purpose an appropriation of $45,000 will be necessary."

This is all I have to say.

Mr. SKELTON. I offer the following amendment:

For a continuation of the system of protecting human life from shipwreck, as heretofore established, by life-boats on the New Jersey coast, $25,000.

The appropriation which I now propose, is in continuation of the system of appropriations heretofore made, and has been recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury since the recent disaster to the ship Powhatan. It will be borne in mind that some two months ago there were some three hundred and forty lives lost on that coast, in consequence of having no life-boats to protect the passengers on board of that ship. The wreck-masters upon our coast talked with the captain of the Powhatan, within speaking distance, but their boat was lying stranded on the beach. Every passenger on board the ship, if a life-boat had been located at that point, might have been rescued. Disasters like this do not occur occasionally, but they occur every year.

It will be borne in mind that the coast of New Jersey lies southeast of the harbor of New York, and every ship sailing into the harbor of New York, whether an emigrant ship or a steamer, is liable to be driven upon that barren, sandy coast. Twenty thousand dollars have been heretofore appropriated for the protection of vessels upon that coast; and thousands of lives have been saved within a few years by the location of life-boats there. And the addition now asked is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. The doubling of life-boats on this coast is an object recommended and desired. I will, therefore, not make a speech on the subject. Every member of the committee must be satisfied of the necessity and the vast importance of protecting life on a coast where so many passengers are daily and hourly exposed to the peril of certain destruction. I will likewise say that this expenditure will be annually more than reimbursed to the United States Government on the customs which it will receive from goods which, without it, would be lost on the coast. The duties that will be saved to the Government will be more than the annual expenditure. But an annual expenditure is not asked for. The Government is merely required to send the additional number of life-boats recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury; and once they have been placed there, they will be permanent fixtures for years to come. Thousands of human lives will evidently be saved by this expenditure of $20,000. I will trouble the committee no further in the matter, believing that every member of the committee will agree to the amendment.

The question was put; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I offer the following amendment:

After line two hundred and ninety-six, insert the following:

For buoys to be placed in suitable places in Matchepungo bay, and its tributaries, $1,000.

In respect to that amendment, I have only to say, that the petition which was sent to me in respect to this matter, made out the necessity of these buoys very clearly. But it was received so late that the Committee on Commerce had no opportunity to act upon it, but I am quite sure it will meet with their approbation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NOBLE. I move to amend the four hundred and ninety-first and four hundred and ninety-second lines, so that they will read, as follows:

For repair of the light house, foundations, and pier connected therewith, near Monroe, $7,300.

Mr. Chairman, an appropriation similar to the one in the bill, passed at the last Congress, but was lost by the neglect of the engrossing clerk. The appropriation was made necessary in consequence of the foundation of the light-house being partially washed away, and the pier connected with the main work being somewhat damaged. The damage was still further increased last March by a violent storm. My amendment only increases the appropriation to what it has been estimated the work would cost by the local superintendent. I trust the amendment may be adopted.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. STEVENS, of Michigan. I move to amend the bill by inserting the following:

For a light-house at or near old Fort Mackinaw, Michigan, $6,000.

Mr. Chairman, the point for which I ask this appropriation is at the narrowest part of the straits of Mackinaw. The navigation is narrowed there, somewhat crooked, and very difficult. Vessels in the night, going by the compass, will run ashore on one of the small islands there. This light house will enable them to navigate at night as well as they can in day time. I am informed by a great many masters of boats that, on reaching this point, they are compelled to lay to until the morning, so that they may pass it with safety. This light-house erected, and the navigation will be safe at all times. I ask that it may be granted.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. Who estimated $6,000? I think the gentleman had better only ask for $5,000.

Mr. STEVENS. The estimate was made by the Light-House Board.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would inquire of the gentleman from Michigan, whether or not there was any evidence before the committee of the necessity for this appropriation?

Mr. STEVENS. There was not.

Mr. SMITH. Why was not the estimate sent to the committee?

Mr. STEVENS. Because it was not received in time.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I understand that the gentleman from Michigan got this estimate from the Light-House Board, after the bill had been reported. If that board estimate $6,000 then the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. SMITH. The Light-House Board may have made an estimate, being called on to do so, but is there any evidence that that board deem the appropriation a wise one? We know that light-houses frequently interfere with one another.

The question was taken upon Mr. STEVENS's amendment; and it was agreed to.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I move to strike out the following clause:

Illinois.—For a beacon-light on the breakwater at Waukegan, (Little Fort,) in place of the present light-house, $1,000.

For buoys to mark the bar and harbor at Chicago, $300.

For a light at Port Clinton, $3,000.

For a light on the breakwater now in course of construction at the harbor of Waukegan, when the breakwater shall be in a suitable condition for erecting the structure, in place of the present light at Little Fort, $6,000.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

Illinois.—For a temporary beacon light at or near the breakwater now being constructed at Waukegan, (Little Fort,) $1,000.

For buoys to mark the bar and harbor at Chicago, $300.

For a light at Port Clinton, $3,000.

For the foundation of the light house on the breakwater now in course of construction at the harbor of Waukegan, for a light when the foundation shall be in a suitable condition for erecting the structure in the place of the present light at Little Fort, $10,500, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would be glad to know if these appropriations are in accordance with the estimates made by the officers having charge of these works?

Mr. WENTWORTH. They are in accordance with estimates made by the proper officers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDUGALL. I offer the following amendment:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to settle with and pay the contractors for building light houses on the coast of California and Oregon, the sum of $59,434: Provided, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the said contractors for building the light-house at Point Loma, near San Diego, what the same is reasonably worth.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts. I make a point of order on that amendment. It is a private claim, and not germane to the bill under consideration.

Mr. McDUGALL. I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury be read.

The letter was read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 26, 1854.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of a letter addressed to this Department by Gibbons & Kelly, contractors for building certain light-houses on the Pacific coast, and of a report made to, and resolution adopted by, the Senate, upon the subject of their claim for extra work done, expenses incurred, and losses sustained, for which, as they allege, they are entitled to compensation over and above the amount stipulated to be paid by contract, according to a proper construction thereof. These claims are not verified and passed upon. The work will not be finished, nor the amount of such claims capable of being liquidated before August next. They amount to $59,434, and the contractors express the wish, and such seems to be the view of the Senate, that the amount should, before the adjournment of Congress, be placed at the disposal of the Department to meet these demands, or so much thereof as they may thereafter be able to establish. Under these circumstances, and without committing the Department to the construction contended for, or to any of the allowances claimed, I respectfully submit the expediency of making the appropriation required.

I am, very respectfully,

JAMES GUTHRIE,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER, Chairman Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I beg leave to offer the following amendment, which was omitted to be offered at the proper time. It has been approved by the Committee on Commerce:

At the end of the one hundred and forty-eighth line add the following:

For a fog-bell at Saybrook light-house, Connecticut, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANCASTER. I offer the following amendment:

After the word "dollars" in the five hundred and forty-seventh line, insert the following:

For buoys for the harbor and entrance to Shoal Water bay, $3,000.

I would state for the information of the committee that I have not been instructed to offer this amendment. In a communication from the secretary of the Light-House Board, he states that on the passage of this bill he intends to place buoys at the entrance to Shoal Water bay, and to mark its anchorage in the bay. On looking at the bill, I do not see any provision in it to authorize the establishment of buoys, the necessity of which is apparent. Shoal Water bay is the only harbor from the mouth of the Columbia river to the straits of De Fuca. Vessels cannot sometimes get in, and have to stand off and on for perhaps twenty days, and then have to square away for San Francisco.

This harbor can be entered at all times, provided the channel be marked by buoys; and I offer this amendment in order to secure that object. When ships have once entered the harbor, there is a communication across to Oregon, from Shoal Water bay to Baker's bay. There the ships may obtain supplies. Often vessels stand off and on at the mouth of the Columbia river, without being able to enter until they have exhausted their supplies, and, in attempting to send boats to the shore for supplies, they have frequently been lost. The appropriation is only $3,000, and I hope the committee will allow it.

Mr. LETCHER. I would ask the gentleman from Washington Territory, by whom is the appropriation recommended?

Mr. LANCASTER. I stated to the committee that I have not received any estimates, nor has any recommendation been made. The only thing I have to say is, that in a communication from the secretary of the Light-House Board, upon this subject, he stated that in this bill there would be items for buoys, to be placed at the head of the entrance, and at the anchorage of that bay. But no such items appear in the bill, and the great necessity of the establishment of buoys there is the reason why I have offered the amendment. I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. AIKEN. I have only to say in reference to this matter, that Washington has been pretty well provided for in this bill.

Mr. BAYLY. I beg leave to say, in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Washington, that not long since we lost a national vessel at this very point, on account of the difficulty of getting into the harbor. The value of that vessel would pay for ten thousand buoys.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AIKEN. I move that the committee now rise, and report the bill to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HOUSTON. Before that question is put, I would call the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina to the fact, that in each of the fourth, fifth, and sixth sections of this bill, the Secretary of the Treasury is both "authorized and required" to sell certain sites of light-houses, &c. I would ask the gentleman whether it would not be better to amend these sections by striking out the words "and required," so as to give him authority to do so, and leave the matter to his discretion.

Mr. AIKEN. I have no objection to that.

There being no objection, the amendments were accordingly made as suggested.

The question was then put upon Mr. AIKEN's motion; and it was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. Wright, of Pennsylvania,) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill (No. 95) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1855, and House bill (No. 351) making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes, which they had instructed him to report to the House, the former without amendment, and the latter with sundry amendments. Also, that they had under consideration the bill of the House (No. 95) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed the bill of the House (No. 463) to change the name of the American-built brig Hallowell to that of James Rose, and to grant her a new register.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled bills of the following titles; which received the signature of the Speaker:

H. R. No. 463. An act to change the name of the American-built brig Hallowell to that of James Rose, and to grant her a new register;

H. R. No. 164. An act making further appropriations for continuing the construction of roads in the Territory of Minnesota, in accordance with the estimates made by the War Department;

H. R. No. 338. An act to authorize the President of the United States to cause to be surveyed the tract of land in the Territory of Minnesota belonging to the half-breeds, or mixed bloods of the Dakota or Sioux nation of Indians, and for other purposes; and

H. R. No. 316. An act to amend the act approved September 27, 1850, to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands in Oregon, &c.; and also the act amendatory thereof, approved February 19, 1853.

POST OFFICE BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move the previous question upon the engrossment of the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. ROWE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the House refused to adjourn.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read a third time, and passed.

ASTRONOMICAL EXPEDITION TO CHILI.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed and bound ten thousand copies of the report and five thousand copies of the observations of the United States Astronomical Expedition to Chili, five hundred copies of the report and observations for the use of the Navy Department, and two hundred and fifty copies for the superintendent, and the remainder for the use of the members of the House, the said work to be printed and bound by the public printer and binder, in quarto form, under the direction of the Superintendent of Public Printing and the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object.

LIGHT-HOUSE BILL.

Mr. AIKEN. I call for the previous question on the light-house appropriation bill.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union were severally read and concurred in.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. AIKEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House thereupon (at five minutes to four o'clock) adjourned till to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 13, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President, I notice in the New York Herald, of yesterday, a statement which requires of me that I should make a correction or explanation. It is there stated that:

"Upon the test vote of a postponement, yesterday, of the homestead bill, in the Senate, it was remarked that just before the roll was called, Mr. SEWARD picked up his hat and disappeared. It is said here that the Know Nothing organization in New York is sorely trying to Mr. SEWARD, and that, therefore, he dodges the homestead bill till he can make up his mind which to lose—the Know Nothing or the foreign vote."

I ought to have explained before—I do it now because I notice this article in the Herald—that the Senator from New York [Mr. SEWARD] and the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] on that day, both having occasion to be absent, requested me to announce that they had paired off on that vote. Thinking very little of it, however, I suffered the occasion to pass over without mentioning that fact, and it has given occasion to this notice in the paper, which I ought to correct by saying that it is my own fault that the announcement was not made. I ought to have announced at the time that those gentlemen had paired off on that vote.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, I present the petition of General John A. Sutter, of California, praying the confirmation of his title to certain lands held under Mexican grants; and indemnity for losses sustained by him in consequence of the forcible occupation of his land and seizure of his property by emigrants and settlers, under the plea that it was public land of the United States, and subject to the right of preemption. As this memorial contains a great deal of valuable information connected with the early settlement of the State of California, I ask that the Senate will be good enough to order it to be printed. I do not know any gentleman of that State, or any where else, who is more entitled to the generosity of this Government, than the petitioner, and no one who has made greater sacrifices for the comfort of the people, and who is more familiar with the early history of that State. I ask that the memorial be printed, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The petition was so referred, and the motion to print went to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SUMNER. I present a petition of citizens of Ludlow, Vermont, praying the prohibition of slavery and the slave trade in the Territories of the United States. As the Senator from Ohio [Mr. CHASE] has already given notice to ask leave to introduce a bill to effect those objects, I ask that it may lie on the table.

It was so ordered.

Mr. SHIELDS presented a document in support of the claim of Hiram Seat, for a pension for services as a teamster in the war with Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MASON presented the memorial of Francis Daines, praying compensation for services as acting consul at Constantinople; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ROCKWELL presented the petition of John Henshaw and others, merchants in the cities of Boston and New York, praying that the salary of William Winthrop, consul at the island of Malta, may be established upon a reasonable basis; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SEWARD presented the memorial of John Ackerman, of Brownsville, New York, praying compensation for stone furnished in the construction of the hospital at Madison Barracks, Sackett's harbor, in 1840; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FOOT presented the petition of Mary Felch, widow of Rev. Cheever Felch, D. D., chaplain in the United States Navy, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TOUCEY presented a petition of importers, merchants, and citizens of New Haven, Connecticut, asking for an appropriation for a new custom-house at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MASON presented the memorial of Charles D. Arfwedson, praying compensation for services as chargé d'affaires ad interim at the Court of Stockholm; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, documents relating to the claim of John D. Diomitar, late United States consul at Athens, Greece, for compensation for diplomatic services; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, the petition of Joseph Graham, United States consul at Buenos Ayres, praying compensation for services as chargé d'affaires, ad interim, at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, the petition of J. B. Holman, praying extra compensation as secretary of the legation of the United States at Chili; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, the memorial of Ferdinand Cox, late secretary of legation of the United States at Brazil, praying compensation for services as chargé d'affaires; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, a memorial of Henry Savage, praying compensation for diplomatic services rendered the United States in Central America; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CASS presented the petition of John Thompson, praying compensation for his services as a seaman in the late war with Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

UNITED STATES STATUTES.

Mr. CHASE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire into the expediency of contracting with Eli T. Tappan for the purchase of — copies of his edition of the statutes of the United States.

Mr. CHASE also presented a document in relation to the subject; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills:

An act to confirm the claim of William H. Henderson and Robert Henderson to five hundred acres of land in the Bastrop grant;

An act making further appropriation for the improvement of the Cape Fear river, North Carolina;

An act to authorize the issue of a register to the brig Amelia by the name of Abby Frances; and

An act for the relief of Juan M. and José L. Lugo.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore severally signed the above-named bills.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was recommitted the petition of P. C. Miles, praying to be allowed an increase of pension, together with the adverse report of the above committee thereon, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of Samuel McKnight, of the State of Kentucky, reported it back without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of William Wallace, of Illinois, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. DAWSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of Brigadier General John B. Walbach, of the United States Army, praying compensation for extra services rendered in 1801, and for expenses and losses incident to said services, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the petition of William Rich, late secretary of legation at Mexico, praying compensation for acting as chargé d'affaires, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the memorials of the Hon. Robert C. Schenck, late United States Minister Plenipotentiary to the Court of Brazil, and of the Hon. John S. Pendleton, late United States Chargé d'affaires to the Argentine Confederation, praying compensation for services rendered, and expenses incurred by them on special missions to other Governments than those to which they had been originally accredited, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill to incorporate the Mutual Insurance Company of Washington, reported it back without amendment.

Mr. BRIGHT, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, to whom was referred a bill from the House of Representatives, to provide for taking charge of the Louisville and Portland canal, and to prevent the same from falling into bad repair, reported it back with an amendment; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred a bill from the House of Representatives, making provision for the postal service in the State of California, and in the Territories of Oregon and Washington, reported it back with amendments; which were ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, leave was granted to withdraw from the files the petition and papers of Messrs. Puig, Mir & Co., of New Orleans, asking the remission of duties exacted on certain coffee imported into that port in the Spanish brig Pepito and Atalayador.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BRIGHT, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill donating a portion of the public lands, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point on the Ohio and Mississippi railroad, in the State of Indiana, by the way of the falls of the Ohio and Evansville, to the Mississippi river, at or near Cairo; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BADGER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill for the relief of Thomas K. Glenn.

Unanimous consent having been obtained, the bill was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. BADGER. I ask that the bill, together with a statement of the Postmaster General on the subject, which I send to the Chair, may be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

It was so ordered.

DAILY HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. RUSK submitted the following for consideration; which lies over one day under the rule, it being objected to:

Ordered, That on and after Monday next the daily hour of meeting of the Senate shall be eleven o'clock, a. m., until otherwise ordered.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that the House had passed a bill, making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law.

The bill was read twice by its title; and, on motion by Mr. STUART, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CAIRO, ILLINOIS.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the Senate bill to constitute Cairo, in the State of Illinois, a port of delivery, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage. As there is now railroad iron ready to be delivered, as I understand, it is very desirable that the bill should pass. I hope, therefore, the Senate will consider it now. The Senator from Illinois is very desirous to have it acted upon.

Objection was made to considering the bill until the other morning business was gone through with.

JAMES C. BATCHELDER.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a resolution inquiring into the expediency of providing a pension for the widow of James C. Batchelder, to report a bill for the relief of the widow of James C. Batchelder, who was killed while assisting the United States marshal for the district of Massachusetts in executing a law of Congress.

The bill was read a first time.

The PRESIDENT. The bill will be ordered to a second reading, if there be no objection.

Mr. SUMNER. I object to the second reading.

The PRESIDENT. The question is then on ordering the bill to a second reading.

It was so ordered.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask that it may be made the special order for to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no; it will interfere with the homestead bill.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator make the motion?

Mr. ADAMS. I will not.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. The committee were equally divided as to the form of the report which they should make. Three members of the committee—the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. CLAY,] the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] and myself, have instructed me to make the report which I hold in my hand, and which I ask leave to have printed for the information of the Senate.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SUMNER. On behalf of the minority of the committee, I also beg leave to offer a report signed by the Senator from New York [Mr. SEWARD] and myself, which I ask to have printed.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection it will be ordered to be printed.

Mr. BADGER. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts, that he had better alter the title of his paper. It is not the custom of the Senate to receive minority reports. He had better, therefore, entitle it "the views of the minority."

Mr. SUMNER. I have given no title to it whatever. I will remark, Mr. President, that the paper offered by the chairman of the committee has not the sanction of a majority. It is only signed by three of the members.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. The chairman distinctly stated that.

The PRESIDENT. The question has been decided. Both reports are ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. The chairman distinctly stated that it was signed by only three members. He did not say a majority.

Mr. SUMNER. I understood the chairman.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

On motion by Mr. STUART, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill "to grant a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of the public lands to actual settlers."

Mr. CLAYTON had moved to amend by striking out the sixth section, which is in the following words:

"Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That if any individual now a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and not a citizen of the United States, but at the time of making such acquisition for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent, as made and provided for in this act, shall be placed upon an equal footing with the native-born citizen of the United States."

Pending this motion, Mr. CHASE moved to amend the section by striking out the words "now a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and," and inserting the word "who" between the words "but" and "at;" and this is the pending question.

Mr. CHASE. I desire to recall the attention of the Senate to the precise point upon which they are about to vote. The bill, as it stands, allows immigrants, who arrive before the passage of the act, to participate in its benefits. It excludes those who arrive after the passage of the act. The object of my amendment is simply to do away with that discrimination, which is founded on no principle, and is odious in itself. I shall not detain the Senate by any remarks; I simply ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I am opposed to this bill, and hereafter shall give my reasons for voting against it; but I think this amendment proper in itself. If you are to extend to foreigners at all the right to enter upon your public lands and occupy them while they are foreigners, there is no reason why the privilege should be confined to foreigners now resident in the United States. If the bill remain as it now stands, in this respect, the effect, I fear, will only be to lead to frauds and perjuries, because it will be impossible to tell when a party became a resident. The temptation would be too great not to lead to such a result. I therefore think the amendment proper, though I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] has anticipated me in part in what I intended to say. I shall, for the same reason which he has given, vote for the pending amendment. I will not be accessory, intentionally and deliberately, to any crimes. I will not, by my action, stimulate and foster frauds and perjuries such, as I believe, will be engendered by passing this bill in its present form. But I shall vote for the amendment for an additional reason. If this bill is to pass in its present form, we shall at each successive Congress, and probably at each successive session of Congress, have to reenact the law for the benefit of the influx of immigrants who may then have arrived in this country; and in order to save the public time and further discussion about this matter, it is better to yield at once to them the whole of the public domain.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President, when I proposed the amendment under consideration, its justice and propriety seemed to me so obvious that I did not anticipate any objection to it, and I was greatly surprised at the state of feeling which seems to exist against foreigners in certain quarters. The Senator from Mississippi declares the object of the amendment to be merely to tax the native-born and adopted citizen of this country for the benefit of foreigners, and demands to know what need we have of emigration from other countries, &c.? He also observes that foreigners protested against the Nebraska bill, and also hung an honorable Senator in effigy, &c., and this is briefly the Senator's argument against the amendment.

The Senator from Kentucky objects, first, because no President has ever recommended the measure, and no one has asked for it. That no President has recommended it may be correct. I never look in that direction to learn the will of the people, or as a guide to my action. I have the vanity to believe that I understand quite as well what the people want as a President. But the Senator is greatly mistaken in supposing that the people have not asked for this measure. I doubt not that we have more petitions on this subject, on our table, than on all others together, with the single exception of the Nebraska bill. The Senator also declares that the amendment holds out a provision to the cowards of Europe who have not courage to remain at home in time of war; that it is a premium to paupers, loafers, vagabonds, and fugitives from justice. He declares that the "South do not want foreigners about their plantations, corrupting their people, injuring their children, and excluding them from a fair participation in the benefits of the common territory."

Such, very briefly, are the arguments by which my amendment has been assailed; and now, Mr. President, though I have no particular reason for favoring foreigners over much, being of that stubborn old puritan stock of Massachusetts, who the Senator said, were generally in a state of rebellion against their own Government, while in England, as well as after they reached our shores, and frequently against their own Government since—though, by the way, I believe the Senator from Kentucky will do this rebellious generation the justice to admit that, whenever they fought, wherever they fought, or whoever they fought, their battle has always been a privilege against prerogative, for republicanism against monarchy, for liberty against slavery. Being, I say, purely of this old Yankee stock, whose ancestors came to this country so long ago that the sin of their "immigration," ought, I suppose, on the principle of the honorable Senator, to be outlawed, and ever having belonged to a political party, against which foreigners have always unwisely, I think, acted, I am not likely to be prejudiced in their favor over much.

But who does not know that our country, through every period of her history, has been, and is now, greatly indebted for her unexampled growth, power, and prosperity, to these despised foreigners who are now stigmatized as paupers, loafers, fugitives from justice, and vagabonds. How was it in the struggle of our fathers for independence? Pause for a moment, and think of the noble hearted and self-devoted Montgomery, of the indomitable Steuben, of the chivalrous Pulaski, with hosts of other worthies; and then of the more obscure, but not less meritorious class of foreigners, who, as private soldiers, struggled, fought, and died, side by side with our fathers, to achieve our independence. Think of these things, I say, and then talk, if you can, of loafers, vagabonds, and fugitives from justice; and coming down to our own times, how easy, yea, how pleasant it would be, were it not, perhaps, invidious to speak of some in our very midst of whom we are at a loss which most to admire, their courage and intrepidity in the field, or their wisdom in counsel; but I forbear.

But, says the Senator from Mississippi, what do we want of immigration? I might answer by asking, what do we want of railroads, canals, or other improvements? Why do we want our swamps drained, and our vast wilderness cleared up and inhabited? Yet, without these foreigners, whose presence among us the Senators seem so much to deprecate, what would now have been the condition of our country? Our vast public works, railroads, and canals, would not have been built. Who, as he passes through our country, from one remote point to another, with the speed of the wind, and with all the comforts and conveniences of a parlor, has not observed with what herculean labor the hills have been torn down and the valleys filled up, and the rough ways made smooth, to prepare the way for the locomotive? And who, that has a soul in him, has not reflected on the condition of those poor men, by whose hard and patient, but scantily paid labor, these wonders have been accomplished, without feeling that they deserve well of their adopted country, and without earnestly wishing to aid them to improve their condition? If there be such a man, I envy not his head or his heart.

Mr. President, these poor men do not deserve the harsh epithets which have been indiscriminately applied to foreigners. Amidst the darkness and barbarism of the middle ages, foreigners or strangers were considered as enemies, and were treated accordingly. And in most countries of Europe, at this day, I believe a remnant of this absurd doctrine so far prevails as to prevent an alien from acquiring a permanent title to real estate. But with our glorious Revolution, and with the repeal of the odious alien law, these illiberal and unjust notions, prejudices, and practices passed away, I trust forever. Have our people ever suffered in any way from their liberality in this respect to foreigners? No, sir; far from it. It has enabled us, in less than the common age of man, to advance from infancy and insignificance to one of the most powerful nations on the earth. Why, then, I ask again, should we not encourage immigration? Have not these immigrants proved loyal to our free institutions? Have they ever sought to overthrow our Government? It is not pretended. Of all people on earth, we ought to harbor no prejudices against immigrants. Why, sir, we are all either immigrants ourselves or the descendants of immigrants, and it cannot certainly be of much importance at what particular period the emigration took place? That bad, idle, and vicious persons emigrate, I do not deny, but such cases form a meager exception to the rule; and I object to the great mass of our worthy immigrants being compelled to suffer for the sins of the vicious few.

But enough of this. It will not be denied that the great mass of immigrants who seek a home in this favored land, make moral, industrious, and worthy citizens. Why, then, should we discourage immigration? These immigrants have, within a few years past, no doubt brought more property into the country than you have been able to dig from the mines of California. I have no doubt that we are greatly aided in liquidating the great balance of trade, always against us, by the wealth brought here by these immigrants.

But it is said that this measure is, in effect, to tax our own people for the benefit of foreigners; if such is really the case, it is an unanswerable objection to the bill. Let us for a moment examine it. The Government is the owner of untold millions of acres of wild, uncultivated land, much more than can be occupied for centuries to come, now lying waste. And so far from yielding anything to the Treasury while in this condition, it costs immense sums of money every year to protect the frontiers from Indian depredations, &c.

Now, admitting, for argument's sake, that it is right and proper for the Government, like a huge land speculator, to make what money she can from the sale of this land; still, I think, it would be easy to demonstrate that the Government would be the gainer by encouraging their settlement, by a gratuitous distribution in small quantities, to actual settlers, as this bill proposes to do. The price that the Government would expect to get for one hundred and sixty acres would be two hundred dollars, from which must be deducted the cost of collecting, &c. Now, sir, I will not undertake to say how long it would take a family occupying such a farm, by the consumption of articles paying duties, to repay this sum to the Government; but I presume it would be in less than ten years, to say nothing of the addition of wealth and power that every such settlement brings permanently to the Government.

Considering, then, that there is more than land enough for all, how can it be said that encouraging the settlement of foreigners among us tends in any way to the injury of our own people? I should like to hear from the Senators from the beautiful and vigorous young State of Iowa, whether the native-born in that State consider the immense emigration of foreigners there an evil to be deplored. It was not so in Ohio when that State was new. There, sir, we rejoiced at the arrival of every stranger among us, come from where he might, provided only that he brought with him a strong hand and an honest heart. And so it will be in all the vast wilderness now covering all the central portions of this continent. The native-born citizens will welcome the foreigner there, and bid him God speed, instead of thinking, with the honorable Senators, that he has been robbed by the strangers settling among them.

But again: it is made a serious argument against this amendment, that the idle, the vicious, and the vagabond, will avail themselves of the benefits of this bill, remove into the remote wilderness, and become tillers of the soil. And the Senators seem to mourn over the contemplated departure of this kind of population, like Rachel of old for her children. But the Senators may be consoled. The idle, the vicious, the pauper, and the vagabond, will still abide with the Senators. This kind go not into the wilderness. They will not leave their haunts in the great cities, make a journey to the far West to encounter the hardships and privations of a new country. If the vicious would indeed do so they would be reformed, and you would have no one for your jails or penitentiaries; but I fear there is no danger of such a catastrophe as the Senators apprehend. The idle and the vicious would be pretty well reformed by five years' probation like this; and should they honestly acquire a title to land under this bill, I should be quite willing to go their bail for good behavior afterwards.

I believe, Mr. President, that I have noticed all the objections urged by the honorable Senators from Kentucky and Mississippi against my amendment. And I hope I may be pardoned for the opinion, that these objections are founded more in a deep feeling of prejudice against foreigners generally, than upon any very profound principles of political economy. It has not been my purpose, at this time, to discuss the general policy of this great measure. But I will take this occasion to say, that while I consider the bill imperfect in many respects, I shall, nevertheless, vote for it with a hearty good will, whether my amendment shall prevail or not. Could my will prevail, I would extend its provisions to all who are able to cultivate the soil, without distinction or restriction on account of color, nation, or condition; but I would, as far as possible, make our national legislation on this subject, conform to the benevolence of God, who is no respecter of persons.

Mr. President, I believe the time has fully come when the public domain should cease to be considered a source of revenue; when a prudent regard for the condition of our people, and of our institutions in future time, should admonish us to withdraw the public lands from the grasp of speculators and monopolists. This must be done, or the next generation will witness nothing but the odious and anti-republican citizenship of landlord and tenant, existing in all the central portions of the Republic, as it now exists in Ireland. Rather than this, I would see the whole of our wild land sunk by an earthquake. And this, or some kindred measure, I regard as absolutely necessary to avert the threatened danger. I therefore sincerely hope that the bill may speedily become a law.

But, Mr. President, since the Senators from Kentucky and Mississippi so strenuously opposed my amendment, they have both, I believe, voted for the bill organizing the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, with a provision which admits unnaturalized foreigners to vote in the Territorial Legislature, on all questions, however important. After this, may I not hope that the honorable Senators will be as liberal in awarding to such foreigners, a pecuniary as well as a political equality with others. For surely it seems to me absurd to give them the same political rights, and, at the same time, withhold from them the like participation in the public domain.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President—

Mr. DIXON. Does the Senator intend to make a speech? I desire to present an amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. CHASE. The amendment will not be in order. The Senator, however, might present it and have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) Does the Senator desire to present an amendment to the amendment which is pending?

Mr. DIXON. I desire to make an amendment to the sixth section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will not now be in order; but it can be read for information.

The amendment was read. It is to strike out of the sixth section the word "individual" and insert "every white person," and at the end of the section add:

Provided, That the benefits of this act shall not extend to the children, heirs, or devisees of aliens, born out of the United States, and not entitled to citizenship.

Mr. DIXON. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator from Mississippi. I have desired the amendment to be read; and, at the proper time, I shall offer it.

Mr. BROWN said: Mr. President, a day or two since I laid upon your table a substitute for the bill now under consideration. It is my purpose, at this time, to offer some remarks on the general features of the bill, and to explain the provisions of that substitute. With the immediate question before the Senate—the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE]—I shall not deal at this moment. The substitute is not formally before the body, but I choose to introduce it into the discussion at this time, because at a later period of the debate I may have no favorable opportunity of doing so. It proposes essential changes in the original bill. Senators have had an opportunity of reading it; but as I want them to study it, I read it again. It is as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the laws now in force granting preemption to actual settlers on the public lands, shall continue until otherwise ordered by Congress, and that the same be extended to all the Territories of the United States.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, the rights of preceptors shall continue for ten years; that is to say, persons acquiring the right of preemption shall retain the same without disturbance, and without payment of any kind to the United States, for a period of ten years, but on these conditions: First. The preceptor shall not sell, alienate, or dispose of his or her right for a consideration; and if he or she voluntarily abandon one preemption and claim another, no right shall be acquired by such claim until the claimant shall first have testified, under oath, before the register of the land office when the claim is preferred, that he or she has voluntarily abandoned his or her original preemption, and that no consideration, reward, or payment of any kind, has been received, or is expected, directly or indirectly, as an inducement for such abandonment; and any person who shall testify falsely in such case shall be deemed guilty of perjury. Second. Any person claiming and holding the right of preemption to lands under this act, may be required by the State within which the same lies, to pay taxes thereon, in the same manner, and to the same extent, as if he or she owned the land in fee simple; and in case such lands are sold for taxes, the purchaser shall acquire the right of preemption only. Third. Absence of the preceptor and his family for six consecutive months shall be deemed an abandonment, and the land shall, in such case, revert to the United States, and be subject to the same disposition as other public lands.

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That no lands entered upon, and held under the provisions of this act, or the improvements thereon, shall ever be sold under any judgment or decree for any debt or other liability or penalty to the United States; nor shall any sale of the same for debt, other liability or penalty (other than taxes) under the authority of any State, or the courts thereof, entitle the purchaser to any right to disturb the possession of the preceptor by purchase from the Government; nor shall it be lawful to issue a patent for any such land to any such purchaser.

"Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the preceptor may at any time, at his or her discretion, enter the lands preempted by paying therefor, to the proper officer of the United States, the minimum price of said land.

"Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That in case of the preceptor's death, if a married man, his right shall survive to his widow and infant children, but the rights of the older children shall cease as they respectively come of age, or when they shall reach the age of twenty-one years. And in case of the death of both father and mother, leaving an infant child or children, the executor, administrator, or guardian, shall, upon submitting satisfactory proof of that fact to the register and receiver of the proper land office, be entitled to a patent for the lands so preempted for the benefit of said infant child or children, on the payment of ten cents per acre, and may thereafter sell said lands, or otherwise dispose of them for the benefit of the infant child or children aforesaid; and when the father and mother both die, leaving no infant child or children, the right of occupancy may be sold for the benefit of the estate.

"Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the minimum price of the public lands of the United States shall remain unchanged until the commencement of the fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1855; but after that period the price shall be reduced, in favor of actual settlers, according to the following scale: All lands which shall have been offered at public sale, and remaining unsold five years, shall be reduced to the price of one dollar per acre; all lands which shall have been offered at public sale, and remaining unsold ten years, shall be reduced to seventy-five cents an acre; and all lands which shall have been offered at public sale, and remaining unsold fifteen years, shall be sold at fifty cents an acre; and all lands which shall have been offered at public sale, and remaining unsold twenty years, shall thereafter be reduced to a price of twenty-five cents an acre.

"Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That no individual shall be permitted to enter more than one-half section under the provisions of this act; and that the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby required to prepare and issue such rules and regulations, consistent with this act, as shall be necessary and proper to carry its provisions into effect."

This, Mr. President, is the substitute which I propose for the homestead bill as it passed the House of Representatives, and as it stands before us to-day.

The homestead bill, as it passed the House, does not meet my entire approbation. My mind has never sanctioned the policy of giving away the public lands to individuals; and yet, paradoxical as it may seem, I have always been in favor of securing to every family a home on the public lands.

I doubt the policy of passing the homestead bill as it came from the House for another, and, to my mind, very sufficient reason. It seems to me impossible that the President can, with any show of consistency, fail to veto it, after what he has said on the bill for the benefit of the indigent insane. And, while I would not ask Senators to shape their course so as to meet the views of the Executive against their own convictions, I may be allowed to say that, if the object be to provide homes for the homeless, and that object can be as effectually accomplished without running the hazards of an Executive veto as with it, it is best to do so.

I will first discuss succinctly some points of objection to the bill from the House, and then briefly explain the provisions of the substitute proposed by myself—a substitute which, I think, will effect all the good purposes of the bill, avoid all its objectionable features, and effectually escape the constitutional arguments of the President. I am not disposed to embarrass the President; and if we can avoid his objections, and accomplish the results aimed at by the friends of the bill, obviously it is our duty to do so.

I am opposed to giving the public lands to individuals—

First, because they belong to all the people, and I do not think you ought to take from the whole to give to a part;

Second, because that which is obtained without price is too often parted from without consideration. "Come easy, go easy," is a maxim no less homely than true; and

Third, if you give the lands without price, they will not only be alienated without consideration, but will often fall into the hands of speculators and sharpers, and thus become conduits for conveying the products of honest toil into the pockets of the cunning and crafty.

I am in favor of securing to every family a home on the public lands—

First, because thousands of the houseless and homeless will thus be taken from the consuming, and placed in the producing classes; thereby relieving society from a heavy burden, and, at the same time, elevating the lowly and oppressed to a position of comparative dignity and independence;

Second, because it will relieve our cities and towns and densely populated rural districts of a population which is a burden and a tax, and convert that population into thrifty husbandmen;

Third, because it is better to employ productive industry on the public lands than to give them up to savages and wild beasts; and

Lastly, because, under proper regulations, the occupancy of these lands cannot fail to prove beneficial to the Treasury and to the people.

To my mind there is a wide difference between giving lands to the States and giving them to individuals. I do not mean that Congress has not the same power to give to the one as to the other, but that the policy is widely different. When lands are given to the States, they are used for some purpose of common benefit, as in making roads, constructing canals, draining swamps, endowing schools, or for some other purpose in which there is a general and common interest. But when they are given to individuals they become individual property, and the only interest which the public has or can acquire in the gift is that which it derives from the power of taxation. If you give lands to a State worth a thousand dollars, the people of the State are made a thousand dollars better off by the gift; but if you give the same lands to an individual, the people are only benefited to the amount of the taxes which the State may levy upon them. Therefore I say there is a wide difference between the policy of giving lands to the States and giving them to individuals.

The bill from the House of Representatives gives, or proposes to give, to every free white person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and is a citizen of the United States, the right to enter, free of cost, one hundred and sixty acres of land on any of the public domain subject to private entry. And this right to take the land free of cost is followed by a provision—that a patent shall issue upon the performance of a single condition, and that is, five years actual and continuous residence on the land.

Actual residence on the land being a main condition on which a patent shall issue, it is clear that not one in twenty of all the free white citizens of the United States can avail themselves of the benefits of this act. Those who own valuable lands cannot abandon them, and will not sell them to take the benefits of this act. It is manifest that, while this bill proposes to give to every one, it in fact gives to but very few. The bill is, therefore, liable to the first objection raised by me, to wit: that it takes from the whole and gives to a part.

As if in anticipation of my second objection, that property acquired without price is parted from without consideration, the bill undertakes (see section four) to protect the land against execution sales after the issuance of the patent therefor. To my mind it is clear that Congress cannot so far arrest the jurisdiction of a State within its own limits as to exempt from execution sale real property, to which a citizen of the State has an indisputable title. When the title passes, the land is, eo instanti, subject to the laws of the State, and the Federal Government loses its authority over it. This provision of the bill will, I doubt not, if we pass it, be declared by the courts inoperative and void. The lands will thus be exposed to execution sale, and the force of my second and third objections will at once be seen. Sharps and speculators will get possession of it.

When the Senator from Indiana [Mr. PETTIT] spoke confidently the other day of passing the bill without amendment, I interposed at once, protesting that I could never vote for it without amendments. Among other things, I had my mind on this section, which, in my judgment, contains a palpable infraction of the rights of the States.

Mr. PETTIT. Will the Senator allow me to explain for a moment?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIT. When I made my remarks on this bill, I started out by saying that to the details of the bill, I had given no attention, but that its principles commanded the approbation of my judgment. Now, let me say further, that up to yesterday I had never read the bill; and after having read the bill, I entirely concur with the Senator as to the section on which he is commenting; and I pointed out this morning to the Senator from Ohio, who now sits before me, [Mr. CHASE,] the fact that that section would necessarily be void if enacted, and that, to make the bill harmonious, it should be stricken out.

Mr. BROWN. I am glad to hear the Senator's explanation. It seemed to me at the time that his mind could not have rested on this section. Taking it for granted that this Government will never undertake to arrest within the limits of a State an execution emanating from a State court against the property of a citizen, and that this section will be stricken out, I pass from this branch of the subject.

I am for protecting the homes of all who become the beneficiaries of this act. If we fail in this, the grantees of the Government will become the mere tenants of cunning and crafty shopkeepers and speculators.

Giving homes to the poor is a very idle proceeding, unless you provide against the alienation of these homes. Give these lands in the way proposed, and then leave them to the uncertain chances of ever-varying fortune, and it will be found, at the end of six years, that large numbers of the landless of to-day will be landless again. It is no reproach to say, that thousands and tens of thousands of our fellow men have not the skill and business tact necessary to the management of their own affairs. We have no right to appoint guardians for such people; but we have the right, if we give them homes, to provide against these homes falling into the hands of crafty speculators.

For myself, I can say with truth, that while I shall not consent to give away the public lands to be used, in any contingency, for the payment of private debts, I am willing and anxious that every family of American citizens shall have a home—a home from which they cannot be separated by misfortune or debt, by force or fraud, or by any other agency than their own free will.

If it be the object of the friends of the homestead bill to secure homes to the homeless, and to secure these homes against disturbance of every kind; to awaken hopes that shall not die; to open a way to the full, free, unencumbered, and unrestrained exercise of the faculties, mental and physical, of every citizen, then the task is easy. You have only to adopt the substitute which I have proposed for this bill.

The great leading feature of that substitute is this: It allows every citizen of the United States to settle on the public lands, and to occupy them for a long series of years, without payment of any kind. But he is only an occupant, not the owner of the soil. The title remains in the Government until the settler, of his own free will, and at a very low price, pays for it, and receive it. The Government does not force the title upon him even as a gift. But it will take the pay, almost nominal, and confer the title when the settler is ready to receive it, and of his readiness to receive within a period of ten years, he is made the judge. The Government will not expel him from the land—will not coerce payment; and for ten years she will refuse to sell it to any one else. These are the guaranties. This is giving them a home indeed. It is more: it is stretching over him the parental and strong arm of the Government, giving him assurance that he is secure in his possession; that, in good or in evil fortune, he is safe in the possession of his home. The Government will not disturb him, and none other shall. It is needless to say that a man thus circumstanced may exercise the faculties which God has given him free of all restraint. If he possess either mental or physical energies, they will be left to expand and grow, and work out the great purposes of their creation. But if he is homeless and homeless, poor and in debt, friendless and destitute, the strength of Sampson and the wisdom of Solomon, will hardly save him from actual want.

I dare not predict the blessings that will flow from the passage of a bill like this. It will lift up the lowly and oppressed. It will unseal the lips of thousands rendered mute by misfortune. Husbands and fathers, long injured to hardship, and penury, and toil, will hail its passage as the dawning of a brighter and a better day. Wives and mothers will bless its passage, and little children will hush its praise.

The substitute embodies all that is good in the original bill. It secures homes to the homeless. It does more than the original bill—it protects these homes against the waste, the improvidence, the misfortunes, the thriftlessness of their occupants; and all this it does without divesting the Government title to one shilling's worth of property. It allows American citizens to make their homes where red men now follow the chase, and wild beasts make their lairs.

The first section of the substitute simply proposes to continue in force the preemption laws as they now exist, and to extend these laws to all the Territories of the United States. The second section removes the present limitation imposed by these laws, and extends the rights acquired under them to ten years. That is to say, (I use the very words of the substitute:)

"Persons acquiring the right of preemption, shall retain the same without disturbance, and without payment of any kind to the United States for a period of ten years, but on these conditions: First. The preemptor shall not sell, alienate, or dispose of his or her right for a consideration; and if he or she voluntarily abandon one preemption and claim another, no right shall be acquired by such claim until the claimant shall first have testified, under oath, before the register of the land office, when the claim is preferred, that he or she has voluntarily abandoned his or her original preemption, and that no consideration, reward, or payment of any kind, has been received, or is expected, directly or indirectly, as an inducement for such abandonment; and any person who shall testify falsely in such case shall be deemed guilty of perjury. Second. Any person claiming and holding the right of preemption to lands under this act, may be required by the State, within which the same lies, to pay taxes thereon, in the same manner and to the same extent as if he or she owned the said land in fee-simple; and in case such lands are sold for taxes, the purchaser shall acquire the right of preemption only. Third. Absence of the preemptor and his family for six consecutive months, shall be deemed an abandonment, and the land shall, in such case, revert to the United States, and be subject to the same disposition as other public lands."

The advantages gained by this proposition over the original bill are these: The bill adopts a new policy; the substitute continues and enlarges an old policy; the bill prescribes the terms on which the lands may be entered, and the persons who shall enter them; the substitute leaves the terms as they now are, and allows the same persons to enter who may do so now. If the bill is passed, all its provisions will have to undergo construction and adjudication; if the substitute is passed, its main provision will already have undergone both construction and adjudication. Pass the bill, and you may squander an hundred millions of acres of land and do no good; pass the substitute, and you give homes to thousands and tens of thousands of your people, without the loss of an acre of your public domain. Pass the bill, and the land is gone forever; pass the substitute, and the title is still in you. It is easy to advance an occupant to a tenancy in fee, but you can never reduce a tenant in fee to the condition of an occupant.

But let me proceed with the details of the substitute.

The third section protects the lands and the improvements thereon from sale of every kind, with this single exception, that the inchoate title may be sold for taxes by the State in which the lands lie. The section reads:

"And be it further enacted, That no lands entered upon and held under the provisions of this act, or the improvements thereon, shall ever be sold under any judgment or decree for any debt or other liability or penalty to the United States; nor shall any sale of the same for debt, other liability or penalty (other than for taxes) under the authority of any State, or the courts thereof, entitle the purchaser to any right to disturb the possession of the preemptor by purchase from the Government, nor shall it be lawful to issue a patent for any such land to any such purchaser."

It can hardly be necessary to say that so long as the title is in the Government, the land would not be subject to sale, even though this section were stricken out. But to satisfy the reasonable demands of the State for its taxes, it is provided that the interest of the occupant may be sold for the taxes. The purchaser, of course, will get the right which the occupant had before him, and nothing more; that is, he will get the right to occupy the land, and enjoy the benefit of the improvements, whatever they may be. The improvements will always be worth more than the taxes, and the presumption is that the occupants will protect them by a prompt payment of the taxes.

The fourth section is in these words:

"And be it further enacted, That the preemptor may at any time, at his or her discretion, enter the lands preempted by paying therefor to the proper officer of the United States the minimum price of said lands."

It will be seen that I have fixed the price, not at $1 25, but at the minimum, whatever that may be. By the last section of the substitute, this minimum cannot exceed seventy five cents per acre, and may, and often will, not exceed twenty-five cents. But of this more presently.

The substitute makes payment for the lands a privilege and not a duty. It is suggested that this is a privilege of which very few will avail themselves. There could be no greater mistake. In nine cases out of ten the occupant will buy the land, if for no other reason that he may feel the noble independence of a land-owner. And if not for this, then for that other reason, that having bought the land he may sell it if he chooses.

Suppose a man to be settled on one hundred and sixty acres of land worth at Government price, $1 25 per acre, (that is the highest possible price,) and that by his labor he has made it worth five or ten dollars per acre, and suppose that man to have the sole privilege of buying the land at $1 25 per acre, what do you think he will do? Will he leave the latter in the Government? Certainly not. And why? Because, by paying $200 he can make himself the owner in fee-simple of property worth from $800 to $1,600. So long as the title remains in the Government, he has nothing that he can fairly call his own. By paying $200 he becomes the owner in fee of a handsome little estate. This will be a powerful stimulus, and thousands will buy under its influence, simply that they may own the property. And then if we take into account that the property may be bought at $200, and sold for five or ten-times that sum, we need no other argument to show that it will be bought.

If the labor of the settler does not improve the value of the land, then it is pretty clear that it was worth nothing in the beginning, and that Government has lost nothing by having it occupied.

These are some of the advantages, briefly stated, which, in my judgment, this system will bring to the Government.

The advantages which will result to the settler are these, (I speak of the substitute, not of the bill:) If he makes an unfortunate location, he may change it, and this he may do as often as he chooses. The original bill gives him but one chance. If he makes a bad location, he must abide by it. Those who have been in at the settling of new countries, know how liable newcomers always are to be deceived, not only as to the quality of the soil, but as to all the advantages resulting from a proper location. It cannot injure Government lands for a citizen to live on them, nor can they be damaged by his going off them. But the citizen may find, and often does find, a great advantage in being allowed to change from one location to another. If he leaves the land better than he found it, why shall he not be allowed to leave it? And if his living on another place only increases its value, why not permit him to live there? It will be seen that if a settler moves, he must do it as a voluntary act, and that under no circumstances can he receive, directly or indirectly, any consideration, payment, or reward of any kind, for doing so. By this it is meant simply to confine the settler to his original location, unless, in his unbiased judgment, it is better for him voluntarily to abandon it and take another.

The fifth section of the substitute provides for the disposition of the occupant's rights when he dies, without having divested the Government title. The section reads thus:

"And be it further enacted, That in case of the preceptor's death, if a married man, his right shall survive to his widow and infant children; but the rights of the older children shall cease as they respectively come of age, or when they shall reach the age of twenty-one years. And in case of the death of both father and mother, leaving an infant child or children, the executor, administrator, or guardian, shall, upon submitting satisfactory proof of that fact to the register and receiver of the proper land office, be entitled to a patent for the land so preempted for the benefit of said infant child or children, on the payment of ten cents per acre, and may thereafter sell said lands, or otherwise dispose of them, for the benefit of the infant child or children aforesaid. And when the father and mother both die, leaving no infant children, then the right of occupancy may be sold for the benefit of the estate."

It may be asked why any charge is made for lands claimed by orphan children as the only heritage from their deceased fathers and mothers. I answer that the President has indicated to us that, in his judgment, we have no right to give away the public lands. We must, he thinks, have a consideration. Clearly we have a right to reduce the price of the lands, for we have reduced them time and time again, and no living man ever questioned our authority to do so. We have the right to reduce in favor of particular classes, as States, railroads, and actual settlers. This is not questioned. And if we may do this, surely we may reduce in favor of orphan children. Yielding to the views of the President, I have inserted this provision to meet his objections, and at the same time serve the interests of the poor and neglected orphans of destitute and forgotten parents. The section before us continues the right of a deceased husband and father to the widow and infant children, and for this reason, that the adult children, as they come of age, will each for himself acquire the same right that the father had before him, and can take land for himself. And as the care of the infant children will necessarily devolve on the mother, it is but simple justice that the homestead should be secured to her and her infant children.

In providing that the fee shall pass to the infant children, on the payment of a nominal sum, when the father and mother both die, I have had this in view: that infant children cannot occupy the land, and if it is not given to them at a nominal price, the labor of their parents may be entirely lost. It will often happen that they will have no means of buying, and when they have, guardians may think it best not thus to apply those means. The quantity of land that will be disposed of under this clause will be comparatively trifling, and I know of no object to which it may be applied with a greater certainty of its doing good.

It will be seen that, in all cases where the father and mother both die leaving no infant children, it is provided that the right of occupancy may be sold for the benefit of the estate. The object in doing this was twofold; first, to get clear of the idea of keeping the land in the same family; and secondly, to secure to the heirs or creditors of deceased persons the benefits resulting from the labor of such persons.

The sixth and last section establishes the system of graduation in favor of actual settlers. The scale is not such as I would have fixed if my own judgment had alone been consulted. The Senator from Virginia (Mr. HUNTER) has brought in a graduation bill, and the scale adopted by me is taken from that bill. It is as follows:

"Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the minimum price of the public lands of the United States shall remain unchanged until the commencement of the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1855; but after that period the price shall be reduced, in favor of actual settlers, according to the following scale: All lands which shall have been offered at public sale, and remaining unsold five years, shall be reduced to the price of one dollar per acre; all lands which shall have been offered at public sale, and remaining unsold ten years, shall be reduced to seventy-five cents an acre; and all lands which shall have been offered at public sale, and remaining unsold fifteen years, shall be sold at fifty cents an acre; and all lands which shall have been offered at public sale, and remaining unsold twenty years, shall thereafter be reduced to a price of twenty-five cents an acre."

I would have commenced at a lower figure than one dollar, and descended below twenty-five cents. It will be seen that the ten years' residence which the substitute allows, must in any case bring the lands down to seventy-five cents per acre; and if they have been offered for sale ten years before the settler goes upon them, then these ten years' residence, in addition, must of necessity, according to this scale, bring them down to twenty-five cents per acre.

It was my purpose to have discussed this provision at greater length; but I am growing weary, and the Senate may be impatient. I dismiss the point with the single remark that a man who has ten years to pay for one hundred and sixty acres of land, at from twenty-five cents to seventy-five cents per acre, and fails to do it, is of no account, and it is not worth while to help him, or try to help him.

Having briefly explained the provisions of the proposed substitute, I proceed to answer such objections as have been urged against it.

First, it is said this proposition will get up a system of tenantry, and thus become exceedingly prejudicial to the country. It will get up no such system in the first place, and in the second place, if it did, no injury could result from it. The occupants of the land pay no rent, and cannot be deprived of the right of occupancy by the Government, or any other power. He is not a tenant, in the technical sense of that term, who pays no rent, and is not subject to be removed by his landlord. No one expects the settlers to pay rent; and if they enter the lands under the sanction of law they cannot be removed, even by a repeal of the law, and much less can they be removed while the law remains in force.

But if these people are tenants, whose tenants are they? Not the tenants, certainly, of the President, or of Congress, or of any person, or body of persons, in power or out of power. But they are the tenants of the Government.

The objections to a system of tenantry, as I understand them, are chiefly these: first, that landlords may exact exorbitant rents, and thus oppress their tenants. This objection is answered by the simple statement, that in the case before us no rents at all are to be demanded. The second objection is, that the owners of the soil may acquire an influence over the minds of their tenants inconsistent with the full and faithful discharge of their tenants' duties to their country. To this I reply, that the country being the owner of the soil, the greater influence it acquires over the minds of its tenants, the more faithful will be the discharge of their duties. So that the argument, instead of being against the bill, is in its favor. I have not seen the force of either of these objections.

It is next said that it will keep the lands out of the market. This objection applies with less force to the substitute than to any other homestead proposition. When you retain the title in the Government, it is certain that you will sell the lands by-and-by. But if you give the lands away, of course you lose all chance of ever selling them. I have already given it as my opinion that you will sell more lands to actual settlers under this than under the old system. It is but an opinion, and can only be demonstrated by actual experiment. It is certain, however, that the proposed system will encourage settlements, and experience has demonstrated that wherever you induce settlements you find ready sale for lands. The one hundred and sixty acres secured by preemption will only serve the poorer classes. Men of larger means will want more land, and it will constantly happen that the preceptor will buy the lands adjoining him; and as his wealth increases, he will secure his improvements by another purchase. The first settlers, the frontier men, will be ready to buy at the minimum price when they can sell to new comers of larger means at from three to five, or ten dollars an acre.

The substitute does all for the settler that the friends of the homestead ought to desire. It places a home in the reach of every man who deserves it. It does more than the original bill; it not only provides a home, but it secures the possession of it against contingencies of every kind except voluntary abandonment; and even then it allows the man to take another home somewhere else.

The substitute meets the arguments of those who object to giving away the lands. It gives nothing but the right of occupancy. All that the settlers get is the right to live upon and improve the land; and all that the Government loses is the doubtful chance of selling to some one else sooner than to the settlers. For this loss surely the Government is amply recompensed by the productions of the soil, and the increased value of the lands consequent on their improvement. These add to the national wealth, and enhance our greatness as a people. The lands in a state of nature are, in fact, worth nothing. It is the labor of the settler that gives them value. Suppose a settlement to be made on a quarter section of land which the Government could sell for $200, what does the Government lose? Not the $200, for she does not give the land. She loses at most but the interest on the $200 from the time at which the land could have been sold without a tenant on them, to the time when it actually is sold with a tenant on them. This can be but a trifle. For this loss she gets a producer where she had a consumer. She gets lands worth $200 increased in value to $1,000, and she gives a happy home to a man who was homeless.

If we are in want of a practical illustration of the effects produced by a system like this, I would point to the State of Georgia; and here let me invoke the attention of the Senator from that State, [Mr. Dawson,] who apostrophized with so much eloquence, the other day, against what he was pleased to term the profligacy of giving the lands, to actual settlers. Georgia gave away her lands, or sold them at a very low figure. The consequences are seen in her multiplied population, the improvement of her soil, the construction of her railroads, the revival of her commerce, and in the general and wonderful development of all her resources. Will any one say that in all this Georgia is not compensated tenfold for the cheap or gratuitous distribution of her lands? Will any one pretend that the prosperity of Georgia is not a part of the prosperity of the whole country. As each State is interested in the prosperity of the States united, so are the States united interested in the prosperity of each of the States separately.

Georgia gave lands to her people, and she made her people stationary, and prosperous, and happy. She has her ample reward in this, that she is not only the most populous, but, in every sense, the most thrifty of the southern States. What Georgia has become under this system, all the land States will become under a like system. I appeal from that narrow and contracted sentiment which looks only to the interest of a State or section to the broad national sentiment which looks to the success of the whole country—to that sentiment which sees success to Virginia in the success of Mississippi; and a triumph to Massachusetts in the triumph of Wisconsin; to that sentiment which sees a triumph to the whole Union in the triumph of any one of its parts. To this comprehensive spirit I appeal for relief from the incubus of Government lands in the new States. Let the lands be cultivated. The cultivators will build railroads, create commerce, encourage manufactures, sustain the mechanic arts, and add to the general prosperity of the whole country. Restrain their cultivation, and your highest eulogium will be, that you have been more the friends of savages and wild beasts than of civilized men.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I wish to put one question to the Senator from Mississippi. In the original bill, for which the Senator has offered a substitute, the fourth section provides that "all lands acquired under the provisions of this act shall in no event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts contracted prior to the issuing of the patent thereof." I understand the Senator from Mississippi to object to that section upon the ground of its conflicting with State-rights. Now, I understand the third section of the Senator's substitute to provide, in effect, for the same exemption. The close of that third section provides that "no sale of the same," referring to the lands, "for debt, other liability or penalty, (other than for taxes,) under the authority of any State, or the courts thereof, shall entitle the purchaser to any right to disturb the possession of the preëemptor by purchase from the Government; nor shall it be lawful to issue a patent for any such land to any such purchaser."

Mr. BROWN. That means, of course, during his occupancy, as a mere occupant, and not when he has a perfect title.

Mr. BENJAMIN. But the section speaks of the "preëemptor by purchase from the Government."

Mr. BROWN. He ceases to be a preëemptor as soon as he gets a title. The section only protects him while he is a preëemptor. When he gets a title he ceases to be so, and is proprietor of the land, and, of course, he is no longer under the protection of that section.

Mr. DAWSON. Is the question now upon the substitute of my friend from Mississippi?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE.]

Mr. DAWSON. So I thought.

Mr. BROWN. Allow me to say to my friend from Georgia that I introduced the substitute for discussion at this time, so as to have it fairly before the Senate.

Mr. DAWSON. I understood the Senator very well; but I wished to call the attention of the Senate to the point upon which we were about to vote.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. President, I am not willing that the vote shall be taken on the pending amendment until I shall have had an opportunity of putting myself right in regard to it. I will not detain the Senate long. My first impression was in favor of striking out the sixth section, as proposed by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. CLAYTON.] I do not exactly reconcile it to my feeling, or to my Americanism, if you please to allow that expression, that a foreigner shall come here a week before the passage of this law, if it shall pass, and occupy the same position in regard to the public property as an American citizen. I have that difficulty on my mind; and upon that impression I was inclined to act at first, and to vote with the Senator from Delaware, in favor of striking out. My mind has, however, after thorough investigation, undergone some change on that subject, and I will ask the indulgence of the Senate while I give my reasons for that change.

I find, on examination, that this has been the policy of the Government from the first introduction of the system of granting homesteads; in 1850, the bill granting homesteads in Oregon was in the identical words of this bill. Other laws for the same purpose have been passed since, containing the same provisions. This bill does not propose to give lands to all foreigners that are here, or that may come here—but to such as are here now, and have taken the necessary steps to become citizens of the United States. The lands are not to be granted until they have become American citizens, and have resided on and cultivated the same for five years. If a foreigner will go into the wilderness, encounter the privations of frontier life, settle on one hundred and sixty acres of land for five years, I think he is entitled to the land—having paid a full equivalent for it, and will be a much better and safer citizen than if kept in idleness about your large cities.

Mr. President, if I wanted the protection of an excuse for voting for this measure, obnoxious as it is to many of my warmest personal and political friends, I might find it in the unanimous expression of the Legislature of my State in favor of a homestead bill. It is true, I have not received those instructions officially; yet I have seen them in the newspapers of the country. But, sir, I do not choose to protect myself by those instructions. However strong they may be, however much entitled to consideration they would be with me, they do not necessarily control my vote on this subject; for I announced myself in favor of the principles of this bill before the action of the Legislature took place.

If I may be pardoned by my friends for saying so—and I beg they will pardon me—I am in favor of the principle of this bill. I am in favor of it on considerations of policy, propriety, and justice. I should have voted for it in the absence of any expression of opinion by the Legislature of my State. Never, sir, since I have occupied a seat upon this floor, have I seen any measure assailed as this has been. I believe it was Bertram who said to Imogene, "None have ever loved as we have loved; none ever loved so madly." The opponents of this bill may say to themselves, "None have ever hated as we have hated; none ever hated so madly." They have fought this bill as Christian and Infidel fought in the days of the Crusaders. They have outraged every principle of civilized warfare. They have gone into the most ultra-guerrilla warfare that I ever witnessed in civilized society. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. CLAYTON] commenced his attack from the chaparral on this side, and fired into the bill. The Senator from Pennsylvania, on the other side, [Mr. BRODHEAD] from another chaparral, fired into it, and there has been a cross-fire from the different chaparrals from the beginning to the end of this whole controversy.

Sir, have they attacked the great principle of the bill? I think not. They urge objections. In the first place, the Senator from Pennsylvania, with a boldness almost Napoleonic—for I believe he would rather differ from a majority than concur with them—attacks the bill mainly upon the ground of its caption, and for more than fifteen minutes he enlightened the Senate upon the obnoxious character and inappropriateness of the caption or title of the bill. If that honorable Senator, for whom I have very great respect and great personal kindness, and for whose nerve and boldness I have a high admiration, felt a great objection to the name of the bill, in all conscience why does he not propose to change it? "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet." Give us the substance, and he may rebaptize it to suit his own fancy.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to ask the honorable Senator from Tennessee one question. What is the great principle of this bill? I confess I am not able to discover it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Before I am done, I shall undertake to enlighten the learned and distinguished Senator as to what is the principle of this bill, "as I understand it." The Senator from Pennsylvania, as I have said, attacked the bill on its caption. Then came the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. CLAY], with his keen sword, or rather stiletto, and he attacked the phraseology of the bill. He asked his friends "What do you mean by the word 'now'?" Is it present, or prospective, or what is it? Does it apply to the time being, when we are discussing it, to the time when the bill was presented, or to the passage of the bill, or to what time does it refer? If that honorable Senator objects to the phraseology of the bill, why does he not propose to amend it? He makes no proposition to amend it.

Then came the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] with his mighty artillery—for it is mighty—and what did he say? He indulged in a thousand denunciations of vagabonds and others, which I think are the mere creations of his fancy; and that certainly is one of the most exuberant that I have ever met with. He objects to the dialect of the bill; he does not like the word "issuance." He thinks it is not an American word. If that word does not suit that distinguished and learned Senator, why does he not give us a better? What sort of warfare is this, when learned, distinguished, and venerable Senators here—three of them—attack the bill in this way? One of them attacked the name of the bill, the other attacked the word "now," and the third says the word "issuance" is not to be found in the dictionary of the country.

Mr. CLAY. In order to relieve myself, I will tell the Senator that I had an amendment prepared in writing, which I intended to offer at the proper period, fixing a precise time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am very much indebted to my friend from Alabama; I am glad that he means to do something with the bill; but I am speaking of the record as it is. I am speaking of the attacks which have been made on this measure. Here, I say, are three distinguished Senators in the Congress of the United States, making speeches upon isolated words, when they do not come up to the point of attack on the merits of the bill; if the words are obnoxious, offer amendments to make them more acceptable. I should be content with that course; but I do not like the guerrilla mode of warfare which has been carried on. It is evidently the purpose of the opponents of this measure to destroy it by this indirect mode of attack. I should gladly cooperate with them in rendering the bill more perfect, if after that I had any hope of securing their aid in its final passage; but I indulge no such delusive hope; their object is to weaken it by amendments, and thus secure its defeat. I cannot lend myself to their purposes.

The Senator from South Carolina, as I have said, gave us his criticism upon the dialect of this bill. Then came the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. CLAYTON], and he attacked it in the main front. It seems that the center of attack has been assigned to that distinguished Senator, and he finds fault with the sixth section. What is that sixth section, about which, I confess, there is some difficulty in my mind? It is that foreigners, who are not naturalized citizens, shall be permitted to enjoy an equal participation with citizens, in the benefits of this bill. I admit there is something substantial in this objection; but, at the same time, I wish to know of that honorable Senator whether he will vote for the bill if his amendment be made? If we strike out that section, will the honorable Senator vote with us? Not at all. But, sir, the wisdom, the experience, the profound tact, and, if I be not considered disrespectful, I may say that exceeding shrewdness and astuteness for which that Senator is distinguished, taught him that the way to destroy a measure is not to come up and attack the principle in it, if there be one, but to strike at it in detail, to cut off one point here and another there, and in the end to weaken and enfeeble the measure so that nobody can sustain it, and it cannot sustain itself.

Well, sir, after that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. PRATT] attacked the bill at another point. What is his objection? One of his objections is, that if an alien settles upon the lands, and dies before he perfects his title, his children will get the land under the bill. Now, sir, if that is not so, it ought to be so; and if the bill does not mean that, I am in favor of amending it to make it mean that. When a man goes and encounters all the hardships, troubles, annoyances, and difficulties incident to an early settlement in a new country, and dies six weeks or six months before he perfects his title, will the Senator say that his children ought not to enjoy the inheritance of their father? I do not concur in the views of that Senator. The settlement and cultivation of the wild lands of the country is a benefit to the whole country. If you invite its settlement, and the occupant dies before he has perfected his title, in the name of justice and humanity, will you deny to his children the benefits of the father's labor? The country will have gotten the benefits of the settlement and improvement of the lands, and will you deny everything to the children? I hope not.

But, Mr. President, another attack is made upon this bill, and it comes from my friend from Georgia, [Mr. Dawson.] I dislike exceedingly to come in collision with him upon any subject, not only on account of my great respect for him as a statesman, a politician, and a gentleman, but because of a nearer and dearer relation. But I confess to you, sir, that his assault was one of the most remarkable that I ever witnessed in the American Senate. What is his objection to the bill? He says, in the first place, it is unequal and unjust. How? It gives land to every American citizen, and to every foreigner who has declared on oath that he intends to become an American citizen. It makes no discrimination. My friend can avail himself of the benefit of the law, if he chooses. I can avail myself of it. Every Senator can avail himself of it. But still, it is said, it is unequal and unjust, because there are some who cannot avail themselves of it. Is that an objection to the law? If it be, the same objection would apply to any and every law that you can pass. Human wisdom cannot devise any law which will be, in all its benefits, perfectly equal and uniform to all the members of this great Republic. My friend illustrated his view: "Ah," said he, "there is a widow in my country." Mr. President, that my friend is sensitive on that subject is not at all remarkable to me. I am not astonished that he is particularly sensitive of the rights of widows. He has a right to be sensitive on that subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. BADGER. Bound to be so. [Laughter.] Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Yes, sir; bound to be so by the laws of gravity. [Laughter.] But, sir, he has a remarkable widow in his country, who, he says, has six daughters; and he fears she cannot go on the public lands and avail herself of this bounty, as he calls it. He is mistaken in that. I know that if that widow has six good looking daughters, and has not money enough to go to the Territories, my friend would advance her the money; and if he could do no better, he would take one of the daughters.

^A SENATOR. Or the widow.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. But I wish to show that he is doing the widow a manifest injustice in this view. I say that if he will permit that widow to go into the Territories with her daughters, who he says are all full age, she will have one hundred and sixty acres of land, and each of her daughters will have one hundred and sixty acres. If my friend will not advance the money to send them to Kansas or Nebraska, some benevolent emigration society will doubtless come to the rescue. Now, will you not benefit the condition of that widow by giving her one hundred and sixty acres of land, and giving each of her daughters one hundred and sixty acres?

Mr. DIXON. The daughters are not "heads of families."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. But they are twenty-one years of age, and therefore, under the bill, entitled to its provisions. My friend from Georgia said further that he was opposed to this bill because it interfered with a great principle, and that is a principle outside of this bill, and I wish to call the attention of my friend from Delaware [Mr. Bayard] to it. What principle is it that he says it conflicts with? It is a new principle in political economy—the principle of reproduction. If I believed, sir, the passage of this bill would interfere with that great principle, I would vote against it; and I am sure my honorable colleague, [Mr. Bell,] if he were here, would concur with me in the opinion that we never could be tolerated a single moment at home if we interfered with that great principle of reproduction. I do not apprehend, however, that it has anything to do with the bill; and my friend need give himself no fears on that subject.

But, sir, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Bayard] asked me what principle was in this bill? I will tell him what I conceive to be the principle contained in the bill which attracts my admiration and support. The Government of the United States, or the people of the United States, are the holders of seventeen hundred millions of acres of land. That it is the true policy of this Government to reduce those lands, as fast as possible, to cultivation, will, I suppose, be admitted by the Senator; but then he may object that that is a good principle, if we had the power. Well, sir, I maintain we have the power to do that; and I mean to cite no higher authority than the honorable Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. Badger,] who made one of the ablest speeches which it was ever my fortune to listen to in the Senate, on this subject. He demonstrated conclusively and unmistakably, that the Government of the United States had full, undisputed, and unlimited power and control over the whole public domain. Then, when we are the landholders of seventeen hundred millions of acres of land, and have full power to dispose of them just as we please, and when we please, and to whom we please, I ask if it is not wisdom, and patriotism, and good policy, to give them to those who are not the owners of land, who have no means to possess themselves of land, and thereby enhance the prosperity of the common country? If there is no principle in that, then I cannot see what a principle or a policy is, give it any name, I care not what it is.

But, sir, this measure was attacked as though it were a new one. My friends have said to me, are you going for this bill? I say, I am. They speak as though it were a new bill; when, if I choose to place myself behind a mass of documents, if I choose to call great men to my support in vindication of this great principle or policy, or whatever you may please to call it, I need only refer to the resolution read a day or two ago by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] which was offered by that man who is conceded now by all, by his friends and enemies, by those who concurred with him, or by those who differed from him generally, now that he is dead, to have been one of the most profound statesmen that ever honored the age in which he lived. Mr. Webster's resolution laid down the very principle of this bill. Then, when you ask me for a name, I give the name of that great and illustrious American statesman. I might go further back than that, and I might get other illustrious names to vindicate the policy that I am advocating, but I forbear. But, Mr. President, there is one point to which I invite attention. Is this the first time that this measure has been before us? I think not. In 1850, a proposition was introduced into the Congress of the United States to grant a homestead to every settler who would go to the Territory of Oregon. How much did it give? If he was a single man, it gave him three hundred and twenty acres of land. If he was a married man, with a family, it gave him six hundred and forty acres in perpetuity; and then only upon the condition that he should reside upon it for four years. Where were those gentlemen who inveigh with such fury against this bill now, when, in 1850, a law was put upon the statute-book, giving to every single man three hundred and twenty acres, and to every family six hundred and forty acres of public land, provided they settled on it for four years? Why did you not attack that principle then? Why did you not assail it then? Why did you put it upon the statute-book, and let the people enjoy it from 1850 down to now, and when we came to make it general, raise your hands and say, oh, what an outrage? But this is not all. That bill did not restrict its benefits to American citizens. It extended them to aliens who had filed a declaration of intention, or who might file one within the next two years; and yet these gentlemen stood by and saw that become the law of the land without opening their lips.

The provisions of that bill are identical with those contained in this bill, except it gave as much as six hundred and forty acres, this but one hundred and sixty; that requires but four years occupancy, this five. So you perceive that act of 1850 is much more liberal to the settler than the one now proposed.

But, gentlemen, you are in a worse category than that. I hold in my hand a bill which passed the Senate of the United States not two weeks ago, and what is it? To grant a homestead to every American citizen in the Territory of New Mexico, of one hundred and sixty acres of land—not only to every American citizen, but to every white male citizen of the United States, or every white male above the age of twenty-one years, who has declared his intention to become a citizen, or who shall have removed, or shall remove—mark the words!—into that Territory, and settle upon it for four years. Where was the Senator from Delaware then?

Mr. GEYER. That act was temporary in its character; it only exists till 1858.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Yes, sir, it is temporary in its character. Where were you then? Did you hear of it? You were an American Senator then.

Mr. CLAYTON. I never heard of it. I do not believe there was one Senator out of twenty who ever heard of it. It is not on our files.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I cannot help that. There was not a dissenting voice to it. The records show that it came from the House, and passed through three readings in the Senate without a single objection being made to it—not a dissenting voice was there to it. Here is the principle of this bill in one which was passed not two weeks ago. Were those gentlemen on the floor, and yet was there not a single syllable of objection or denunciation hurled against it? The Government adopted it years ago, you followed it up, and you are particeps criminis in this very principle, because you did not oppose it heretofore. You cannot escape from this. If gentlemen did not know of it, it is no fault of mine. I will have the Journal read in regard to the point. I have been to the record.

Mr. CLAYTON. It is not on our files.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Gentlemen are mistaken.

Mr. GEYER. When did you discover it?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I find it on the records of the Senate.

Mr. CLAYTON. Did the honorable Senator know of it at the time the bill passed?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think I did; for it was before the committee, and I approved of it.

Mr. CLAYTON. Was there a word said about it when it was passed?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I cannot tell. I hope the Senator will not hold me responsible for it, if he did not know it. It is not my fault. I cannot help that; but I am going to the record. The bill came from the House of Representatives, was read twice, and referred, and on the 19th of June it was reported back. It was then read a third time, and the question was, shall it pass? and it passed without a dissenting voice, through all the forms necessary for the passage of a bill.

Mr. SEWARD. When was it passed?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It was reported on the 19th of June, and the Secretary can tell when it was passed. I hope he will read the Journal.

The Secretary read as follows from the Journal:

"SATURDAY, July 1.—Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill of the House of Representatives (No. 315) to establish the office of surveyor general of New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

"The Senate proceeded to consider said bill, as in Committee of the Whole, and no amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate.

"Ordered, That it pass to a third reading.

"Said bill was read a third time.

"Resolved, That it pass.

"Ordered, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives thereof."

Mr. DAWSON. That is the same day on which it was reported.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Of course it was. It passed the same day on which it was reported.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator allow me to make a distinction, which is a very palpable one? It is, that there is a great difference between giving a homestead in a Territory, and a homestead in the States; and I could justify my vote for that bill on the ground of the distinction which I draw. We know that the Federal Government supports the governments of the Territories until they become States. They are a tax on the Federal Treasury; hence it is the policy of the Government to populate the Territories as rapidly as possible, and relieve itself of the burden by the removal of the territorial government. Such is not the case with a State.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The distinction drawn by my friend from Alabama may suit his views, but the principle is laid down here that Congress has the right, has the power to grant homesteads. That principle has been recognized and acted upon by Congress within the last two weeks.

Mr. CASS. Will the Senator from Tennessee pardon me a moment for making this suggestion? The power to dispose of the public lands knows no State or Territory. Every law in regard to the lands which is applicable to the States in which the lands lie is applicable to the Territories in which they lie in the same way. The position of the lands does not touch the power.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am indebted for that suggestion of the Senator. I should have made it myself. There can be no difference as to the question of power; and that does not excuse the honorable Senator, because one of the most astute Senators here, who objects to the bill, sits side by side with my friend from Alabama; and he is utterly opposed to allowing this principle in the Territories, but desires to confine it to the States. There they sit side by side. The Senator from Alabama says that the distinction is very great; that I might apply it to the Territories, but yet ought not to apply it to the States. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. ADAMS] has an amendment to offer, confining it to the States and excepting the Territories. The general power, if it exists at all, exists over the public lands, whether in the States or in the Territories; for the jurisdiction of the Federal Government is the same over the lands in the States as over the lands in the Territories.

But, sir, I confess I know that the difficulty in the minds of some of my friends is, that they do not like this proposition because they prefer a general distribution among the States; for they say it is more equal and just. Very well, sir, I concur with them. If I could get a distribution of the public lands among all the States according to their Federal representation and population, I should vote for it with pleasure over this or any other proposition; but it must be obvious to you, sir, and to every other Senator, that the thing is wholly impracticable; and if the Congress of the United States were disposed to pass that measure, which they are not, still we are assured and know, if we can trust anything that the Executive has said, that it would not receive his sanction. Then if we cannot get that policy which commends itself most to our admiration and judgment, shall we reject that which approaches nearest to it? I think not; and that is enough to control my action.

As to the policy and justice of this measure, Mr. President, I have a few words to say, and then I shall have done. I think gentlemen have drawn very largely upon their imagination, and have stated most ultra cases of injustice in this matter. The Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER,] with that peculiar tact and pungency of his, which is keener than any stiletto that I have ever seen, holds up the enormity of this bill by saying, why, sir, if it passes, the men who deserted from your Army—the men who deserted on the field of Churubusco, and warred upon their own friends, may come and avail themselves of its benefits. I submit to the Senator if it is a fair mode of warfare against a measure of this character, to state a possibility and make that possibility a ground of objection to the passage of the measure? While he states that possibility, how many thousands and tens of thousands of good, just, virtuous, honorable men, can be found in the United States, who, by misfortune or improvidence, if you please, or from some other cause, have not the means of subsistence, or the ground on which to stand and claim as their own; how many hundreds of honest, but poor, men are to be found within the limits of the State of that honorable Senator, who have not the means of purchasing a homestead, but who are honorable, and patriotic, and devoted to the best interests of the country? They would get the benefits of this bill; but because some scoundrel may come in and avail himself of it, the Senator will not give it to them. I am not willing to deny the benefits that this law proposes to confer on its beneficiaries because some unworthy individual may avail himself of it. The thousands and tens of thousands of our own hardy, poor, but honest countrymen, are to be denied the privilege of occupying and owning a homestead, for fear that some scoundrel or refugee may avail himself of its benefits. You punish your own thousands for fear it may be enjoyed by a few not worthy of its benefits.

Sensors, when assailing the measure, ask, are you going to give away the public lands? If you want me to answer categorically, and it will afford an additional argument, I answer, I am willing to give them away. I voted to give away ten millions of acres the other day. They say that was a different matter. I am willing to give them to any purpose that looks to the advancement of the interests of the country or to the benefit of society, whether it be to the indigent insane, or the landless poor, or to any American citizen who will go and settle upon and cultivate them. That is my principle. It is no gift; it is no donation. The Government receives a valuable consideration for it. You give them to the soldier who fought the battles of the country, and a more just, humane, beneficent law never was conceived; but it is no more just, humane, or beneficent than this. You say the consideration for giving to the soldier was his having fought the battles of the country. I admit it; but the man who goes and encounters the hardships of a frontier settlement to open up the avenues of civilization, does as much for the country as the one who fights your battles. I have never been a pioneer, but I have seen something of the life of one, and, in my judgment, the man who is willing to brave the terrors of the wilderness is as much a soldier as he who bears the musket, and is as much entitled to the protection of the Government as the man who fights the battles of the country.

With these views, I shall give the measure my support. I leave other gentlemen to take their own course; but at the same time, while they are making war upon it, I want them to come up and deny the power to pass it. Show me that we have not the power to do it, and I will abandon it. If we have the power, does it do injustice to anybody? Because you do not choose to go there, will you deny the privilege to me? If you have a few broad acres on one side, and do not choose to go to the wilderness and take one hundred and sixty acres, and if, by misfortune, I am not able to stay where I am, in the name of justice let me go and settle upon, and cultivate, public lands, and bring wealth to the country by increasing its general prosperity.

Mr. CLAYTON. It seems that the chief object of the honorable Senator from Tennessee, in addressing the Senate, was to produce, by way of authority against the Senate itself, an act which passed this session, in which a clause is contained granting for a limited period, (four years only,) the right to all persons, whether citizens or not, to enter one hundred and sixty acres of the public lands in New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska. Now, sir, the effect of the precedent which the honorable Senator has cited, is not felt to be quite so crushing as he seemed to hope. It has really no bearing upon the question in this case. It has no authority, even if the Senate had acted with full consideration of it at the time, because it was but a grant for four years to settlers in the wilds of an unexplored region; but the fact is, that it was, as the Clerk at the table states, reported on one day, read by its title, and passed by the Senate without any debate or consideration.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think the Senator is mistaken. June 19, 1854, it was read twice and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CLAYTON. Of course it was read, but it was only read by its title; it does not appear to have ever been read otherwise than by its title.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the honorable Senator permit me to state something in reference to this matter. The bill to which he is referring, and which seems to have come with some surprise upon the honorable Senator, is precisely conformable to other bills. A similar one was reported for Oregon.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am aware of that, and I was not at all surprised. There is nothing in it of any consequence to the question before us.

Mr. SHIELDS. So in regard to California.

Mr. GWIN. Not California; we never got that. We tried to get it; but could not, because we happened to be a State.

Mr. SHIELDS. At all events it passed this body, for I reported the bill; and at that time, I will state to the honorable Senator, no question arose as to the power of Congress to make these grants to the Territories. This is the same with other bills.

Mr. CLAYTON. As to the question of power that is not now the question I have proposed for discussion; but, in regard to this bill, does any man believe that if the Senate of the United States had been apprised that there was a provision in it granting temporarily, to all aliens, the right to go into the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas—

Mr. ATCHISON, (Mr. WALKER in the chair.) It does not give the right to aliens in Kansas and Nebraska. It confines it to New Mexico.
